SOME OF THE GREATEST ENGLISH MUSICIANS HAVE TESTIFIED TO THE MERITS OF THE
"CHALLEN" PIANOS

C. HARFORD LLOYD, Mus. Doc., Precentor of Eton College, says:

"For some years past I have had your Pianos in constant use, both in my own house and in the school music rooms.—As regards Touch, Tone, and Durability, they have given me complete satisfaction."

SIR GEORGE C. MARTIN, Mus. Doc., Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, says:

"My experience with Messrs. CHALLEN & SON'S Pianos has been so eminently satisfactory that I can recommend them with pleasure and confidence."

SIR JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc., Professor of Music, Oxford University, says:

"Messrs. CHALLEN & SON'S Pianofortes are characterised by remarkable purity of tone and the highest class of workmanship, and at the same time are very moderate in price."

CHALLEN & SON, 46, Oxford Street, London, W.

MISS NELLIE WILLIS
(SOPRANO).

Sheffield Albert Hall Concerts.—"Miss Willis gave the first solo in a very dainty manner, and received an encore for the second; and in the miscellaneous part received another well-deserved encore for the 'Masquerade.'"—Sheffield Independent.

Address, for terms, &c.—
Adwick-le-Street, Doncaster.

MISS MAGGIE JAQUES
(SOPRANO).

"Saul."—Leicester New Musical Society.—"Miss Maggie Jaques proved herself a most refined and accomplished vocalist. She achieved her first great success in the air, 'See, with what a scornful air,' in which her treatment of the declamatory passages was really brilliant. In the duet she showed the same power of expression and dramatic fire," &c.—Leicester Daily Post, Nov. 19, 1898.

"Miss Jaques is a gifted artist, and contributed in a great degree to the success of the performance. Her singing was characterised by general vocal excellence of a high order."—Leicester Wyvern, Nov. 19, 1898.

"St. Peter."—Pudsey Choral Union.—"As for the soprano, Miss Maggie Jaques, there is little but praise to bestow. The bravura air, 'The Lord hath His way,' is by no means easy to sing, and that Miss Jaques did so well is proof positive of her general ability and powers of vocalisation. With a voice of pure and telling quality, and a simplicity of style that becomes her well, Miss Jaques should go far in her profession."—Leeds Mercury, Nov. 29, 1898.

"Miss Jaques, who sang most ably, had a chance of vocal distinction in the showy bravura solo, 'The Lord hath His way,' of which she fully availed herself, calling forth great applause by her plucky attack of the high B natural at the close."—Yorkshire Post, Nov. 29, 1898.

"St. Paul."—Birmingham Midland Musical Society.—"Miss Maggie Jaques sang the soprano solos with a freedom of style and finish most pleasant to listen to. Her voice is equal to the heavy demands of oratorio, and she sings with great expression, purity of phrasing, and a distinction of manner all her own."—Birmingham Daily Gazette, Oct. 31, 1898.

Max Bruch's "Fair Ellen."—Chester Musical Society.—"Miss Maggie Jaques, who possesses a delightfully clear and sweet soprano voice, did full justice to her share of the task."—Chester Chronicle, Dec. 10, 1898.

"Miss Jaques has a charmingly pure voice, and sings exceedingly correctly."—Cheshire Observer, Dec. 10, 1898.

"Naaman."—Brierley Hill Choral Society.—"Miss Maggie Jaques has won a name as an oratorio singer, and her rendition was excellent. It is difficult to say in which solo she was best, so finished was the rendering of each. In 'They shall be turned back,' every word was sung with true artistic feeling, and the final trill was very beautiful."—County Express, Dec. 17, 1898.

"Acis and Galatea."—Ludlow Choral Society.—"Miss Maggie Jaques sang the solos with true feeling and exquisite taste, and her singing throughout was of a uniformly high-class character."—Ludlow Advertiser, Dec. 17, 1898.

"Messiah."—Mirfield Choral Society.—"Miss Jaques is an artiste of exceptional ability, and she sang throughout with much taste and fervour. Especially was she successful in 'Rejoice greatly' and 'I know that my Redeemer liveth.'"—Dewsbury News, Dec. 10, 1898.

"Judas."—Morley Choral Society.—"Miss Maggie Jaques sings very well, and sustained the soprano part with bright tone and well considered effect, this being particularly the case in 'Pious orgies' and 'From mighty kings,' which latter had every justice done to its by no means slight executive demands."—Leeds Mercury, Dec. 8, 1898.

"Miss Maggie Jaques was in splendid voice, and sang her solos in a very pleasing manner, 'From mighty kings' being, perhaps, her best effort."—Yorkshire Post, Dec. 8, 1898.

Ballads.—Peterboro'.—"Miss Maggie Jaques quickly installed herself a great favourite, and her songs aroused the heartiest applause and fully demonstrated the flexibility, sweetness, and volume of her voice, and the audience would be satisfied with nothing less than encores on each occasion."—Peterboro' Standard, Oct. 22, 1898.

Address—
14, SPRING GARDENS, BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

DEWSBURY CHORAL SOCIETY ("ST. PAUL"), Nov. 16, 1898.

"Mr. Brearley sang the tenor solos most ably, making the most of his good voice without forcing his effects, as so many tenors do, yet giving sufficient expression to the declamatory solo (St. Stephen's speech)."—Yorkshire Post.

"Mr. Brearley proved to be in good voice, and infused much vigour and dramatic feeling into St. Stephen's appeal, 'Men, brethren, and fathers,' whilst he was not wanting in suavity of style where such was called for."—Leeds Mercury.

For terms and vacant dates, address, 32, Ella Street, Leeds.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE),
Soloist, Leeds Musical Festival, 1898; of the North of England and Scotch Concerts; Principal, Leeds Parish Church, &c.

Production of Elgar's "Caractacus" (Leeds Festival, Oct. 5, 1898).—"As the Arch-Druid Mr. John Browning, whose voice was of admirable quality, sang with a correctness, excellence of method, and dramatic instinct which made him an entirely worthy associate of Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Black, with whom he shared largely and most effectively in the trio already alluded to."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"Joan of Arc."—"Mr. John Browning's splendid baritone voice was heard to great advantage in the patriotic song 'Who would not fight for freedom,' his bold and vigorous rendering of which simply delighted the audience."—Dublin Daily Nation, November 29, 1898.

"Mr. John Browning possesses a baritone voice of exquisite timbre. His singing throughout was marked by skill, judgment, and artistic taste, and his enunciation was simply perfect. Especially striking was his rendering of the patriotic song 'Who would not fight for freedom.'"—Armagh Guardian, December 2, 1898.

Helensburgh Subscription Concerts (with the Willy Hess Quartet).—"Four great songs, admirably sung by Mr. Browning, completed the programme—Mozart's 'Qui Sdegno,' Handel's 'Gia Risuonar,' Schubert's 'Erl-King,' and Mendelssohn's 'I'm a roamer.'"—Glasgow Evening News, December 3, 1898.

"Mr. John Browning contributed 'Qui Sdegno' and 'Gia Risuonar,' and subsequently, in response to repeated calls after a dramatic rendering of Schubert's 'Erl-King,' added 'In sheltered vale.'"—Glasgow Citizen, December 3, 1898.

"Samson."—"Mr. John Browning broke the spell with a fine rendering of 'Thy glorious deeds,' and gave a very fine version of 'Honour and Arms,' the merit of which was very warmly recognised"—Bradford Observer, December 6, 1898.

"The most popular singer of the evening was undoubtedly Mr. John Browning. He possesses an exceptionally fine voice, ample tone, and a perfect method of production."—York Herald, December 14, 1898.

"Mr. John Browning delighted everybody with his refinement, his fervour, and his beautiful baritone voice, and it is certain that he may rely on a warm welcome again to Whitby."—Whitby Gazette, December 16, 1898.

"St. Paul."—"The honours of the evening were carried off by Mr. John Browning, who was in excellent voice, and whose singing throughout was that of a thoroughly trained and competent artist. In the supplicating air, 'O God, have mercy,' Mr. Browning infused great depth and feeling, and at the end was rewarded with a furore of applause."—Pudsey and Stanningley News, December 9, 1898.

"Judas."—"A favourable reception was also accorded to Mr. John Browning, who scored a great success in 'The Lord worketh wonders.'"—Yorkshire Post, December 8, 1898.

"The baritone, Mr. John Browning, sang vigorously, and with just emphasis in all he had to do, giving an admirable rendering of 'The Lord worketh wonders,' through the 'divisions' of which uncommon flexibility of voice was revealed."—Leeds Mercury, December 8, 1898

"Messiah."—"But the favourite of the evening was Mr John Browning, who was very cordially received. Those who heard him for the first time last night did not wonder at the reputation he has achieved of late in Burnley. His is a very taking style, and not only that, but whenever he sings there is an exhibition of really fine vocal ability. Last night he was in splendid voice, and gave 'Why do the nations' brilliantly, the audience insisting on an encore."—Burnley Express, December 14, 1898.

Oratorios, Concerts, &c., address, Marlbro' Grove, Leeds.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL ("Caractacus"), Oct. 5, 1898.

"Mr. Charles Knowles sang with great declamatory fervour and good vocal quality."—Manchester Guardian, Oct. 6, 1898.

"While as Claudius, the Roman Emperor, Mr. Charles Knowles revealed an exceptionally resonant and powerful voice and good art of delivery."—Scotsman, Oct. 6, 1898.

"Mr. Charles Knowles, the Leeds baritone, was completely successful as Claudius and A Bard. He has an excellent voice and sings like an artist."—Birmingham Daily Post, Oct. 6, 1898.

"Towards the end Mr. Knowles was singularly good, and will probably make a name for himself."—Birmingham Gazette, Oct. 6, 1898.

"Mr. Charles Knowles doubled the parts of the Bard and Claudius with distinction."—London Morning Post, Oct. 6, 1898.

"A special word must be said for the excellent work done by Mr. Charles Knowles, a baritone who has a fine voice and an exceptionally just idea of musical declamation."—Musical Standard, Oct. 8, 1898.

BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY ("Faust"), Oct. 13.—"With Mr. Charles Knowles, who took the part of Brander, the case is different. He is a new man, but one who will undoubtedly rise very shortly into the highest rank. He possesses every qualification, and in Mr. Elgar's 'Caractacus,' produced last week at Leeds, created a most favourable impression."—Birmingham Gazette, Oct. 14, 1898.

Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society.—"Mr. Knowles's recital of the prologue from 'Pagliacci' was an excellent specimen of musical elocution. The duet of 'Fairy Wand' was very finely sung by Madame Burgess and Mr. Knowles."—Yorkshire Post, Oct. 19, 1898.

Hereford Choral Society.—Barnett's "Ancient Mariner."—"Mr. Charles Knowles has a bass voice of which he may well be proud, and the passages allotted to him were faithfully interpreted. He was exceptionally powerful at times, infusing much vigour and effect, and this was especially noticeable in the aria, 'Swiftly, swiftly flew the ship.' He also contributed 'O happy living things' with rare taste and power. . . . Mr. Knowles followed with the song 'Droop not, young lover,' which was also a magnificent effort, and received the encore 'Bid me to live.'"—Hereford Times, Nov. 19, 1898.

"Mr. Charles Knowles, a Yorkshire singer, is well-known to Herefordians as a Festival singer. His fine voice and well-considered dramatic interpretation were greatly enjoyed, and he may rest assured of a hearty welcome whenever he appears on a Hereford platform in future. . . . The aria 'Swiftly, swiftly flew the ship,' was his most appreciated number. . . . The quartet, 'Around, around flew each sweet sound,' was one of the most melodious gems of the whole performance, and was faultlessly sung. . . . Mr. Knowles was encored for Handel's delightful song 'Droop not, young lover,' to which he gave the best possible effect, singing, in response to a recall, 'Bid me to live.'"—Hereford Journal, Nov. 19, 1898.

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

"The excellence of his methods has been abundantly proved."—The Times.

RECENT TESTIMONY.

"I play old pieces infinitely better (without practice) than I used to when working at them."—G. P., London.

"I have done no finger studies of any sort since your instructions came, yet I can play ever so much better."—E., Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.

"Difficulties which were once almost insurmountable now seem to fall to pieces as I play. The keyboard, which once seemed hard and unyielding, has now become like velvet to my fingers."—D. PARKES, Plymouth.

"Was afraid to play a piece in public. Now I have no fear at all. I play no technical exercises."—H., Mus. Bac.

"To me it has been a veritable godsend."—C. S. PARSONSON, Mus. Bac.

"You were quite right in assuming that I was in the habit of playing with a limp arm. I have derived wonderful benefit from your hint on this point."—K., Belfast.

"I had decided to send this piece (Czerny's Toccata) with test passages marked, but on playing it to-day I find the difficulties have almost vanished."—C., L.R.A.M.

"My technique has improved wonderfully—nay, almost incredibly. . . . I never feel the need of them (technical exercises) now; during the last few months I have done nothing of the sort."—C. T. R. SCOTT, Brussels.

"For lightness of touch I would not take off my hat to anybody. A lady said to me the other day that I must have practised a great deal to procure such a touch, and when I told her I did not practise at all at the keyboard, she looked dumbfounded."—W., F.R.C.O.

"I have found the system of the greatest possible use in teaching the piano, more particularly in the case of adult pupils, to many of whom music is now a delight instead of a toil as formerly. To teachers whose time is so fully occupied that they have no time for practice, Macdonald Smith's system is worth ten times the modest fee which he charges for lessons."—CHAS. G. BRYAN, Southport.

OF

STAINER & BARRETT'S DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS

REVISED AND EDITED BY
SIR J. STAINER,
M.A., Mus.D., Oxford; Hon. D.C.L. and Mus. Doc., Durham.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
JANUARY 1, 1899.

EDWARD LLOYD.

In presenting the following Biographical Sketch of our greatest tenor, we have to acknowledge the kindness with which Mr. Edward Lloyd has supplied the necessary material for placing on record the incidents of his distinguished career. During the past thirty years the name of Edward Lloyd has frequently appeared in the columns of The Musical Times. Who, then, is more worthy to form the subject of the first leading article at the opening of another year than one who may with distinct appropriateness be designated the "leading article" amongst English singers!

Edward Lloyd was born at Kennington, in the South of London, March 7, 1845, and was duly baptized at St. Mark's Church in that parish. His forbears on his mother's side were decidedly musical. His maternal grandfather was Edward Hopkins, not the distinguished honorary organist of the Temple Church, but that gentleman's uncle. The exact relationship between the veteran Dr. E. J. Hopkins and Mr. Edward Lloyd is therefore that of a first cousin once removed. The Hopkins family originally came from Ireland, and music runs in their blood. Edward Hopkins, Edward Lloyd's grandfather, was trained at the Duke of York's school. As a clarinet player he was, in his day, unrivalled. He held a musical appointment in the household of George IV.; moreover, he was bandmaster of the Scots Fusilier Guards (now the Scots Guards) for a period of thirty-nine years. His distinguished grandson records: "My grandfather was six feet two in height, broad in proportion—a fine old gentleman—courtly, robust, and active almost to the last; he went to bed every night at ten and lived to be eighty-one. He was a man of strong character and will, kindly, but, at the same time, a martinet of the military type. He had a black servant named 'Black John,' who also played the cymbals in the band." Edward Hopkins, who died in 1860, possessed in a marked degree that persistent perseverance, zeal for hard work and strict devotion to duty which so eminently characterise his grandson. He was conductor at Vauxhall Gardens, and on one occasion, when his regiment was stationed at Windsor, he walked the entire distance from London to the Royal borough—twenty miles—during the hours of the night, in order that he might be at his post for his military duties in the morning.

PARENTAGE.

Edward Hopkins had seventeen children. One of his sons, Edward, became organist of Armagh Cathedral, and another, John Larkin, organist of Rochester Cathedral and subsequently organist of Trinity College, Cambridge, and to the University. One of his daughters, Sophia, married William Hann, and has been spared to see her sons occupy positions of distinction and esteem in the profession of music. Another daughter, Louisa, married Richard Lloyd, and their son, Edward, is the subject of this biographical sketch. As a girl, Louisa Hopkins showed marked ability for music. On December 22, 1834, when she was only seventeen years of age, she was elected one of the first King's Scholars at the Royal Academy of Music, Brinley Richards being also elected at the same time. Miss Hopkins was a pianoforte pupil at the Academy of Mrs. Anderson, music mistress to the Queen. Richard Lloyd, who married Louisa Hopkins, was the son of a London solicitor. He had a fine tenor voice and was a vicar choral of Westminster Abbey. An easy-going, generous-hearted man, such an one as everybody loves, spoils, and invariably imposes upon, he had no enemies except himself. A Freemason, a great diner-out, fond of the convivial society characteristic of his time, his life was brought to a premature close at the age of forty. "Perhaps," says his son, Edward, "it is because I knew how fatal may be social success and social petting that I have always steadily avoided social entertainments, and that I have been content to divide my time between the public and my own home and family." Richard Lloyd would sign a bill with that alacrity so eminently characteristic of Mr. Micawber. "Never put your name to a bill, Teddy," was the solemn admonition of Mrs. Lloyd to her son. He has steadily followed that injunction, though his name has often appeared (but printed large) on a bill of another kind, and always with acceptance.

When Edward Lloyd was only five years old his father died. "Of my mother," he says, "how can I speak as I would wish? She was the bravest, the best, and the most self-sacrificing of women. Had it not been for her I don't know where we should have been. Six of us were left orphans, and we were totally unprovided for. My mother's industry and self-sacrifice gave us our education, though we owed much to our grandparents and to our Aunt Sophia, Mrs. Hann." After her husband's death, Mrs. Richard Lloyd, through the influence of the Royal Academy of Music, obtained the appointment of one of the chief teachers of the pianoforte at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham. This post she retained for fourteen years, and a memorial window to her in the Great Hall of the college testifies to the esteem in which she was held. She had been taught singing by Costa, and possessed an excellent method which was not without its influence upon the future career of her distinguished son. Thus, both the parents of Edward Lloyd were singers.

A WESTMINSTER CHORISTER.

"There is nothing like a Cathedral training for a singer in oratorio," emphatically states Mr. Lloyd. He speaks from experience. He began his musical career at the age of seven, when, through the kind influence of the late James Turle, he became a chorister of Westminster Abbey, where both his uncles (as boys) and his father as a tenor had been members of the choir of that musically-historic fane. Teddy Lloyd was the tiniest of little choir-boys, clad in the tiniest of surplices. The lessons, in common with his fellow choristers, which he received from James Turle have proved to be invaluable to him. In fact, with the exception of some hints received from his mother, those are the only singing lessons our great English tenor has received. He has thus mercifully escaped the snares of the voice trainer, who is very often a voice strainer. Turle assembled the boys for practice every morning at nine o'clock. He was very particular as to the opening of the mouth, and insisted upon an absolutely distinct enunciation of every word; in fact, this all-important essential of the vocalist's art—faultless articulation, in which, alas! the majority of singers are so lamentably deficient—was well instilled into Lloyd in his earliest years. The general education of the boys in those days was of the most perfunctory character. They were supposed to have three hours' schooling every day. The schoolmaster—who also discharged the function of verger on Sunday and had charge of a large library—habitually used a "crib," an indispensable adjunct to his duties and with which the boys themselves were not altogether unacquainted. As a boy, Lloyd had not a particularly remarkable voice, but he was very reliable in second soprano parts. He received a salary of £13 per annum as one of the four senior choristers, and subsequently became head boy. This modest stipend was considerably augmented by the fees—a guinea, sometimes two guineas—he received for singing at city dinners, anything but a desirable occupation for boys of tender years who ought to have been in bed. Dean Trench very properly put a stop to the practice, and Cathedral dignitaries now more fully realize their responsibilities in such matters affecting the education and moral environment of the boys entrusted to their care. At the meetings of the Madrigal Society, Lloyd would sing with Johnnie Stainer, then senior boy at St. Paul's. Their reward consisted of a glass of port, a buttered biscuit, and two shillings each, the money being usually spent before home was reached. He met Arthur Sullivan and Alfred Cellier, both Chapel Royal boys, at cricket. Cellier was an enthusiastic cricketer, and although he more than once bowled Lloyd, the Westminster boys—being good at catches and runs—invariably won.

Two events of the Westminster Abbey period were of special interest. Edward Lloyd sang at the marriage of the Princess Royal, now the Empress Frederick of Germany, at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, January 25, 1858. In the following year he formed one of the chorus at the first actual Handel Festival, Crystal Palace, in 1859, singing alto. He still has the medal (given to each singer), round the rim of which is engraved "E. Lloyd, performer." For rendering this service he was paid three or four guineas; the amount he has received for singing as a soloist at some of the subsequent Festivals has very probably exceeded that modest fee of 1859. In looking through the list of chorus-singers of that Handel Festival of forty years ago, it is interesting to find, in addition to "Mast. Lloyd," the following names amongst the boy altos: Masters A. Cellier, H. F. Frost and H. Keeton (two Windsor boys), and J. F. (Fountain) Meen.

A WELL-BEHAVED BOY.

At the age of fifteen Lloyd left the choir of Westminster Abbey. He then went to the Grey's School in Southwark, where he remained a year, to compensate in some measure for his lack of education during his Abbey choristership. He subsequently joined his mother at Cheltenham when she taught him the pianoforte, but he did not make much progress. His uncle, Mr. Hann, gave him some instruction in the violin, but it was quite evident that the boy was not destined to become a second Paganini. He returned to London and lived with his aunt, Mrs. Hann. His future life-work was still unsettled, but it was his desire and ambition to become a vocalist. He sang in Henry Leslie's choir and also in the choir of St. Peter's Church, Belsize Park, Hampstead, where he received a salary of thirty pounds per annum. The Rev. Dr. F. W. Tremlett, then, as now, the vicar of the church, recalls the young singer in the following letter to the present writer, dated The Parsonage, Belsize Park, November 28, 1898:—

> I am sorry to say that I cannot help you much, as I have no other record than a 77 years old memory, and you may guess what that is like.
> This, however, I remember well—viz.: that Lloyd was with us for, I believe, 2 years as a leading treble (not tenor), and that he impressed us very much by his gentleness and modesty—instead of the usual conceit, which seems inherent in the character of such lads, there was a total absence of anything approaching to it. He was remarkably quiet and well behaved. His singing was most excellent. He came to us after his Westminster Abbey training.

And here it may be remarked that Edward Lloyd's voice never "broke" like most boys'. It simply deepened in pitch as he grew older. He says: "I never took a lesson from a teacher, unless it was from Mr. Turle and from my people at home; and yet I was always taking lessons from myself, so to speak, for I never ceased to attend to the training of my voice from my seventh year. I was always humming, always singing, always 'picking-up' from personal observation."

CAMBRIDGE.

A holiday visit to London of his mother and his uncle, Dr. John Larkin Hopkins, organist of Trinity College, Cambridge, had an important bearing upon his future career. Dr. Hopkins had never heard his nephew sing. Mrs. Lloyd remarked to her brother: "I wish, John, that you would hear Ted's voice." He consented, and "Ted" sang Claribel's "You and I." At the first words of the song—

'Tis years since we parted, you and I,
In the sweet summer time long ago.

a look of intense pleasure came over his uncle's face, and when the song was finished Dr. Hopkins said to his nephew: "My dear boy, with such a voice as that you ought to make your fortune." He was not very far wrong.

As there happened to be a vacancy in his choir at Trinity College, Dr. Hopkins suggested that "Ted" should go back with him to Cambridge and take the duty as a sort of deputy pro tem. But before the appointment was permanently made, the Dons insisted upon a competition, which duly took place in December, 1866. The tests were (1) to read a portion of "Purcell in B flat" (without accompaniment), (2) to sing in an anthem selected by the organist, and (3) a solo chosen by the candidate—the last-named was Mendelssohn's "If with all your hearts." Mr. Lloyd recalls the incident in the following words: "How well I remember the morning of the trial. It was fixed for ten o'clock. As I was too excited to sleep, I got up at four o'clock, and told my landlady to have a thick steak ready for me at eight, and then I went for a long walk. I shall never forget that four hours' tramp. I knew that there were seven or eight other competitors and I felt fearfully anxious, as I always do now when I have to fulfil any engagement. But by the time I reached my lodgings and settled down to my breakfast I had determined to win." This "determination" trait in a man's character takes him a long way upon the road to success. Lloyd obtained the joint-appointments—of lay-clerk at Trinity and King's—and thought himself in the seventh heaven and passing rich on £120 a year.

A SIDE-LIGHT: CANON HERVEY.

At that time there was a very musical undergraduate at Trinity, F. A. J. Hervey by name, now the Rev. Canon Hervey, Rector of Sandringham and Chaplain to the Queen. Canon Hervey has very kindly supplied us with the following interesting sidelight on those Cambridge days.

> I shall never forget my delight and admiration when I first heard Edward Lloyd sing. Strange to say, Mr. Lloyd was not immediately appreciated at his full merits by the authorities at Trinity. He was not at first a properly appointed lay-clerk, but was temporarily filling the vacancy caused by Mr. Kerr Gedge's departure to London, until a permanent appointment should be made. One evening I was at a party in a Don's rooms, and most of—nearly all—the other guests were Dons. Imagine my astonishment and dismay when they began to talk disparagingly of our new Tenor! They said that he would never do, and that some steps must immediately be taken to secure the services of a more competent singer: and they even cast kindly reflections on poor Dr. J. L. Hopkins for his nepotism in bringing forward so incapable a man! I had the audacity to combat their views, and to express my own opinion that in Mr. Lloyd the College were the fortunate finders of a real treasure, and I strongly advised them to keep him.
> At the competition Dr. J. L. Hopkins, who had been engaged in a private confabulation with a group of Dons, came up and said, "The Fellows would like to hear Mr. —— and Mr. —— sing again." Then turning to Mr. Lloyd he (Dr. Hopkins) added in a lower voice, "You are elected all right." I shook hands with Lloyd and congratulated him, and as I did so I chuckled as I recollected what had passed at the Don's party not so long before. It is an amusing reminiscence that when Lloyd, through my having spoken to Barnby about him, left Cambridge, the very Dons with whom I had the passage of arms about his singing now turned upon me and reproached me for depriving the College of its best tenor. And up to quite recent times I have been greeted on my periodical visits to Trinity with "Well, Hervey, have you come to take away our best tenor?"

He, however, remained at Cambridge only six months after the appointments were settled. The circumstance attending his removal to London was related to the present writer by the late Sir Joseph Barnby in the following words:

LONDON: ST. ANDREW'S, WELLS STREET.

"I'll tell you how I found Lloyd," said Barnby. "Mr. Hervey, now of Sandringham, then an undergraduate at Cambridge, used frequently to come to St. Andrew's.* He had often urged me to visit him at Cambridge. At last I went, and at a time when we were needing a tenor for St. Andrew's. As we were walking in the College court, Hervey said to me: 'Do you see that man going along there? That is Lloyd, our tenor, of whom I have spoken to you. He is going to sing at King's this afternoon.' I went to King's, and afterwards telegraphed to my vicar, the late Mr. Webb: 'Lloyd very good; shall I engage him?' His reply was: 'Use your own discretion.' My visit to Hervey at Cambridge resulted in Lloyd's coming to London. He was engaged to sing at St. Andrew's for three months on trial. Before the period of probation had expired, my vicar said to me: 'I don't think so very much of your friend Mr. Lloyd. Do you think we should keep him after the three months are up?'"

Barnby did not share his vicar's opinion, and Edward Lloyd remained a member of the famous choir of St. Andrew's. Those who attended the services of that celebrated musical church will remember how beautifully the "leading tenor" sang the Watchman scene from the "Hymn of Praise" and other solos to Barnby's organ accompaniment. On January 25, 1869, Mr. Lloyd was appointed a "Probationary Gentleman" of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, and, exactly a year later, he was made a "full gentleman," at which time he resigned his appointment.† With the aid of various cabs on Sundays, he was able to fulfil both his church engagements, and at that time, with two daily services at St. Andrew's, he says: "I did work enough to kill forty tenors."

GLOUCESTER, 1871: FIRST SUCCESS.

His concert engagements multiplied so rapidly that his church work had to be given up. He knew his worth. A hitherto unrecorded incident of that time is to the effect that a well known concert-giver, on hearing that Mr. Lloyd asked a fee of five guineas for singing in an oratorio performance, said to his secretary: "Lloyd want five guineas? Write to—— (mentioning a tenor of established reputation) and ask him to come." His first great success came at the Gloucester Musical Festival of 1871, when he at once made his mark, in Bach's St. Matthew Passion, as a tenor of high rank. Some of the wise musical critics shook their heads at the idea of engaging a young unknown singer for such an important work, and gave vent to their feelings in print before they had even heard the young man! And here it may be remarked that Mr. Lloyd has steadily set his face against log-rolling of all kinds. He owes nothing to inflated newspaper paragraphs. As a matter of fact, in his case the public have led the critics in estimating his worth, instead of the critics leading the public.

SOME WESLEY STORIES.

Dr. S. S. Wesley was the conductor of that memorable Gloucester Festival, about whom Mr. Lloyd can tell several stories. One day Lloyd and Santley were walking near the cathedral when they observed Wesley in a fixed attitude—eyes gazing upwards to the cathedral towers and finger on lip. The two singers went up to the absorbed organist, when, still with finger on lip, he said: "I am going to write an opera" (pause). "And with fairies in it too!" At a festival rehearsal of the Overture to "Zampa," Wesley continued to beat time after the overture was finished. One of the violinists went up to the conductor and said: "We've done, Dr. Wesley, we've done." "Impossible," replied Wesley, "I've got twelve more bars!" A Wesley fishing story is told in the following words:

> Wesley was once out with his rod and line fishing in a piece of water, when a keeper approached him and told him it was private. "Oh, is it?" he said. "My name's Wesley!" "I don't care," said the keeper, "what your name is, you can't fish here without an order!" "All right," said Wesley, "you take in my name to your master and I'll follow you." The keeper consented; his employer expressed his regret at the occurrence, and said he would be charmed if the doctor remained to lunch, and they sat down together. After lunch the host turned to the doctor and said he would be very delighted if he would be good enough to try the organ. A very fine instrument was in the hall, and the doctor, nothing loth, sat down and played for half-an-hour. The music over, Wesley returned to his fishing, fished to sundown, and then went home. The next day the owner of the organ and the lake was surprised to receive a letter from Wesley asking for ten guineas for his services for playing the organ. Wesley was even more surprised when he had in reply a letter as follows:—"My charge for a day's fishing is twenty guineas, so if you will kindly forward ten guineas, that will make us quits!"

In the same year as the Gloucester Festival Mr. Lloyd made his only appearance on the stage. This event took place at the residence of the late Mr. Henry Littleton, in Belsize Park, on July 7, 1871. The occasion was a private performance of Mendelssohn's operetta "Son and Stranger." Mr. Lloyd took the part of Hermann; the cast also included Miss Sabilla Novello as Ursula, and the late Sir Joseph Barnby and Mr. Willem Coenen presided at the pianoforte. Mr. Lloyd has often been asked to sing in opera, but he has always refused, in deference to the wish of his wife—to whom he was married at St. Mark's, Kennington, August 4, 1868—that he should not appear on the stage in public. He has never regretted that decision, although Carl Rosa made him a tempting offer to sing in "Tannhäuser."

* St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, London, where the late Sir Joseph Barnby was organist and choirmaster from 1863 to 1871. He was succeeded by Mr. F. A. W. Docker, the present organist.

† We are indebted to the kindness of the Rev. Edgar Sheppard, sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, for this information.

The next great event in Mr. Lloyd's career was his first appearance (as a soloist) at the Handel Festival of 1874. He was the junior of the five tenors there engaged, and he sang only one solo during the whole of the Festival. That solo was "Love in her eyes sits playing." His rendering of Handel's melodious air at once stamped him as a great artist. "Mr. E. Lloyd," The Musical Times recorded, "created an extraordinary effect by his really fine singing of the air 'Love in her eyes,' being recalled to the platform amidst acclamations." There was no mistaking the genuineness of that success, and the junior tenor of the Festival at once stepped into the front rank of English singers.

FESTIVALS: ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

It would be quite superfluous to trace the career of our foremost tenor during the last quarter of a century. Is not the record of his extraordinary success known and read of all men? Suffice it to say that Mr. Lloyd has during that period appeared at every provincial Festival of importance, including Birmingham since 1876, at all the Handel Festivals, frequently at the Royal Choral Society, at the State concerts, and at other concerts, far too numerous to mention, all over the Kingdom. In fact, it would be difficult to mention a city or town of any size where his voice has not been heard, always with the greatest pleasure and genuine appreciation. He has created the tenor parts in all the most important oratorios and cantatas produced within recent years. He has crossed the Atlantic eight times. His first visit to the United States was in 1888, when he sang at the Cincinnati Festival, for which he received a fee of £1,350 for five performances in that city. At the World's Fair, held at Chicago in 1893, he sang at fifteen performances in six weeks. The following extract from the Chicago Sunday Post of June 18, 1893, may serve to show how great was his success in two performances of "The Messiah" to audiences of upwards of 5,000 persons; at the same time, the notice furnishes us with a specimen of musical criticism in the Far West. We have nothing so pungent on this side of the water:—

> The event of this, and all weeks, has been the masterly singing of Edward Lloyd, the perennial English tenor, whose voice shows neither brack nor flaw, and who is an artist to his finger-tips, and at his tongue's end. He easily towered a Titan above pygmies [the critic is writing at Porkopolis], at the "Messiah" concert at the world's fair on Wednesday, and the difficult, and almost impossible solo upon which most tenors "break themselves as with a rod of iron," and "dash themselves in pieces like a potter's vessel," was given with such superb dash, finish, and dramatic fire as to render the audience mad with joy and admiration.

At the composer's request Mr. Lloyd sang in "Mors et Vita" at Brussels and Paris in performances under Gounod's direction. In July, 1895, he made his début in Germany, when he sang the music of Hyllus in a performance of Handel's "Hercules," at Mainz, under the conductorship of the veteran and enthusiastic Handelian, Dr. Friedrich Chrysander. The Empress Frederick was present and at the conclusion of the performance she sent for Mr. Lloyd and congratulated him upon his singing. On that occasion he worthily upheld all the best traditions of English tenor singers, even of John Beard himself, for whom Handel composed the tenor parts of "Israel in Egypt," "The Messiah," "Samson," "Judas Maccabæus," and "Jephtha." No wonder that Mr. Lloyd greatly prizes the portrait of John Beard, Handel's tenor, that hangs in his pleasant study at Hove, Brighton.

PERSONALIA.

And this leads us to place on record the substance of a very pleasant conversation we were privileged to have with Mr. Lloyd in the said study at Hove, where, as a nautical man would say, he was "hove to" for a whole afternoon's chat, diversified with a delightful rendering of "If with all your hearts" before a very select audience of one! In the first place, Mr. Lloyd came into the world with a splendid constitution, and, to his lasting credit be it said, he has never abused it. It is not every man of strong will who exercises self-control, but he furnishes a fine example to all young men of the advantage accruing to a strict moderation in all things. He has never coddled nor allowed himself to be fussed up or to be effeminated. Fond of exercise in the open air, he has been an excellent tennis player, and now he is among the votaries of golf. The blessing of good health which he enjoys has enabled him to fulfil all his engagements with very few exceptions; thus he has rarely disappointed that great public who have ever been his friends. Absolutely a non-society man, he is never happier than when in his own home. An excellent man of business, he is liberally endowed with common sense, determination, practicability, and shrewdness — invaluable weapons to a man in fighting the battle of life. Moreover, he has, in addition, the priceless qualities of persistent perseverance and a downright love of hard work. He will tell you that why so many young fellows fail is because they will not "buck up." He has an absolute belief in the first sentence of Ecclesiastes ix. 10, which, in the unclassical language of the day, may be expressed: "If a man wants to succeed in any calling he must put his back into it," or he will stand no chance of making a successful career.

METHOD OF STUDY.

In reply to an enquiry as to his method in singing, the answer comes, "Naturalness." This he amusingly illustrates by the following anecdote. A young fellow came to him and said: "Mr. So-and-So (mentioning the name of a certain voice-trainer) has now put my voice in its right place." "Oh! indeed," replied Mr. Lloyd, "I should like to hear what that gentleman has done for you." It is quite impossible to describe the extraordinary noise Mr. Lloyd made—the sounds seeming to come from the region behind his ears—in reproducing the tones of his friend's freshly placed voice. When he (Mr. Lloyd) heard these "placed" (not placid) sounds, he said to the neophyte: "I should advise you to go home and put your voice back into the place where it was before as fast as you possibly can." "Brains, brains, sir," he adds, "are what most young singers lack," and, may we not add, a good many of the older ones also? "Then as to your preparation of a new work, Mr. Lloyd. What is your procedure?" "Well, the first thing I do is to find out what it is all about by reading through the whole of the libretto and grasping the general idea of the work. Then I look at my own particular part to see what bearing it has upon the other characters and in relation to the various dramatic situations. After I have acquired that much I get soaked, so to speak, in the words that I have to sing, in order to get thoroughly familiar with them, especially from the point of view of clear articulation and dramatic emphasis. All this, mind you, without having looked at the music. Then I go for the music. And here I often find that composers prove to be lamentably deficient in declamation. They get hold of a little bit of melody (it is not always a melody, by the way, but they call it that) and stick the syllables on to it regardless of the natural poetic flow of the words—a rush of syllables here, followed by one long note on one word there, and so on. In fact, some of the modern music is so dreadfully mathematically dry that it might just as well be set to the multiplication table. But to come back to myself. After I have got hold of the words and music, I set my accompanist to work. Our preliminaries having been accomplished, we go at it for an hour every day for two months! Then I am ready for the band rehearsal." If Mr. Lloyd wanted to pass on a dual motto to the budding tenors who are really anxious to make their way, he could not do better than say: "Steady, boys, steady: ready, boys, ready!"

ORATORIO.

"You probably still have a belief in oratorio." "Yes. Oratorios still hold their power over the mass of the people. They are the true heirlooms of all lovers of music. To really understand the significance of their influence, and how those glorious works of the great masters are loved and revered, you should go into the Black Country on the occasion of a big musical function and watch the people coming in with their scores under their arms. I have seen the galleries packed with miners, who eagerly take in every note and listen with an appreciation that closely approaches an act of devotion."

A POPULAR SONG.

"Then as to the popular song." "Why not popular songs?" he asks. "The people like them, and if the words have a good tone and the music is pleasing to the audience, why should I not sing them? If I sing at a classical concert I sing a classical song with pleasure; but it seems to me that those who call out about my singing of popular songs are just those who do not pay for admission to concerts but want the tickets given to them!" "What do you consider your most popular song?" "I think it is 'The Holy City' by Stephen Adams (Mr. Maybrick). It sells at the rate of 50,000 copies per annum. In Montreal I was engaged to sing four times in one month at a fee of 250 guineas each concert, on condition that I sang 'The Holy City' on each occasion."

HIS RETIREMENT.

Mr. Edward Lloyd will retire from public life in the year 1900. He was obliged to make known the exact date of his withdrawal so long in advance because he had engagements booked up to the end of 1899; therefore, in order to leave himself free for a farewell tour, and to prevent offers of fresh engagements, he announced his decision in the autumn of last year. He gives very good reasons for the step he is about to take. First, he is tired of the hard work of professional life. He has been a singer for forty-six years, he has been able to make ample provision for his future wants and those dependent upon him, and why should he not enjoy his fortune and a well-earned rest? Secondly, he thinks it is only fair that he should "give others a chance." He has purchased an estate of ninety acres—a lovely spot known as Skipper's Hill, Mayfield, Sussex — about eight miles from Tunbridge Wells. The house dates from 1612. He will there lead the life of a country gentleman, and amuse himself by rearing pheasants, cows, pigs, &c., though he will still retain his Hove residence as a winter habitation. As he has several irons in the fire of a business nature, he will not find the time hang heavily upon his hands, and there is no reason why he should not continue to pursue the "even tenor of his ways" by having a voice in the affairs of the county.

One thing, however, is quite certain, Edward Lloyd has thoroughly deserved all the success that has fallen to his lot. Not only has he made a splendid use of his magnificent voice, but he has set a fine example of consistent living and irreproachable conduct during the course of his long professional life. That he may enjoy to the full many years of happiness in his retirement will be the wish of many thousands of his fellow countrymen who have so often derived keen enjoyment and unfeigned delight in listening to the singing of the great artist who bears the familiar name of Edward Lloyd.

LOST! BRITISH MUSIC AT THE QUEEN'S HALL.

The programme of German, French, and Russian music which was performed by the Queen's Hall orchestra before Her Majesty the Queen, at Windsor Castle, on November 24, was repeated at the Home of foreign music in Langham Place a few days later. The audience was by no means so large as Mr. Newman had, no doubt, anticipated. And yet the last two movements of the "Pathetic" Symphony were included in the scheme! Wagner's "Charfreitagszauber," from "Parsifal," the Prelude to Act III. of "Die Meistersinger" and the Overture to that wondrous work, the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the charming Overture to Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" represented German art; France contributed Saint-Saëns's pretty symphonic poem "Le rouet d'Omphale," and England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and the Colonies were nowhere.

We wonder what foreigners think of such a state of affairs! It should teach our native composers at least one lesson—the necessity of learning to score effectively for the full modern orchestra, so as to secure that rich sonority and euphony which present day audiences, and more especially present day conductors, seem to imperatively demand. Those composers amongst our compatriots who have acquired this knowledge (for it can be acquired) may be counted on the fingers of one's hand. The rest content themselves with stereotyped orchestral devices learned from books. No wonder their scores do not appeal to a conductor-virtuoso like Mr. Wood, who has the most magnificent instrument at his disposal, and naturally loves to display its phenomenal capabilities for effect.

Let us not be misunderstood: we do not mean to suggest that beautiful orchestration alone is likely to secure greatness for a work or to vitalize it. On the contrary, we are never tired of insisting that unless the music per se be great, unless the thematic material and its treatment be beautiful and above reproach, the most gorgeous colourist, the cleverest chiaroscurist will fail to appeal to us. Some of the most wonderfully scored specimens of Russian music produced by Mr. Wood have left his audiences utterly unimpressed for this reason.

But—and here is the crux!—these pieces were performed by the finest orchestra in England, while our best native composers are still waiting, waiting, wearily waiting. They gnash their teeth, Mr. Newman and Mr. Wood pin their faith to all sorts and conditions of foreigners, and the audiences, bless their patriotic hearts, care not. Will this state of affairs last for ever, and will the concert directors and the public of the metropolis never give our native composers that encouragement, that hope of better times, without which they may well despair?

Wagner began his stupendous "Ring" tetralogy "Im Vertrauen auf den deutschen Geist," as those who run may read on the title-page of the first edition of Karl Klindworth's vocal score of "Götterdämmerung." And his faith was justified. Are there any signs that our composers, though they be not Wagners, may devote their life and their genius to creative work, trusting to the future for the eventual appreciation of the children of their imagination? We see none whatever in the capital of the British Empire, where British music is virtually ignored, and of set purpose ignored, at all the best orchestral concerts, with the exception of those of the Crystal Palace (in Greater London) and, occasionally, the Philharmonic Society. The public, as we have said, care little, the press care less, and our musicians, even if they care, seem powerless to move in the matter. In what other country under the sun would such a state of affairs be tolerated or even conceivable?

And yet we are perfectly certain that the public are quite willing to hear and enjoy British orchestral music. A good work by a native composer is ever sure of a friendly and even an enthusiastic reception, as we have frequently noted; whereas we could name scores of second-rate foreign works which created not even a semblance of enthusiasm amongst Mr. Newman's audiences. After all, is it not a question of so mixing British products with the classic and modern favourites of other nations that a large audience can be relied upon? To devote whole concerts or the greater portion of an orchestral programme to British music might prove unprofitable, as it has done in some cases within our knowledge. But one British work will never frighten the paying public away, of that we feel absolutely sure. And a manager who boasts of his "patriotism" in engaging English players should carry that laudable virtue a little farther, and make it a point of honour to include works, not necessarily absolute novelties, by compatriots in his programmes, whenever possible.

It seems to require an apology to our composers to write of their works in this apologetic tone. But it is useless to ignore facts, and we appreciate Mr. Newman's difficulties as thoroughly as we are convinced of his duties to native art. It would be idle to discuss whether a man in Mr. Newman's position has other duties besides that of money making which he owes to himself. But he has so far failed to fulfil them. He seems to be gradually assuming the rôle of a monopolist in orchestral concerts in London, and unless he uses his power wisely and well, he will share the fate of most monopolists and, by creating that irritation, distrust, and envy which ultimately lead to a revolt against a tyranny, he will alienate the very public upon whose support he has to depend. It is time to speak out strongly; time to assure Mr. Newman and Mr. Wood that their present policy of novelties at any price so long as they are not British will not do, and that they may bore and annoy the public once too often with works suggesting an utter absence of critical acumen in those responsible for their selection.

We have faith in the future of British music, for we know sufficient of our young composers to believe that the time will come, and that soon, when Londoners will clamour for those British orchestral works that are now denied them. Then will also come the time when the public will want to know what evil influences have been at work to retard the recognition of our best men, to thwart the urgent and just claims of our budding native art, and to foist upon a long-suffering public such a tedious foreign example as the "Requiem Mass" by M. Debret, produced on the 10th ult.

ERNST VON DOHNÁNYI.

Of the many foreign musicians who have visited these shores from time to time, few seem to have made such an immediate impression as the subject of this sketch. A mere youth, unheralded and unaided by any preliminary puffs of agents or pressmen, young Dohnányi has at once made his mark in the greatest city of the world as a composer and pianist of exceptional talent. If he continues to go on as he has begun he has before him a most brilliant future. Time alone will prove whether all our bright expectations of him will be realised; but in any case there need be no apology for presenting the readers of The Musical Times with an account of the upbringing of one of the most remarkable young musicians of the time, the particulars for which have been kindly supplied to us from the best of all sources.

Ernst von Dohnányi was born at Pressburg, Hungary, on July 27, 1877. His forbears on his father's side were a noble Hungarian family at the place named Dohnany, where, in the house of his grandfather, music was much cultivated. His father, Professor Friedrich von Dohnányi, is a Professor of Mathematics and Physics in the Pressburger Gymnasium. Moreover, he is an excellent performer on the violoncello. As there was always plenty of chamber music to be heard in the Dohnányi home, little Ernst lived in an atmosphere of sweet sounds. In his earliest years he would leave his toys directly he heard music and come into the room where the performers were assembled, when, with glowing cheeks and excited expression, he would listen to as many as three quartets, one after another, with the greatest interest and composure. No wonder that the players were astonished at his extraordinary receptivity. His favourite game was to "play at giving concerts." He himself was either the conductor or the violoncellist. The chairs, duly placed in rows, represented the audience; his little sister, the orchestra. He stood on a stool and conducted with a walking-stick, not in the perfunctory manner of a mere time-beater, but with every imaginable shade of expression, accompanied by inarticulate utterances ranging from pianissimo to fortissimo. A violin had to be hidden from him, because if he saw one and was not allowed to obtain possession of it he wept bitterly. One of the pieces played by his father was Bach's Sarabande from the violoncello sonata. As Dohnányi père wished to convince himself of his son's musicianship, he one day placed the bow in the child's hand and held the violoncello so that he could reach the strings, his father stopping them with his left hand. To Professor Dohnányi's great astonishment the boy drew the bow across the strings with perfect rhythmical accuracy—crotchets, quavers, and semiquavers being minutely indicated. He was then under three years of age.

Ernst von Dohnányi

Fortunately for the boy, his father wisely decided not to make a prodigy of him. When Ernst had attained the age of six his father began to teach him the pianoforte. His happiest moments were when together they played pianoforte duets. The child at once became transformed into a seriously disposed person, and if he happened to make a mistake the tears would roll down his cheeks. His father also taught him the violin, which he soon gave up; but at a later period he played the viola in quartets and in the orchestra. He was taken to all the best concerts in Pressburg, where he heard Rubinstein, Bülow, Joachim, and Sarasate.

His earliest attempts at composition date from his seventh year. He chose for his Christmas present a sheet of manuscript music paper, and in the early morning the child began to write down notes indiscriminately on the paper. The mere writing of music gave him the greatest pleasure. Later on little compositions were evolved. The first that he remembers were seven pieces for violin and pianoforte, quite original. When his father laughingly played them with him, the little composer was quite indignant at such levity. Several smaller pianoforte pieces followed in the "Lied" form. All these compositions were strictly correct in both harmony and form, although he had not received any theoretical instruction whatever.

After having received pianoforte lessons from Professor Dohnányi for two years, the youthful Ernst became a pupil of Herr Forstner, organist of Pressburg Cathedral, with whom he studied the pianoforte till his sixteenth year, when his school days were ended. These lessons were looked upon only as recreations, as, at that time, there was no intention of making him a professional musician. He made his first appearance in public when he was nine years old, at a concert in Pressburg, on which occasion he played Mozart's G minor Quartet. Thenceforward he played once or twice a year in concerts at Pressburg in order that he might become somewhat accustomed to performing in public, though his father steadily set his face against any prodigy tendencies.

About 1888-89 Ernst wrote his first chamber-music compositions, which consisted of two violoncello sonatas (dedicated to his father), two string quartets, and two pianoforte sonatas. The first violoncello sonata and the first quartet reflect the style of Haydn, but the influence of Beethoven can be traced in the second sonata for violoncello and in the pianoforte sonatas. All these works, however, were faultlessly correct as to sonata form, as the earliest pianoforte pieces were in the "Lied" form, though he had had absolutely no instruction in these branches of composition. At the age of thirteen he, for the first time, played Brahms (the G minor Quartet) in public. He was immensely inspired by the music and his early love for Schumann grew colder. He became an ardent admirer of Brahms, and under his spell he composed a pianoforte quartet and, later on, a string sextet. The quartet was publicly performed in Vienna in March, 1894, by the Duesberg Quartet, with great success. Another string quartet was composed in five days!

In May, 1894, the question of the boy's future career in life was seriously discussed. Was he to devote himself to music or not? His father said "yes," his other relations said "no." Young Dohnányi, however, settled the question for himself by deciding that, while still pursuing his musical studies, he should enter the University and study philosophy. Budapest was chosen in preference to Vienna, and in September, 1894, Ernst Dohnányi became a pupil at the Royal Hungarian Academy of Music, where he remained until June, 1897. At the same time he entered the University, but withdrew after a few months, as he found it impossible to do justice to both courses. He was well equipped before he joined the Academy of Music, where he astonished everyone by his facility in reading at sight, in score reading, and in transposition. His teachers at Budapest were Hans Koessler, one of the best of theorists, and, for the pianoforte, Stefan Thomán, one of Liszt's latest and most gifted pupils. Although he devoted much time to purely technical pianoforte work, contrapuntal studies, and the masterpieces of Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms, the creative faculty dominated his student life. In 1895 he produced for the first time a pianoforte quintet in C minor, which showed marked individuality, although here and there traces of the Schumann-Brahms influence crop up. This fine work has been repeatedly performed with extraordinary success at Budapest by the Hubay and Popper Quartet, and in Vienna by the Fitzner Quartet. Its first performance in England took place at the Hampstead Conservatoire, on November 16 last, and was duly recorded in our December issue (p. 805).

Koessler, who was an intimate friend of Brahms, had often spoken to the latter about clever young Dohnányi and his remarkable quintet. Brahms expressed a wish to know the work, and, as Ernst Dohnányi was then unable to go himself to Ischl, he (Brahms) begged the composer to send him the score, and the work was played through to the older composer by Nikisch, who happened to be there at the time, and the Kneisel Quartet. At Brahms's express wish—he himself being present—the quintet was played at the Tonkünstler Verein, Vienna, again with renewed success.

After the quintet (1895-96) he devoted himself to orchestral composition, and his Symphony in F was produced. In 1896, the year of the Hungarian Millennium, the "King of Hungary" offered prizes for works by native composers. The Liszt Verein in Budapest arranged the competition, and Dohnányi competed with his symphony, an overture for full orchestra entitled "Zrinyi," and the String Sextet in B flat of his Pressburg days, but re-written for the occasion. Both the symphony and overture took prizes, while the sextet was honourably mentioned, and the two prize works were afterwards performed in Budapest. He also wrote some pianoforte pieces—e.g., Scherzo in C sharp minor (January, 1897), Capriccio in B minor (February, 1897), Pianoforte Variations and Fugue on a Theme by "E. G.," a pupil of his, and also a Psalm in eight parts. To this year (1897) also belong some charming four-hand waltzes. In June, 1897, he left the Budapest Academy with the distinction of "Künstler-Diplom." He had made many friends in the city, all of whom take the liveliest interest in the clever youth and his future.

Having finished his studies at Budapest, Dohnányi, in July, 1897, went to study with Eugene d'Albert, to whom Koessler had given him an introduction. From D'Albert, with whom he remained for two months, his pianoforte playing received its final polish. He then went to Berlin. He gave two recitals there, on the 1st and 7th of October, 1897, and he subsequently appeared at Dresden, Vienna, Budapest, and other Hungarian towns—everywhere with the greatest possible success. His recent compositions include three intermezzi, a gavotte, a transcription for the pianoforte of Délibes's "Naila" waltz, two cradle songs, and his latest and, at the same time, most important work, the Pianoforte Concerto in E minor.

Herr Ernst von Dohnányi, having played Beethoven's G major under Dr. Richter in Budapest and Vienna, accompanied the great Viennese conductor to London last October, when the young composer-pianist made his first appearance before an English audience at the Richter concert of October 24. His subsequent triumphs in this country have been duly recorded. It is interesting to know that Herr von Dohnányi—like Mendelssohn who first visited these shores (in 1829) when he was nearly the same age—has already derived the greatest pleasure from his sojourn in London. His future appearances will be eagerly looked forward to and his future career watched with the greatest interest by all true lovers of music in this country.

In view of the performance by the Royal Choral Society, on the 2nd inst., of Handel's "Messiah" in a manner approaching its original form, it may not be without interest to give some authentic particulars relating to the first performance of Mozart's additional accompaniments in England. First, however, we may give the date of the publication of the score containing Mozart's additions, originally issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, Leipzig. In the Intelligenz-Blatt of the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung of March, 1803, the following announcement heads the list of new publications :—

> Händel F. G. (sic), Oratorium, der Messias, nach W. A. Mozart's Bearbeitung, Partitur, 3 Abtheilungen. Pränumerationspreis bis Ostern, 5 Thlr. Der nachherige Ladenpreis ist 8 Thlr.
> [Handel F. G., oratorio, The Messiah, according to W. A. Mozart's edition. Full score, 3 parts. Subscription price till Easter, 5 Thalers. The subsequent shop price is 8 Thalers.]

Mozart wrote his additional accompaniments in March, 1789. They did not, however, appear in print until fourteen years afterwards. There would thus be ample time and opportunity for any "tinkering" that might be deemed necessary. In the meantime (in 1791), Mozart had died. It is impossible to compare the existing copies with Mozart's manuscript score, as its whereabouts is unknown.

Various dates have been given—all of them wrong—as that of the first performance in this country of Mozart's "additional accompaniments" to "The Messiah." The late Sir G. A. Macfarren stated that they were first performed, under Sir George Smart, at Drury Lane Theatre, "in the Lent of 1813." This year is also given by the late Sir W. G. Cusins, but he states that it took place January 13, a date not agreeing with Macfarren's "Lent." W. T. Parke, the oboist, in his "Musical Memoirs," records that he played in the band, when these "additional accompaniments" were used, in 1812, one year earlier than that of Macfarren and Cusins. The article "Birmingham Festival," in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians" (I., 244), records "the use of Mozart's accompaniments to the 'Messiah' for the first time in 1808," four years earlier even than Parke's date. Mr. Andrew Deakin, of Birmingham, has discovered that they were performed at the Birmingham Festival, October, 1805. Thus it would seem as if Birmingham could claim the distinction of this "first performance." But, to the credit of London, we can "go one farther." As a matter of fact, they were performed in London during Lent, 1805, eight years before 1813—the year given by Macfarren. Here is the documentary evidence from the London newspapers of the day :—

Morning Chronicle, March 21, 1805.

> Covent Garden. The Messiah last night attracted a crowded audience to this Theatre. All the performers exerted themselves, and were highly applauded. We learn that the celebrated Mozarti (sic) has made some additions to this favourite Oratorio, which are spoken of as highly creditable to his genius, and respectful to the memory of Handel. We would recommend their being introduced that the Public might judge whether they are really improvements.

The preliminary announcements in the great London dailies were couched in the following terms :—

The Times, March 28, 1805.

> The Creation and Grand Selection last night were most excellently performed, and attracted an overflowing house. We notice with pleasure the performance of to-morrow evening, the Messiah. This Oratorio has ever been a great and deserved favourite, and promises to be more admired than ever, from the additions made to it by Mozart, which are spoken of as highly judicious and effective.

Morning Chronicle, March 28, 1805.

> The Oratorio last night was very numerously and fashionably attended. . . . We anticipate with great pleasure the performance of to-morrow evening, when the Messiah, the master-piece of Handel, is to be produced, with the additional parts, as added by the celebrated Mozart; we are anxious to hear the superior effect produced by this harmonic combination of the great masters of the ancient and modern school of music.

The advertisement from the Morning Chronicle of the above date reads thus:—

> Last night but two.
> Oratorios at Play-house prices during Lent.
> Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.
> To-morrow evening will be performed, for the first time, the Sacred Oratorio of The Messiah, composed by G. F. Handel, with additional accompaniments by the celebrated W. A. Mozart, of Vienna.
> Principal vocal performers:—
> Mrs. Ashe and Mrs. Bland, Master Linton, and Miss Munday; Mr. Braham, Mr. Denman, Mr. Page, Mr. G. Parrin, and Mr. Miller, from Bath.
> Mr. G. Ashley, leader of the band. Organ, Mr. J. Ashley.
> . . . .
> Half Price at the end of the Second Act.

A notice of the performance appeared in the Sun, a leading daily paper, of March 30, 1805. Here it is:—

> The Oratorio. The Messiah was last night performed at Covent Garden Theatre, with new accompaniments composed by Mozart. We entertain a very high respect for the genius of Mozart, but we also hold the unrivalled powers of Handel in due reverence, and therefore must enter our protest against any such alterations in works that have obtained the sanction of time and of the best musical judges. There is an integrity in the productions of this great Master, the result of the most powerful talents in his art. His harmonies have a firm and united character. The accompaniments of last night, though manifesting taste and feeling, did not assimilate with the grandeur and energy of the original subject. We trust, therefore, that when The Messiah or any other work of Handel is performed it will appear without change or interpolation. Handel is an Englishman by adoption; he produced all his works in this Country, and is still very little regarded in his own. We should therefore guard him in Music, as well as Shakspeare in the Drama, from daring innovation. Such as The Messiah was, however, in its improved state last night, it was well supported by Braham, Miller, Miss Munday, Mrs. Bland, and Mrs. Ashe.

This criticism—excellently expressed, by the way—though written nearly one hundred years ago, will find many sympathizers in the present day. Thus it will be seen that Mozart's "additional accompaniments" found their way to England two years after they were first published. For sixty years previous to 1805 Handel's "Messiah" got along very well without Mozart's assistance. Why should we not return to, at all events, an approximation of Handel's own manner of performing his immortal masterpiece?

A curious instance of the diametrically opposite in opinions upon a musical composition is furnished in two notices that appeared in two London daily newspapers. The occasion was Herr Ernst von Dohnányi's pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall, on November 28, the work in question being Liszt's Sonata in B minor. We give the pro and con in parallel columns:—

. . . the magnificent sonata of Liszt. . . . it is a Tone-Poem of wondrous beauty and penetrating pathos. . . . The themes are metamorphosed into various forms, and are made to express the whole gamut of passion . . . this intensely emotional music.	The waste of precious time and of the performer's extraordinary powers, on such inconsequent rubbish as Liszt's sonata in B minor in one (interminable) movement was hard to forgive.

No comment is necessary on this remarkable instance of doctors differing.

The fact, recorded in another column, that Mr. Edward Lloyd, as a chorister boy, sang at the wedding of the Princess Royal (the Empress Frederick of Germany), arouses curiosity as to whether Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was first performed at a nuptial ceremony in this country on that auspicious occasion. The music at the Princess's wedding, in the selection of which the hand of the music-loving Prince Consort can be traced, was of a very different nature from that furnished at the marriage of her royal mother. The ceremony took place at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, on January 25, 1858. Sir George Smart, assisted by Mr. George Cooper, presided at the organ, to which a movement was added, "to elevate the keys of it, in consequence of the temporary gallery being erected in front of the organ." The Queen's private band, conducted by Mr. Anderson, Master of the Music to the Queen, was also in attendance, and, with the choir, was stationed in a gallery opposite the organ. The band played the "Occasional" Overture, the Marches from "Joseph" and "Judas Maccabæus," and in the "Hallelujah" Chorus (all by Handel), and, at the end of the ceremony, Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" from the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music. If this was not actually the first performance of Mendelssohn's familiar march at a marriage service, there can be little doubt that it set the fashion for its use in connection with the "Solemnization of Matrimony" in the churches of this country.

The Rev. Canon Hervey, of Sandringham, in kindly supplying an interesting side-light on an event in Mr. Edward Lloyd's career, sends us the following amusing incident of his (Canon Hervey's) college life at Cambridge:—

> During my undergraduate days I wrote a song—a ridiculous ditty with a passage in the middle bristling with a semiquaver accompaniment. I got the words from the Light Blue, the University magazine, and they were about a shining or flowing river. Well, I was immensely proud of this production, though I never summoned up courage to show it to Garrett. But to Mr. Lloyd, who was my own age, I confided the great fact that I had written this song, and he very good-naturedly came up to my rooms one day and sang it through to me. I was prouder of it than ever. It really didn't sound half bad, and the semiquavers all fitted beautifully into their places. But although I took or sent it to one publisher after another, they none of them would have anything to say to it. Had they decided otherwise I could have made my fortune (or would it have been their fortune?) with that song, for I might have truthfully superscribed the title-page with the magic words:
> "Sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd."

The music sung at the Royal Mausoleum, Frogmore, on the 14th ult., the anniversary of the death of the ever-lamented Prince Consort, consisted of the following selections, sung by the choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, under the direction of Sir Walter Parratt. A hymn written by the Rev. S. C. Lowry, beginning

> O Saviour, once again the ebbing year
> Awakes the memories of days now past;
> And we with chastened hearts are gathered here
> On Thy compassion all our care to cast;
> O God of comfort, Thou, and Thou alone,
> Canst soothe us when what most we prized is gone.

and sung to W. H. Monk's tune "Unde et memores," No. 322 in "Hymns Ancient and Modern"; Mendelssohn's "The deep repose of night is ending" (known as "Morning Prayer"), translated from Eichendorf; and "Wreaths for our graves," by Sir Arthur Sullivan. We understand that the Queen asked that something by Mendelssohn should be sung at the Memorial Service, but the actual choice was made by Sir Walter Parratt.

Any movement in the direction of providing good music for the masses of the people at popular prices deserves publicity, sympathy, and encouragement. A very gratifying instance of what may be accomplished in that direction is furnished by an interesting performance of Gounod's "Redemption," which took place on a recent Saturday evening in the Ulster Hall, Belfast. Not only was the fine building crowded to overflowing—extra chairs having to be brought in and a part of the orchestra filled with auditors—but many people were unable to gain admission to the building. In fact, long before the time announced for opening the doors, the hall was besieged by crowds content to wait patiently that they might hear Gounod's music. Such a remarkable testimony to the hold that oratorio music has upon the affections of the people needs no comment. Moreover, the performers were all local folk, including Dr. F. Koeller (the conductor), all the soloists, the orchestra (about fifty performers), and the chorus of 230 voices. We cannot do better than quote from a letter from Mr. Charles H. Brett, the treasurer of the Belfast Philharmonic Society and a true friend to the cause of music in the Ulster capital, who refers to the event in the following terms:—

> The performance of the "Redemption" was greatly appreciated by an overflowing house—in fact, almost as many were turned away as were admitted. There can be no doubt that there is a better appreciation of the fine effects of an orchestra and chorus among our artisan classes here than exists among the richer—I don't call them, for I don't consider them, the "better"—classes. It is difficult for a casual visitor to Belfast to realize its newness as a great centre of population. In 1851 its population numbered 100,000; now it is at least 300,000. This extraordinary increase has principally been brought about by the drainage into the city of the rural population from the surrounding counties and small towns, with a slight admixture of English and Scotch. When one thinks that most of these immigrants had never heard any more elaborate music than that of the singing of their church choirs, almost invariably *un*accompanied, it is easy to understand how they are impressed by any fairly sufficient rendering of a fine oratorio such as the "Redemption." Our performance was, of course, not perfect, judged by any high standard, for most of the wind parts had to be supplied on the organ, but not one per cent. of the audience knew of the deficiency! The chorus was excellent, the strings very fair and perfectly steady, and the local singers acquitted themselves admirably.

The example of Belfast deserves to be widely imitated. We shall watch with interest future developments of so estimable a scheme for providing good music for the people, not only in the Ulster capital, but in other large centres of the population, and shall gladly record any such performances as that referred to above.

Professor Karl Klindworth contributed a very readable paper to the Bayreuther Blätter of November 1, entitled "Einst und Jetzt in England." In the course of the article, which is addressed more to a German than an English audience, the distinguished musician draws an interesting comparison between the state of music in London (which is very amusingly described) during his residence in the metropolis between the years 1854 and 1868, and that of the year just closed, in the summer of which he paid us a visit of some weeks' duration. In regard to his appearance as conductor of Mr. Frederick Dawson's concert on June 15 last, Professor Klindworth refers to the enthusiastic greeting which he received after an absence from England (with one unimportant exception) of thirty years. "There was nothing to shadow the remembrance of that evening," he says in effect; "even the Press without exception spoke in terms of friendly acknowledgment of the struggles and work of my life; and in this way was reflected that kindly feeling which was accorded to me, as the friend of the Master [Richard Wagner], in England." In an eloquent peroration, Professor Klindworth pays a high tribute to English music and musicianship in the following terms:—

> England has entered the anxious battle of the nations for supremacy in the realm of music. Able, honourable men struggle in earnest endeavour, and with the hope of being placed on the roll of fame by the gratitude of future generations. There already exists a distinguished list of esteemed names—composers, singers, conductors, and virtuosi—whose performances are in no way inferior to those amongst our best in Germany.

Twenty-three years have passed since "A Dictionary of Musical Terms, edited by J. Stainer and W. A. Barrett," first made its appearance. It was then the most complete work of its kind, and it has only been surpassed by the much larger work with which the honoured name of Sir George Grove will be inseparably associated. But "Grove" is far too expensive for the majority of folk who need a handy, reliable, and interestingly-written book of reference on musical terms. Therefore, "Stainer and Barrett" still supplies, and worthily supplies, a want. There was a time, however, when even "Stainer and Barrett" was only obtainable at a cost practically prohibitive to many who were not overburdened with pennies. The original price of the book was sixteen shillings, but a few years ago the publishers very wisely reduced it to less than half that amount—viz., seven shillings and sixpence, at which it still remains.

"Up-to-date" is the cry of the day. It affects dictionaries, even those that can point to a useful career of nearly a quarter of a century. In regard to the "Dictionary of Musical Terms," one of the Editors, the late Dr. W. A. Barrett, has died since the work was first issued. But Sir John Stainer happily survives in the full plenitude of his powers, and what more congenial task could fall to his lot than to revise the work, bring its information up to date, and see a new edition of the book through the press? All this he has done with that thoroughness and erudition so characteristic of his proved ability in musical-literary operations. It may be sufficient for the present, pending a more detailed notice of the book just issued, to quote Sir John's preface to this new edition:—

> The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., copyright and licensing, madrigal, mass, opera, pianoforte, pitch, and others of less dimensions; also, many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that such a book, well printed and handsomely bound, would be an admirable present to give to anyone interested in music. Moreover, it is a work that ought to find its way into the library of every school where music forms a part of the curriculum. There is nothing like stimulating a pupil's curiosity to find out things for herself or himself. "Go and look it up in 'Stainer and Barrett,'" would be excellent advice by way of amplifying any information supplied by the teacher in the short lesson-hour. The habit of "picking-up" should be urged upon pupils at every possible opportunity.

Professor Stanford contributed a short but very readable article to the December issue of the Cornhill Magazine on his fellow-countryman, the late Joseph Robinson, a well known Dublin musician, who died in August last. In regard to "Joe" Robinson as a conductor and the history of the orchestral version of Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," Professor Stanford says:—

> One of his oldest friends has told me that the secret of his success was twofold: he never listened to the insidious opinion proffered at a bad rehearsal that the music "will be all right in the evening," and a work never went so well but that he tried to make it go better. His performances of "St. Paul" and "Elijah" were quite admirable, and he was in direct possession of the traditions of their execution, for he made special journeys to hear them under the composer's direction in England. In the course of these expeditions he made the personal acquaintance of Mendelssohn, who at once recognised his gifts, and had a warm personal regard for himself. On the occasion of the first performance of the "Elijah," my father accompanied Robinson to Birmingham, where they had the pleasantest intercourse with the great composer. They have both frequently described to me his very boyish fun and his delight in a good joke; how he extemporised a double fugue on the subject of "The horse and his rider" on the organ in the Town Hall to a few friends; how, after the final rehearsal of "Elijah," he slid down the banisters of the long staircase with his feet in the air, and wound up the day by a supper with them at the Woolpack Inn, where my father rather shocked the serious Sterndale Bennett by performing Punch and Judy over the door with his fingers clothed in napkins, and introduced a ghost to the music of the "Commendatore." On this occasion Mendelssohn promised Robinson to orchestrate "Hear my Prayer" for the Antient Concerts. Shortly after his death, in the following year, Robinson received the score from the executors; it was written exactly for the band which Robinson had enumerated to him, and he had taken his hint to "be sure to use the kettledrums in the second movement"; with what effect anyone who glances at the score will appreciate.

Robinson was conductor of the University Choral Society (Dublin)—"the oldest body of the kind in the Three Kingdoms," we are told—and the following is one of the curious experiences he had with the amateurs of that Institution:—

> On one occasion an amateur Polyphemus essayed with fair success "O ruddier than the cherry," but had not carefully read his words, for he persistently sang "kindlings blithe and merry," a proceeding which provoked great merriment in the room, and led to a species of duet between the conductor and the singer at the concert thus:—
> Singer.—With kindlings blithe and merry.
> Robinson.— (kidlings)
> Singer.—With kindlings blithe and merry.
> Robinson.— (kidlings)
> The interpolation being very clear and allegro.

The Cambridge Professor concludes his interesting "appreciation" of Joseph Robinson, his old friend and master, thus:—

> He was generous to a fault, and died comparatively poor, mainly owing to his open-handedness to friends in worse circumstances than himself. When he was too old and ill to appreciate it the Government gave him a small Civil List pension, by which he only profited for a few weeks. But his memory will long be green in the hearts of his friends, old and young, and Ireland and her musical children will always remember him with gratitude, affection, and respect.

Dr. J. Varley Roberts, the distinguished organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, has written a "Treatise on a practical method of training choristers" (Henry Frowde). As the author deservedly holds a high reputation as a skilful choir-trainer, his views on the subject of which he treats will be received with respect and not a little benefit to those who adopt his methods. The practical nature of the book may be estimated by an extract from the preface, in which Dr. Roberts says: "I have tried to put myself—(1) in the place of village church choirmasters, and (2) to lead up to the position of those who have 'better material' and larger scope for development." The book should be read.

Mr. George Riseley has resigned his appointment of organist of Bristol Cathedral, the Dean and Chapter having, at his request, granted him a pension. Born and bred at Bristol, he has been connected with its Cathedral for forty-six years—first as chorister, afterwards as deputy-organist, and, since 1876, as organist and master of the choristers. Mr. Riseley has accepted two important appointments in London—the conductorship of the Queen's Hall Choral Society and of the Alexandra Palace—the duties of which his long experience and high qualifications eminently fit him to discharge with distinction. He will, however, still retain his public appointments (other than the Cathedral) and his teaching connection at Bristol; but during the greater part of each week he will reside in London in order to fulfil his official conducting and private teaching engagements in the metropolis. Vigorous, alert, and with a remarkable zeal for hard work, Mr. Riseley will find in this "smoky nest" splendid opportunities for his well-tried abilities. May all success attend him.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie is announced to give three lectures, with musical illustrations, at the Royal Institution, on the afternoons of Saturdays, the 21st and 28th inst. and February 4, at 3 p.m. The subjects of the three lectures are respectively Liszt, Tschaïkowsky, and Brahms.

An interesting development of the Nonconformist Choir Union, founded ten years ago, is that of the orchestra associated with that flourishing Society. Time was, and it is well within living memory, when players upon divers instruments were wont to lead the service of song in many Nonconformist churches, especially in rural districts. The organ or harmonium has, however, displaced these good men and true, though the latter attribute could not always be applied to their intonation. The personnel of the orchestra of the Nonconformist Choir Union is, it is hardly necessary to say, very different from that of the chapel bands of the past. The players number upwards of eighty performers, including sixty-five strings and complete wind. They meet for rehearsal once a month, on a Saturday afternoon, at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand. A chance visitor at one of these most recent meetings would have heard such pieces as a Haydn Symphony, Macfarren's Overture to "Chevy Chace," and German's Bourrée from the incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing" being vigorously rehearsed. The enthusiasm of the players and their indefatigable conductor clearly proved that their operations could not be placed in the category of making much ado about nothing. Mr. T. R. Croger is the conductor of the orchestra, to whom, and to his trusty followers—ladies as well as gentlemen—we wish all possible success.

The fourteenth annual conference of The Incorporated Society of Musicians will be held on the 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th inst. The place of meeting this year is Plymouth. The chairmen at the various assemblies are to be: Mr. W. H. Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music; Dr. J. C. Culwick, Dublin; Dr. A. King, Brighton; and Mr. John Thomas, Harpist to the Queen. Mr. Cummings is announced to deliver an address on "Our responsibilities as Professors of Music: The Past, the Present, the Future." Dr. F. G. Shinn will discourse on "The training of the ear," Mr. Frederic James on "The influence of prejudice upon the present state of Musical Art," and the Rev. Baring Gould on "The Folk-Music of the West of England," an interesting subject apart from its local associations, upon which the lecturer is so eminent an authority. One afternoon will be devoted to a debate, to be opened by Mr. S. S. Stratton, of Birmingham, on "That the time has arrived when the recognition and support accorded by the Municipalities of this country to Literature and Painting should be extended to the Art of Music." In addition to the usual social functions, excursions, &c., and the inevitable banquet, there will be a concert given by the combined choral societies in the Three Towns, with the aid of a full orchestra, no less than six local musicians being announced to conduct, though probably not all at the same time. As a possible antidote to any excess of jollification on the part of the less seriously disposed amongst the assembled members, if not to entice the sons and daughters of Orpheus from the arms of Morpheus, Professor Prout will give four recitals of Bach's "48"—presumably in doses of a dozen at a time—on the four successive mornings of the Conference, at the hour of 9.30 a.m.! Hoe! Hoe! to use an ejaculation having a decidedly Plymouth sound.

A resumé of works performed at 200 Symphony concerts between October 14, 1895, and December 12, 1898, by the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra, has been issued. From this interesting document it appears that there have been performed within the above-mentioned period: 98 different overtures, 74 symphonies, 37 orchestral suites, 31 suites de ballet, 52 concertos, and 85 various pieces. Eight works have been composed specially for these concerts by Mr. T. Arthur Burton, one by Mr. W. H. Speer, and one by Mr. J. Horspool, and performed for the first time. Mr. August Manns has conducted on two occasions, and Mr. Edward German discharged a similar duty when his own compositions formed a complete first part of one of the concerts. A spirit of commendable eclecticism has prevailed in the choice of works performed, young composers like Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor (whose "Four Characteristic Waltzes" were given on the 5th ult.) having every encouragement. Hearty congratulations to Bournemouth upon its municipal orchestra, and in no less measure to Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun., who, in his official capacity of Musical Director to the Corporation, is the excellent conductor of the orchestra at that popular seaside resort.

Dr. Walford Davies informs us of a proposed new departure in connection with the musically-famous Temple Church, of which he is the organist. It is intended to give, on one Sunday afternoon in each month, a special musical service of an oratorio nature, when portions of an oratorio or a complete short cantata will be performed. Evensong will be shortened on these particular Sundays: and, although we have no direct information on the point, it may be assumed that the choir will be considerably augmented on these special occasions. Dr. Walford Davies hopes to include in the series the Passions Music and some of the lesser known sacred works of Bach and others, for the proper rendering of which, he thinks, the Temple Church is eminently suited. The first of the services is announced to take place on the 8th inst. at 3 p.m., when Parts I. and II. of Bach's Christmas Oratorio will be sung.

Good news for work-a-day Londoners! The London County Council, at its meeting on the 13th ult., agreed to spend £9,000 for providing music in the parks and open spaces of the metropolis during the season of 1899. Their Parks Committee originally proposed an expenditure of £7,800; but the Council referred back the report, with the above result. High rates, or low rates, this, at any rate, is first-rate.

In reference to a paragraph that appeared in our September issue (p. 598), Mr. H. F. Frost informs us that he did not resign his appointment of musical critic of the Athenæum on account of ill-health, but because he found it impossible to do justice to two such important newspapers as the Standard and the Athenæum. We gladly make this correction and apologize for any inconvenience the mis-statement may have caused.

Mr. Jean de Reszke has been appointed manager of a new opera house to be built in Paris and to be opened during the Exposition year.

A ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY'S REHEARSAL.

The chorus rehearsals of the Royal Choral Society take place on Monday evenings throughout the season. On these occasions the gigantic Royal Albert Hall presents a very different appearance, especially internally, from that of a concert night. The building is so vast that even the presence of the 800 or more singers, and of their friends who occupy seats in the arena, fails to change the atmosphere of desolation and weirdness caused by the shadowed auditorium and the echoes that come and go.

Before proceeding to describe one of these rehearsals, it may be interesting to give some particulars of the huge choir that assembles week by week under Sir Frederick Bridge's conductorship. Its present strength is 826 voices, and when the superintendents are added the force totals 842, distributed thus:—

Sopranos	242
Altos	174
Tenors	174
Basses	236
Total	826
Superintendents	16
Grand total	842

At both rehearsals and concerts this vocal force is divided into two complete choirs of equal strength, called "Right Choir" and "Left Choir," so named from their positions right and left of the conductor, and separated by the orchestra and organ. The advantage of this arrangement is obvious when double choruses, such as those in "Israel in Egypt," are sung; moreover, the general effect is better in the ordinary choruses than if the parts were arranged in the usual way. On rehearsal nights the space occupied by the orchestra is vacant. The rules of the Society are very simple. The possession of "a good and powerful voice, a general knowledge of music and the power of reading vocal music at first sight" are primary essentials to membership. No subscription is required, and the Society provides the necessary music. The ladies "must appear at the concerts in white dresses and wear the coloured sashes of their respective choirs (right choir, red; left choir, blue)"; the gentlemen, of course, have to be clad in the garb known as "swallow tails." A complimentary concert ticket for a friend is given at the last rehearsal preceding a concert, but only on condition that the member of the choir so favoured takes part in the concert. The secretary of the choir is Mr. John Hedley, an old Sacred Harmonic choirman, to whom we are indebted for much of the foregoing information. Mr. Hedley is not only a model disciplinarian and an excellent man of business, but his personality is the very essence of unfailing courtesy and dignified urbanity.

At the hour of rehearsal, every member of the choir being already seated, Sir Frederick Bridge takes his place at the conductor's desk. The accompaniment used at the rehearsals is that of the organ, most efficiently played by Mr. H. L. Balfour, organist to the Society. Having an instrument of such immense resource as that provided by Mr. Willis for the building, an organist might be strongly tempted to assert himself too prominently, but Mr. Balfour commendably exercises artistic restraint in his admirable accompaniments. The choir, who sing from chorus parts, remain seated during the whole of the practice.

The rehearsal begins with Mendelssohn's "Elijah," a work familiar enough to the choir, but which goes through the needful process of "touching-up" preparatory to its performance on the following Thursday. Sir Frederick starts with the first chorus of Part II., "Be not afraid." He insists upon hearing the first note (quaver) of the fugal subject—"Though thousands languish," &c., and a distinct emphatic enunciation of the word "languish." The conductor's humorous remarks throughout the rehearsal are very amusing. In regard to the coughing, he says: "Now, have your cough out," and, after the necessary pause for that operation, he adds: "that's all right; there's no reason for coughing, it's a beautiful night." He warns his singers not to get slovenly in the fugue and says: "One eye on your book and one eye on me: if everybody would only do their very best—in fact, do as I do" (laughter). In the scene with the Queen, he asked for the word "perish" to be sung with ferocious effect, "as if you meant to kill him, not somebody else." When the chorus "Woe unto him" was taken, Sir Frederick observed that he would tell them a secret for all the world to know. "It's no use to mince matters," he said; "at the last performance, entirely owing to my fault, I did not give you a fair start, and consequently some enthusiastic basses bawled out 'woe!'" Much care was devoted to "He, watching over Israel." A slight crescendo was suggested for the repeated notes of the opening phrase, and in regard to the diminuendo after the last forte (near the end) the conductor said: "That diminuendo was not thrown in by the printer's devil for his own amusement; we must not reduce the tone too soon, it must be done gradually." "A large body of voices singing pianissimo is worth all the fortissimos in the world," was the sagacious observation on "He that shall endure to the end." A "tremendous crescendo" was required in "Behold, God the Lord," and a special point was made of the word "But." Just before the major portion a fine effect was attained at the skip of the octave D sharp (in unison) by the fortissimo being held with full tone to the very end of the sustained note. "Tenors, you sang a good G then (bar 12 of "Holy, holy"). I wish they were always like that; your sweet voices don't reach me when the solo soprano is standing beside me," a little sally which created much merriment.

"Wobbly," was the conductor's criticism on "Go, return upon thy way." "I know that there is great enmity between the two choirs; it's lucky the organ is between you. I know which is the best side; mind those dotted notes." No. 38 ("Then did Elijah"). "Don't push this on too quick. I want to hear the letter 'r' in torches; it has a wonderful effect. Don't sing it 'tawchez'—you can manage to screw an 'r' out." The passage "And when the Lord would take him away to heaven" was considered by Sir Frederick to be one of the grandest points in the work. The fine effect of the following chord of A on the word "Lo" was also commented upon. In the passage "with fiery, fiery horses," the singers were urged to imagine the trappings of the horses—and the three notes to the three syllables of the word fi-e-ry were insisted upon. "I daresay," said Sir Frederick, "that you'd like to go home and sit by your own *fire*sides; but you won't go yet!" He succeeded in getting a very dramatic rendering of the concluding bars of this chorus—"one of the few instances of unison in the work."

Sir Frederick Bridge then turned to a few weak places in the first part. The most interesting feature was his reading of the first Baal chorus, which he took more slowly than some conductors. He said: "Mendelssohn was afraid that it would be taken too quickly, therefore he marked it grave e maestoso. It is not a rollicking chorus of drunken revellers, but that of a body of worshippers prostrating themselves before their idol." There can be no question that the chorus gains greatly in impressiveness when interpreted from this standpoint. The effect of the too often neglected sfs followed by >, that Mendelssohn has plentifully supplied in this chorus, was very properly commented upon as an essential feature of the chorus.

Space does not permit of our referring to the latter part of the rehearsal, at which the choruses of Beethoven's Choral Symphony were run through. It is no wonder that country conductors frequently attend these rehearsals to pick up various hints and suggestions that may be useful to them. One thing that strikes the listener is the tact displayed by Sir Frederick Bridge in managing his vast choir and keeping them in the best possible humour during the rehearsal. It might reasonably be assumed that the conductor would feel very tired after the physical exertion of controlling so large a number of voices spread over so wide an area; but at the conclusion of the rehearsal he informs us that not only does he feel wonderfully fresh, but that he always sleeps better on a Monday than on any other night in the week. "It does me good," says the genial Knight as he bids us a cheery "good night."

CHURCH MUSIC.

The Advent performance at St. Paul's Cathedral of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was not shorn of any of its well-known features. Sir George Martin again amply demonstrated his ability as conductor and Mr. Charles Macpherson presided at the organ. The Cathedral choir evinced thorough knowledge of its duties. Under such circumstances the moving solos and imposing choruses exercised their accustomed effect upon a vast congregation.

Special Orchestral Services are being given in Brixton Church, the band consisting of professional players. Upon a recent occasion, under the conductorship of Mr. D. Redman, orchestral music by Schubert and Mendelssohn was included in the service.

Two musical recitals, to quote the somewhat new title, were lately given in Oldham Parish Church, under the direction of Mr. Sydney Franz Somers, who also acted as organist.

The increasing desire to fitly observe All Saints' Day now on November 1, but anciently perhaps still more appropriately held on May 1, is one of the many signs of the earnest Church life of our time. The Sydney (N.S.W.) papers give an account of the important choral service held on November 1 at All Saints' Church, Petersham, Sydney—an annual celebration. The Evening Canticles were S. Wesley's in G. The anthems were "Trust ye in the Lord for ever" (E. H. Turpin) and a new work specially composed for the occasion by Mr. F. W. Harmer, "Who are these like stars appearing."

From Barbadoes comes an account of a special musical service in St. Michael's Cathedral, including vocal solos, anthems, and organ pieces. It is satisfactory to note the increase in the number of these interesting and impressive occasions in our far off colonies.

The service lists of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, are interesting not only as affording evidence of admirably planned choral services, but as also showing us something of the progress of sacred music as employed in a typical church by "our kith and kin across the sea." The selection of music for Advent and Christmastide is in excellent taste. There is a large mixture of music by English and American composers, both vocal and instrumental, an indication among many evidences of the possibility of an Anglo-Saxon School.

At St. Asaph's Cathedral Bach's "Christmas" Oratorio (Parts I. and II.) was sung on Wednesday evening, the 21st ult., by a choir of eighty voices, accompanied by the organ and a string orchestra. Dr. A. W. Wilson, organist of the Cathedral, conducted, and Mr. R. H. Whale presided at the organ.

ORGAN MUSIC.

The Organists' Association of the city of Wakefield and District has been in existence some six years or more, and is one of the leading tokens of this healthy movement in the direction of that form of self-respect known politically as "decentralisation." The Wakefield organists have a scheme wise and moderate in its scope, the objects of the Association being the promotion of friendly intercourse and the interchange of information and opinion on musical matters; four ordinary meetings are held annually. Such an Association crosses the path of no central body of any kind; it is, on the contrary, not only of local value and usefulness, but is in many ways calculated to advance every department of musical culture, both provincial and metropolitan.

An organ recital was given at St. John's Episcopal Church, Perth, by Mr. F. Midgley, on the 14th ult. The scheme included Mendelssohn's Fourth Sonata, which, when the six organ sonatas were first published, was accepted by many as the most effective, taking all its movements into consideration, a verdict considerably changed when Mr. Best, at the Exhibition of 1851, stirred the organ-playing world by the more noble Sonata forming No. 1 of the memorable collection.

Mr. E. H. Lemare's programme at the recital at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on the 3rd ult., included, among other good things, a Concert-overture in C minor by Mr. Alfred Hollins, shortly to appear in the "Recital Series," and a Cantilène in F minor, also in manuscript, by another distinguished blind organist, Mr. Wolstenholme.

At Sherborne School, one of the public schools where music seems to be cultivated with exceptional earnestness, Mr. B. G. Thome lately gave recitals, the programmes of which included Mr. E. H. Thorne's Overture for the organ; a Postlude, by Gordon Saunders; "Three Impressions" for the organ, by Roeckel: Canto Funèbre, Canto amoroso, and Canto drammatico; Guilmant's Sonata, No. 4; and Fantasia in A minor (Lemmens), a not very frequently heard specimen of the late Belgian master. Mr. R. E. Parker's programme at Wilmslow included Offertoire in D flat (Salomé) and "In Paradisum" (Dubois), both popular specimens of the modern French organ school.

Dr. G. H. Smith's programme, played at Sculcoates Church, Hull, on the 3rd ult., included Rheinberger's fine Sonata in A minor, and at another performance, on the 17th ult., the same player's list of pieces contained Cantilène (Mailly) and Guilmant's "Fantasia on two Christmas Carols." At St. Bede's Church, Liverpool, Mr. Ernest H. Smith carried out an excellent idea—a "Henry Smart" recital programme. The scheme included the well-known Andante in A and the stately Postlude in D.

A re-opening recital was recently given at Leeds Town Hall by the new organist, Mr. H. A. Fricker, who played an excellent programme of music (old and new), chiefly written for the instrument. Mr. Fricker abundantly proved his skill as a performer before a large and interested audience. The whole of the interior of the organ has practically been rebuilt by Messrs. Abbott and Smith, the local builders, nearly all the flue stops being provided with new pipes, whilst the pedal organ is fitted with new soundboards, and such soundboards as are again utilised have been re-made and re-palletted. The echo organ, which was originally placed in the swell box, has been removed and made to form a new manual. The instrument, as it now stands, is one of five complete manuals.

London is indeed the city of fine organs, and additions to the number of effective church organs are constantly being made. The new instrument, built by Messrs. Norman and Beard, for St. Saviour's Church, Walton Place, Brompton, is approaching completion. The scheme includes some forty-seven registers, of which thirty-seven are sounding stops, together with an ample provision of composition pedals. A satisfactory feature is a proportionate pedal organ, including a register of thirty-two feet tone.

At the Parish Church, Ealing, Mr. Owen H. Mead recently gave a recital, leading features of his scheme being Bach's fine Fugue in D major and Boëlmann's "Suite Gothique," a work now worthily commanding the attention of many skilled organ-players.

Messrs. Norman and Beard are to build a new and large organ in connection with the further restoration of the fine old Parish Church of Chelmsford, an instrument which will be heard under the skilful hands of the esteemed organist, Mr. F. R. Frye.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" formed an attractive combination at the Albert Hall on the 8th ult. Under the safe guidance of Sir Frederick Bridge, both band and chorus were on this occasion quite equal to the requirements of the two works. The expectations of a satisfactory rendering of the exacting vocal passages in Beethoven's masterpiece were abundantly realised, all the more notable points being taken up with a firmness and decision bespeaking assurance of a triumphant result, and there was no indication of flagging energy towards the conclusion. The purely instrumental movements were carefully played, but the effect suffered from the unsuitability of the building for expressive compositions of this nature. The solo vocal quartet consisted of Miss Alice Esty, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Daniel Price—each highly efficient. By all concerned the ever-welcome "Lobgesang" was given with splendid impulse alternating with devotional feeling. Thus, once again, the popularity of the work was fully maintained.

MR. ROBERT NEWMAN'S SYMPHONY AND WAGNER CONCERTS.

In another column we refer to the programme of the Symphony concert of November 26, when the orchestra was in superb form and Mr. Wood surpassed himself in the Wagner selection, especially the "Parsifal" Prelude, the "Charfreitagszauber," and the "Meistersinger" Overture, which we heard for the third time that week, and which seemed as fresh and as great as ever. In Saint-Saëns's "Le Rôuet d'Omphale" the orchestra displayed a delicacy and refinement and, when required, a sonority which even M. Lamoureux could not have surpassed. Miss Blauvelt was heard in Ambroise Thomas's "Connais-tu le pays" and in a rollicking air from Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers," which her exquisite art made quite enjoyable.

At the last Symphony concert, on the 10th ult., we heard a Requiem Mass by M. Edmond Depret, a Belgian composer, born in 1827, whose fame in his native country seems to rest chiefly on this work and on his exploits with "bristly monsters with cruel tusks." He is a mighty Nimrod, evidently, but only an uninspired, loquacious music-maker. His Mass is quite a respectable exercise, but few duller works can ever have been presented to an apathetic audience. Misses Ella Russell and Ada Crossley, Messrs. Ben Davies, Charles Tree, and Daniel Price struggled bravely with the solos and sang really well; while the chorus and orchestra were quite adequate.

Tschaïkowsky's "Francesca da Rimini" came as almost a welcome contrast to the Mass. We do not love this piece, as we have said on previous occasions and now repeat more emphatically. It is a work of genius, but of genius that is akin to madness. "Semel insanivimus omnes." We are all mad at some time, and Tschaïkowsky was mad, as men of genius sometimes are, when he wrote this. The opening wail for the brass over the low A flat of the basses and bassoons is a real stroke of genius, and the middle portion (love-music) is almost, but not quite, Tschaïkowsky at his best. But all the fff hurly-burly of the "infernal hurricane" is not only downright ugly, but positively comic in its vain attempts to be impressive by depicting what is utterly outside the province of music.

It was a wonderful performance, but this kind of music only startles and interests on a first hearing. The second time it bores, and the third time it amuses or becomes a nuisance. Great music forsooth! Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite and the March and Chorus from "Tannhäuser" completed the programme.

At the final Wagner concert, on November 28, Mr. Louis Frölich, a highly promising young bass and an earnest young artist, sang "Wotan's Abschied" ("Walküre"). Except that his fine voice is as yet hardly powerful enough to battle against the strenuous surging of Mr. Wood's magnificent orchestra, nor his style sufficiently broad and elevated to suggest the largeness of utterance of a god in distress, his performance merits ungrudging praise. The "Rienzi" and "Flying Dutchman" Overtures, the lovely "Siegfried" Idyll (most efficacious of musical disinfectants!), the brilliant "Epithalamium" (most exhilarating and exulting of wedding pieces), and the everlasting "Ride of the Valkyries" formed the Wagner selection and were superbly played. The C minor Symphony received a sonorous, rugged interpretation, in which pathos, humour, and triumphal transport were happily blended.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The special Saturday afternoon concert, of which the bright particular star was M. Paderewski, took place on the 10th ult. The Polish artist played with masterly brilliancy the solo part of Beethoven's E flat Concerto and gave his usual individual readings of pianoforte pieces by Schubert, Chopin, and Liszt. A very fine reading was given under Mr. Manns's direction of Schumann's Symphony in D minor, and the programme also contained the first performance of three orchestral pieces entitled "Polish Sketches," by Miss Maud Matras. It may be remembered that a Ballade for violin and orchestra by this lady was performed last year at a Queen's Hall Promenade concert and excited favourable comment. The "Polish Sketches" were written last year and are dedicated to M. Paderewski, whose high opinion of them doubtless conduced to their acceptance by Mr. Manns. They are laid out for full orchestra and show considerable melodic inventiveness, combined with appreciative knowledge of orchestral effect. The pieces were most favourably received, and Miss Matras, who was born in 1876 of a French father and English mother, was induced to acknowledge the prolonged applause. The vocalist was Miss Florence Monteith, who is to be commended for introducing a beautiful song entitled "Air des adieux," from Tschaïkowsky's "Jeanne d'Arc."

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The chief event of Mr. Arthur Chappell's familiar concerts during the past month was the second performance in London of Herr Ernst von Dohnányi's MS. Pianoforte Quintet, which was played by the composer, Lady Hallé, and Messrs. Haydn Inwards, Gibson, and Paul Ludwig, on the 17th ult. This fine work was described in last month's issue of The Musical Times (p. 805), on its first performance in England, on November 16 last, at the Hampstead Conservatoire, and it is therefore unnecessary to say more now, save that a second hearing confirms the favourable opinion already expressed. Few works of this class have had a more cordial reception, the same appreciation being extended to its gifted composer. In addition to being associated with Lady Hallé in a very fine interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 96), Herr Dohnányi subsequently played several pianoforte solos, including an exquisitely finished rendering of Rubinstein's Barcarolle in G minor and a brilliant MS. Capriccio from his own pen.

Herr Dohnányi was the solo pianist at the concert on November 26 last, when he aroused much enthusiasm by his interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3), and assisted with Lady Hallé and Mr. Paul Ludwig in an effective interpretation of Brahms's masterly Pianoforte Trio in C (Op. 87). M. Pachmann was the pianist on the 3rd ult., and Miss Fanny Davies on the following Saturday.

The vocalists have been respectively Frau von Dulong, Miss Beatrice Spencer, Madame Blanche Marchesi, and Herr Arlberg, the last-named a new-comer.

An "extra" Monday Popular concert was given on the 12th ult., when M. Paderewski gave a remarkably brilliant reading of Schumann's Sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 11). He also played with noticeable control, with Lady Hallé and Mr. Paul Ludwig, in Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 97).

MR. FREDERICK DAWSON'S CONCERT.

Mr. Dawson had set himself a gigantic task for his second concert, on November 29. To play either of Brahms's two pianoforte concertos is generally considered more than sufficient unto the day or evening; but to perform both demands an amount of physical and intellectual strength and endurance exceedingly rare amongst pianists of any school. Neither concerto is a virtuoso piece meant in the first instance to display the soloist's technique to the utmost advantage. They are virtually symphonies with pianoforte obbligato. The pianist has to bear that fact in mind, and adjust his performance to these, from a pianist's point of view, more or less unwelcome circumstances.

There could not well be two concertos more calculated to display the pianist's musical, as distinguished from his technical development. But Mr. Dawson came out of the ordeal with great credit, since he impressed his audience quite as much by the stern and gloomy grandeur of the first concerto, and the somewhat cold and distant beauty of the companion work, as by his strength and brilliancy of technique.

Though not quite so happy in Brahms's works as in the Liszt concerto played at his previous concert, he showed once more that he has acquired the three things which, according to Von Bülow, are necessary for a pianist to learn—viz., technique, technique, and again technique. His performances were brilliant and powerful; occasionally he displayed almost too much muscular strength; but he is too good a pianist to spoil himself by an over-indulgence in mere fisticuffs. His success was as great as at his first concert.

Professor Karl Klindworth conducted with all the vigilance and enthusiasm we admired before, though, with but one rehearsal, he could not be expected to produce the finish obtained at the first concert, when better known and easier works constituted the programme. His readings of Wagner's "Huldigungsmarsch" and "Tannhäuser" Overture, however, were marked by rare breadth and dignity.

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND CONCERT.

It would be difficult to frame a programme appealing to a wider circle of cultivated concert patrons than that submitted by Cavalière L. Zavertal at Queen's Hall on the 9th ult. Commencing with the March from "Tannhäuser" (played with infectious spirit) and ending with the "Angelus" and "Fête Bohême" from Massenet's "Scènes Pittoresques," it had for central features Beethoven's Second Symphony, the Bourrée and Gigue from German's music written for the revival of "Much Ado about Nothing" at the St. James's Theatre, some of Bizet's "L'Arlésienne" pieces, and the ancient dance, "La Cinquantaine," of Gabriel-Marie. Such a scheme, carried through with the ability characteristic of the Royal Artillery band and of its zealous conductor, could not but command hearty approval. Though no impediments to smooth progress awaited the executants in the symphony, it is only just to refer to the delicacy and grace with which the lighter phases of the composition were interpreted. But the hold of Cavalière Zavertal over his forces was even more effectively manifested in Bizet's strains, pulsating with Southern ardour. All the glowing effects in the score were admirably brought out, and each section of the work received ample justice.

THE FRANSELLA ORCHESTRA.

The newly-formed Fransella Orchestra gave its first performance on November 25, at St. James's Hall. This body of performers has been organised by Mr. Albert Fransella, the well-known flautist, and consists of twenty-six players, selected from the Philharmonic, Richter, Queen's Hall, and Crystal Palace orchestras. Although the instruments forming the orchestra are insufficient for the due rendering of much modern music, there is a large number of pieces, especially of light character, for which it is quite adequate, and when necessary extra players could easily be engaged. The chief aims of Mr. Fransella are to supply amateur choral societies with a competent orchestra for their public performances, and to supplant the foreign bands in variegated costumes at garden parties and "at-homes." Judging by the excellent performances at the opening concert, Mr. Fransella should have little difficulty in achieving his objects.

MR. NEWLANDSMITH'S SCANDINAVIAN ORCHESTRA.

It may be well to state at once that Mr. Newlandsmith's recently formed "Scandinavian String Orchestra," of some thirty players, is, judging from a perusal of the list of members, as English in character as the termination of its founder and conductor's name. At its first performance, on the 7th ult., at St. James's Hall, works by English composers seem to have been carefully avoided, which was a pity, for such a procedure was likely to retard the flow of sympathy towards the new venture, but neither was there any orchestral work by a Scandinavian composer.

The orchestral works were rendered with enjoyable precision, crispness, and delicacy; especially Fuchs's Serenade Suite, which was delightfully interpreted. Two first performances in England were claimed: an Intermezzo for strings, organ, and harp, by M. Louis H. Hillier, by whom it was conducted, and a Ballade for strings, by M. de Greef. The Ballade is based upon a Flemish folk-song and is written in variation form. It is decidedly clever, and contains many effective passages.

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mr. Edward Elgar's cantata "Caractacus" was introduced to London by Mr. Betjemann at the Highbury Athenæum, on November 29, when the eminently favourable verdict delivered at the Leeds Festival was fully endorsed. This was not a surprising result for a work so well calculated to bear the closest examination. The solos are thoroughly appropriate to the characters, the orchestration is picturesque, and the choral writing displays a wealth of resource creating the expectation of even greater things from Mr. Elgar in this branch of his art than he has yet accomplished. The performance under Mr. Betjemann, who had evidently bestowed considerable care upon the preparation of the work, was decidedly meritorious. The chorus sang with point and determination, making fewer mistakes than might have been anticipated on first grappling with such complicated music. As regards the soloists, Madame Medora Henson as Eigen, Mr. Edward Lloyd as Orbin, and Mr. Andrew Black as Caractacus repeated the successes they originally gained; and Mr. Charles Copland justified his selection for the Arch-Druid.

BRITISH CHAMBER CONCERTS.

The fifth season of this praiseworthy and patriotic enterprise was concluded on the 14th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. At the preceding concert, on November 30, first performances were given of three new works: a Sonata in E for pianoforte and violin by Mr. Alfred Wall, a String Quartet in E minor by Mr. W. Y. Hurlstone, and a "Duo Appassionata" for two pianofortes (Op. 26) by Mr. Edwin Evans. The first two of these merit notice. Mr. Wall's sonata is unpretentious, but it is pleasing music and the writing is ingenious and flowing, and in the third movement expressive. The quartet is a clever work. It is in three movements, respectively headed Allegro, Allegretto ma non troppo, and Allegro giusto, the first and last of which are based upon suggestive themes which are developed in an interesting manner and with notable command of contrapuntal resource. The rendering of the Sonata, by Madame Frickenhaus and Mr. Jasper Sutcliffe, was better than that of the quartet by Messrs. Jasper Sutcliffe, Wallace Sutcliffe, Leonard Fowles, and A. Williams, the playing of this party being at times rough and out of tune. Mr. Owen Morgan was the vocalist.

The concert on the 14th ult. was opened by a meritorious interpretation, by Messrs. Ernest Fowles, Jasper Sutcliffe, Leonard Fowles, and Paul Ludwig, of Gerard F. Cobb's Pianoforte Quartet in E (Op. 34), and was made specially distinctive by the first performance of a Sonata in D minor (Op. 28) for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor. This work fully maintains the reputation which this gifted young composer has so early acquired. The music seems to have much to express, and the three movements, severally headed Allegro ma non tanto, "Lament" Larghetto, and Allegro vivo con fuoco, the last terminating with a mournful section entitled Alla moresco, tell a tale that appears to range over the whole scale of sentiment. The "Lament" is really beautiful and seems to "give sorrow words." The work was sympathetically interpreted by Mr. Ernest Fowles and Mr. Jasper Sutcliffe, and should be heard again at an early date. Miss Nelly Raeberg was an acceptable vocalist.

ELDERHORST CHAMBER CONCERTS.

THE first series of Mr. Elderhorst's commendable chamber concerts was terminated on the 7th ult. The principal works on the last three programmes were respectively Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 66) and Tschaïkowsky's Pianoforte Trio in A minor (Op. 50); Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1) and Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat; Schubert's String Quintet in C (Op. 163) and Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81). The comprehensiveness of this selection merits recognition and warm praise, and if this principle is pursued it will undoubtedly conduce to the development of interest in the enterprise. The ensemble has always been good, sometimes excellent, and the pianists who have appeared were Mr. Otto Hegner, Herr Friedheim, and Herr Alfred Reisenauer. Solo pieces have added to the attractiveness of the performances. The vocal element also has been of considerable interest, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Kennerly Rumford, and Mrs. Helen Trust having been engaged for the respective concerts and their songs having been well chosen, Mr. Rumford's magnificent interpretation of Brahms's "Four Serious Songs" being memorable.

CURTIUS CONCERT CLUB.

THE musical meetings on Wednesday evenings instituted by Mr. Schulz-Curtius at the Princes' Galleries (Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours) have been well attended during the past month. The programmes have possessed musical interest and have been interpreted in a finished manner by artists, the majority of whom enjoy a well earned reputation.

The concert on November 30 last was provided by the Messrs. Walenn, whose programme included Edward Schütt's Pianoforte Trio in D minor, the keyed instrument being played by Mr. Herbert Parsons. Mrs. Helen Trust and Mr. Arthur Walenn were the vocalists.

The evening of the 7th ult. acquired distinction by the first performance of a sonata for violin and pianoforte in A (Op. 70), by Professor Villiers Stanford. The first movement opens with a graceful subject of flowing character, to which, in the course of development, is imparted considerable intensity of expression of an impassioned nature. The next number is the gem of the work. It is an Adagio molto, which might well be named a "Lament." The cry of the Irish "banshee" seems to be heard now and again, and the music makes one think of many things that "might have been." A vivacious Prestissimo which follows effectually sweeps away "pale melancholy," and the spirit of light-heartedness thus invoked stays and animates the final movement, an Allegretto of genial spirit, somewhat lacking in contrast to the preceding number, but containing many touches which reveal the hand of its creator. The work, sympathetically interpreted by Herr Johann Kruse and Madame Fischer-Sobell, was very warmly received.

The concert on the 14th ult. was given by Mr. G. A. Clinton, who, assisted by Miss Llewela Davies and Messrs. F. Griffith, W. M. Malsch, E. Davies, Julian Egerton, Borsdorf, T. Busby, T. Wotton, and E. F. James, secured excellent performances of Beethoven's Quintet in E flat (Op. 16) for pianoforte, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon; Mozart's wind Octet in C minor, composed in Vienna in 1782; and a melodious Sextet in B flat (Op. 6), by Thuille, for pianoforte, flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon. Some songs were sung in a refined and agreeable style by Miss Marguerite Haering.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

THE Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society gave the first Subscription concert of its sixteenth season on the 5th ult., at the Queen's Hall, and, under the able conductorship of Mr. Arthur W. Payne, gave a praiseworthy interpretation of Beethoven's Symphony in E flat (No. 3). Effective performances were also secured of the Prelude to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Massenet's vivacious orchestral suite "Scènes Pittoresques." Mr. Bertie Withers played with great skill the solo part of M. Saint-Saëns's Violoncello Concerto in A minor and Madame Marie Hooton sang. The singing of the male choir was excellent, and beautifully finished renderings were given, under the direction of Mr. Munro Davison, of "The Mariner's Return" (Hoesler), "Breathe soft, ye winds" (J. B. Calkin), "The Love Spell" (T. B. Evison), "Lady, see on every side" (Luca Marenzio), and "I loved a lass" (S. Reay).

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society also chose Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony for its pièce de résistance at the opening, on the 7th ult., of its twenty-seventh season, at the Queen's Hall. The reading secured by Mr. Ernest Ford and his forces was very effective and meritorious. The other orchestral works were Massenet's Overture to Racine's tragedy "Phèdre," the Passepied from Messager's opera "La Basoche," and the sparkling Overture to Auber's "Masaniello," all of which were rendered with admirable precision and commendable delicacy in the piano passages. The brilliant pianoforte playing of Miss Maud Agnes Winter and the singing of Miss Gertrude Drinkwater and Mr. Hirwen Jones also contributed to the success of the evening.

The Westminster Orchestral Society, under the baton of Mr. Stewart Macpherson, began its fourteenth season on the 14th ult., at the Westminster Town Hall, and is to be commended for reviving Raff's Fourth Symphony in G minor (Op. 167), which, although of unequal value, well merits occasional performance. Saving a tendency now and again of the strings to get out of tune, the work was excellently interpreted, and gave manifest pleasure to the large and attentive audience. Spirited renderings were also given of Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" Overture and the Overture to Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor." Miss Maude Wilson, a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, played the solo part of Beethoven's Third Pianoforte Concerto in C minor with noteworthy clearness of touch and purity of style, and Madame Kate Bensberg sang tastefully Liszt's beautiful setting of "Die Loreley" and Schubert's "Sehnsucht" and "Haiden Röslein."

HERR VON DOHNÁNYI'S RECITALS.

AT his two recitals given in St. James's Hall, on November 28 and the 12th ult., very large and enthusiastic audiences testified to their admiration of Herr von Dohnányi's gifts, both as an interpretative and a creative artist. In the former capacity his brilliant technique, his rare command over all gradations of tone, his wonderful chord and part-playing, the smoothness of his scales (both single and double), his freedom and accuracy in passage-playing deserve, and have received, the highest encomiums. But with this young artist these excellent qualities of technique are but a means to an end, and his interpretative gifts are no less remarkable. It can serve no purpose to go through his programmes piece by piece, and we can only single out some of his most striking achievements. Amongst these we place his superb performance of Liszt's much maligned Sonata in B minor, which he played with a poetry and charm, an insight and grandeur that deserve the epithet "great." The work appeared clothed in quite a new beauty and it impressed us as never before. The enormous difficulties of Brahms's Variations and Fugue on a theme by Handel (Op. 24) were surmounted with perfect ease and with exceptional clearness, while in Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3) he passed the supreme test to which an artist can put himself, for he played the beautiful work with a restraint and an evident appreciation of the composer's meaning that were delightful.

As a composer of three most artistic and effective "Intermezzi" he made the liveliest impression. They are no mere pieces for the virtuoso-like display of an agile technique, but they reveal qualities of brain and heart in the composer that augur well for his future. In turns brilliant, dignified, pathetic, and charming (in the best sense of that much abused word), they show a feeling for abstract beauty and a sane, healthy tone quite rare in these hysterical days. His Variations and Fugue on a theme by "E. G.," which he played at his last recital, are quite masterly and beautiful. These are strong epithets, but not a whit too strong. In our last issue we hailed the young composer as a coming man. After hearing further specimens of his creative talent we are even more strongly convinced that he will not disappoint us, if he will but have the strength of character to resist the temptations that beset the life of a virtuoso, and will use his rare creative gifts for the lasting benefit of his fellow men.

RECITALS.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Frederiksen, at their seventh annual concert, on November 30, at the Steinway Hall, played, for the first time in England, a "Rhapsodie Suédoise" (Op. 59) by M. Emil Sauret. The work is written for violin solo and orchestra, and is based upon Swedish folk-tunes. These are successively announced and treated with sundry variations which contain some effective passages for the solo instrument. But apart from the opportunities thus afforded for executive display, and the interest natural to the folk-tunes, the piece possesses little musical value. Nothing can be said of the orchestration of the work, as this portion was played on a pianoforte. Mr. Frederiksen, however, did justice to the violin part and was much applauded. The programme also included Raff's Pianoforte Trio in G (Op. 112), in which the concert-givers were assisted by Mr. B. Patterson Parker. Madame Zippora Monteith was the vocalist.

Mr. Lane Wilson and Miss Hilda Wilson's vocal recital, on the 12th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall, proved one of the most enjoyable of the Autumn season. The latter gave a beautiful rendering of three of Dvorák's Biblical Songs, and sang three MS. songs of expressive nature and artistic character, severally entitled "A Lament," "The sweetest flower that blows," and "The fountain," by her brother, Mr. Lane Wilson. This vocalist has made notable progress in his art of late, and his interpretation of Carl Bendl's striking "Gipsy Songs" and some old English melodies was distinguished by all that makes singing enjoyable. Several duets were also rendered with delightful unanimity and finish, and agreeable variety was afforded by the pianoforte playing of Mr. Claude Pollard.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Exceptional interest pertained to the pupils' concert which took place on the 15th ult., at the Queen's Hall. On this occasion the first performance in London was given of three of the "Four Sacred Pieces" by Verdi, which were heard for the first time in England at the Gloucester Festival in September last. The settings of the "Stabat Mater" and Te Deum present difficulties which a student choir and orchestra could scarcely be expected to overcome entirely; but the works were sung with an ability and intelligence that testified to skilful training and individual ability of no mean order. Specially worthy of praise were the attack and the sympathetic singing of the contraltos and sopranos, the firmness and truth with which the high notes were held by the latter being excellent. The beautiful quartet "Laudi alla Vergine" (the hymn to the Virgin in the last canto of Dante's "Paradiso") was sung by Ethel Wood, Kelyn Williams, Julia Franks, and Margaret Nutter with a finish and depth of expression that were really astonishing. In common with its companions, the music presents many difficulties, and particularly in regard to truth of intonation, the piece being unaccompanied and some of the entrances requiring very clear and determinate mental conception of the note to be pitched. No hesitancy, however, was noticeable, the voices blended perfectly, and the quartet, which, as the work of a man in his eighty-fifth year, is simply amazing in point of freshness of conception and treatment, was sung in a manner that can only be adequately described as exquisite. An overture, entitled "In May," by Garnet W. Cox, proved a very pleasing and genial composition. The composer has headed his work by a quotation from Tennyson—

The honeysuckle round the porch has woven its wavy bow'rs, and the spirit of spring seems to have inspired the music. Percy Miles played with great intelligence and skill the solo part of the Andante and Finale from Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Violin Concerto (Op. 32) and Marguerite Elzy rendered the pianoforte portion of Liszt's Concerto in E flat with conspicuous ability. Enriqueta Crichton and C. Murray Rumsey, who sang, both reflected credit on the vocal teaching of the Institution. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted.
And by the meadow trenches blow the faint, sweet cuckoo flowers!

The usual dramatic and operatic performances at the close of the winter term took place at the Academy on the 14th and 16th ult. respectively. On the first occasion a very creditable performance was given by the female pupils of the dramatic class of an arrangement, by Mr. William Farren, of Shakespeare's "Much Ado about Nothing."

The opera chosen was Benedict's "Lily of Killarney," a good choice, for it was within the capabilities of the performers and furnished excellent opportunities for the study of lyrical singing. Alice M. Holder presented a sympathetic embodiment of the heroine, and Mrs. Julia Franks and Eleanor Nicholls were commendable as Mrs. Cregan and The Heiress respectively. Whitworth Mitton's agreeable voice was well employed in the songs assigned to Hardress, C. Murray Rumsey showed promise as Myles, and Haigh Jackson personated Danny Mann with considerable dramatic perception. A gallant attempt was made to meet the scenic requirements of the piece, and with much success; but it is obvious that it is now time that the management secured some small theatre for these performances.

The competition for the Heathcote Long Prize took place on the 8th ult., when the prize was awarded to Gerald F. Kahn, a native of London. The examiners were Messrs. Charlton T. Speer, Graham P. Moore, and Fountain Meen (chairman).—The competition for the Sainton Dolby Prize took place on the 10th ult., when the prize was awarded to Julia Franks, a native of Melbourne, Australia. The examiners were Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Charlotte Thudichum, and Mr. William Ludwig (chairman).—The competition for the Rutson Memorial Prizes took place on the 12th ult., when the prizes were awarded as follows: For sopranos, to Anna Bella McDonald, a native of Thurso, Caithness; for tenors, to R. Whitworth Mitton, a native of Manchester. The examiners were Miss Marie Fillünger, Messrs. Hirwen Jones and C. Lyall (chairman).—The competition for the Bonamy Dobree Prize took place on the 15th ult., and the prize was awarded to R. V. Tabb, a native of London. The examiners were Messrs. Henry Bramsen, Edmund Woolhouse, and W. H. Squire (chairman).—The following competitions took place on the 17th ult.: Potter Exhibition, awarded to Mabel Colyer, a native of London. The examiners were Messrs. Henry R. Eyers, Arthur O'Leary, and Walter Macfarren (chairman). Westmoreland Scholarship, awarded to George Henry Gardner, of London. The examiners were Messrs. W. Nicholl, Arthur Thompson, and Francis Korbay (chairman). Hine Prize (composition), awarded to Katie E. B. Moss, of London. The examiners were Messrs. Gerard F. Cobb, Arthur Somervell, and Edward Elgar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

A new Quintet in B minor for pianoforte and strings, by F. Gernsheim (Op. 63), was produced for the first time in London at the students' concert of the 1st ult. It is an earnest, dignified, and in parts original effort by a gifted composer, somewhat deficient in charm of theme and warmth of expression, perhaps, but full worthy of the consideration of maturer players than the five young people to whom fell the honour of its introduction to a London audience—viz., Marjorie Richardson (who was excellent in the difficult pianoforte part), Kitty Woolley, Philip Lewis, Edward Behr, and Robert Grimson. Brahms's virile Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 101) was well played by Thomas Dunhill, Helen Egerton, and Robert Grimson; while in Mozart's String Quartet in B flat, little Haydn Wood distinguished himself greatly as leader by his firm bowing, perfect intonation, rhythmical accuracy, and by his alertness generally. He is a wonderful little fellow. Herbert Fryer, an able pianist, chose for his solos two unhackneyed pieces by Stojowski (Prelude, Op. 1) and S. Coleridge-Taylor (Humoreske, Op. 31, No. 2), of which we much prefer the melodious and original jeu d'esprit of our young countryman. Harold Bealey displayed a high baritone of sympathetic quality in Gounod's song "Le Vallon," while Hilda and Muriel Foster sang Brahms's beautiful duets "Phänomen" and "Die Schwestern" (Op. 66, Nos. 3 and 1) quite beautifully.

Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" was the work chosen for the annual opera performance at the Lyceum Theatre, on the 9th ult., an ambitious choice and not altogether a wise one. The young people of the Royal College performed Mozart's "Don Giovanni" delightfully some months ago, for they were all such conventional operatic heroes and heroines. "The Flying Dutchman," on the other hand, proved tedious for exactly the same reason. We had the same artistic display of bel canto, but also the same carefully taught poses and pump-handle action; the same idiotic running across the stage in opposite directions by the lovers, when any other two lovers would have drawn nearer to each other. In fact, we had all the stereotyped operatic conventionalities which make a Wagner opera under such circumstances ridiculous. As we have already suggested, the young artists sang well, but something more than bel canto is wanted in doing justice to the dramatic intensity of Wagner's vocal writing. Of the performers Ivor Foster as the Dutchman deserves special mention as a vocalist. His voice, though not yet quite powerful enough for such a part, is of beautiful quality and well trained. His acting was somewhat amateurish. He converted his part into a splendid "thinking," as distinguished from an acting part. Eleanor Jones as Senta, Thomas Thomas as Erik, Muriel Foster as Mary, Gwilym Evans as the Steersman, and Arthur McD. Davy all sang well and acted creditably. The orchestra was excellent almost throughout, though the strings might have been increased with advantage. Professor Stanford conducted a performance which, in spite of the drawbacks indicated and a serious slip in the stage management, and considering the enormous difficulty of the task, was a praiseworthy achievement.

The final concert of the term was orchestral, and included excellent performances of Spontini's "Olympia" Overture. Schumann's ever-delightful D minor Symphony, and the Vorspiel and Liebestod from "Tristan," in which Agnes Nicholls was over-weighted as the vocalist. Kitty Woolley played Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto with good technique and beautiful expression. Robert Grimson introduced a pretty violoncello solo, "Entreaty," by Signor Piatti, and Ralph Courtier-Dutton sang the air "Vision fugitive," from Massenet's "Herodiade," with gratifying success.

The following awards were made at the conclusion of the Christmas term:—Council Exhibitions: Lucy C. Barton (singing), £5; Nicholas C. Gatty (composition), £10; Cicely R. Gleeson-White (singing), £10; Percy L. Scaife (organ), £5; Phœbe M. Walters (pianoforte), £10; Ethel Wilson (pianoforte), £10. The Hopkinson Gold Medal for pianoforte playing: Florence Smith. The Dove Prize, value £13: Eleanor Jones (singing), £6 10s.; Agnes H. Nicholls (singing), £6 10s.

"PARSIFAL" AT ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare occupies a unique position amongst London organists, for he has the courage to do things which we may safely say no colleague of his would dream of doing. Moreover, he does them in a way the masterfulness of which disarms criticism while revealing the rarest interpretative and executive gifts. His most daring as well as most successful achievement is the performance of the greater part of Act I. of Wagner's "Parsifal" without orchestra, the magnificent organ at St. Margaret's, built by Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons to his own specification, proving a remarkably efficient substitute, as played by him, for the orchestra. Of course, those who expect to hear the glow and sonority of Wagner's scoring exactly reproduced will go away disappointed; but even they will not fail to acknowledge the rare gifts required for an hour's playing of such difficult music without a break, while at the same time controlling and influencing, as a conductor must, both soloists and choir. And what splendid playing it is; what ease of manipulation, beauty of registration, and dignity of style throughout! His performance is deeply impressive even to one who has sat under the spell of the great work at Bayreuth, the mysterious and wonderful charm and, we might say, awe of which cannot be reproduced anywhere else. Mr. Frangcon-Davies as Amfortas sang superbly. His perfect mastery over the German text was as striking as his incisive but always vocal declamation, while he sang with such deep feeling as to recall some of the greatest German exponents of the magnificent part. Mr. Leo Wilson, as Gurnemanz, sang well, though a little more vigour would have improved the old knight's opening speech. Messrs. Pennington, Habbijam, and C. and F. Henry deserve a word of praise for the careful performance of the small parts allotted to them. The church was crowded to the doors, and the utter stillness of the audience a thing to hear (as the Irishman might say). It was a wonderful experience.

SCHOOL OPERETTAS.

Exceptionally interesting performances of two excellent operettas for school and class use were given on the 21st ult., at the Cripplegate Institute. The works chosen were "The Enchanted Palace" and "Cinderella," both written by Mr. Shapcott Wensley, who shows considerable skill in dramatic construction, and respectively furnished with vivacious music by Mr. Arthur Somervell and Mr. G. Jacobi. The first-named operetta is based upon the story of the "Sleeping Beauty," and its chief incidents are set forth in a manner admirably adapted to the abilities of young people. In this instance the little folks came from the Fleet Road Board School, and those amongst the audience who have vague ideas of the teaching at Board schools must have been pleasantly surprised with the efficiency shown in singing and delivery of the dialogue. Several of the exponents displayed quite a measurable quantity of dramatic talent. Among such may be mentioned Master Willie Tregale, who seemed to realize the importance of being the King's poet as fully as ever did a poet laureate. The rhythmic dance was gracefully executed by Miss Amy Merriman, and the dresses were an object lesson in obtaining picturesque effects by simple and inexpensive means. Mr. J. Harris conducted.

"Cinderella" was played by the students and pupils from Miss Franks' Training School for Kindergarten Teachers, and in a manner that testified to much individual talent and careful training and rehearsal. Miss Margaret Webster, as the father of the unamiable family, evinced considerable dramatic perception, and the two daughters, to whom Mr. Wensley has given a novel touch by endowing them with different temperaments—the one stately, the other vivacious—were cleverly embodied by Miss Irene Smith and Miss Margaret E. Nuth, the former imparting much individuality to her personation. Words of praise are also due to Miss Ethel Cook for her quiet and natural embodiment of the heroine, and especially for her charming rendering of the pathetic song, "Oh, were I a lady," in the first act, and other names worthy of mention are Miss Margaret Wilson as the Prince and Miss Suzanne Lehmann as the Fairy Godmother. The ensemble was excellent, a chattering chorus in particular being sung with a crispness and vivacity that deserve the warmest praise. The instrumental portion of the operettas were ably played by Mrs. W. G. McNaught at the pianoforte, assisted by a string quartet. Dr. McNaught conducted.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

"Every staff its own modulator" was the suggestive title of the paper read by Dr. F. J. Sawyer at the meeting of the Musical Association, on the 13th ult., at the Royal College of Organists.

The lecturer began his discourse by disclaiming all originality or copyright in what he was about to say, but claimed that his system could be used with any syllabic names or figures, and that it made pupils think for themselves while reading music at sight. The method was divided into three grades, in all of which the staff itself was regarded as a modulator. In the first grade, after the position on the staff of the common chord had been taught—i.e., that the first three notes were always a third apart and the octave notes severally on a space and line—only the key-note was permitted to remain on the blackboard, the intervals required to be sung being pointed on or between the lines of the staff itself. In the next grade the key-notes of F, C, and G, with their respective signatures, were written on the stave between double-bars with dotted lines on either side of the notes. The modulations to the dominant and subdominant of C, by means of the sharpened fourth and flattened seventh of the scale of C, were explained, and exercises pointed on the staff on the left of the dotted lines were read as flattened notes and on the right of the dotted lines as sharpened notes. In the form for the third grade the staff was extended on either side of the division until it embraced all the sharp and flat keys, and the intervals pointed as before. The minor scale could be pointed with reference to its relative major or as a tonic minor, and when a modulation to another key was effected the teacher would point from the division containing the new tonic.

At the close of the paper there ensued a somewhat animated discussion. Dr. Pearce, who occupied the chair, said that the staff could not be regarded as a complete pictorial modulator as the half-tones were not indicated. Dr. McNaught followed this up by adding that neither did the staff show the difference between major and minor thirds, and Mr. John Taylor, in a general attack, said that no provision was made for enharmonics and double sharps and flats. Other speakers were Dr. Hamilton Robinson, Mr. Venables, and Dr. Shinn, and the sum of the discussion seemed to be that each speaker was determined to follow his own method as before. Dr. Sawyer, in reply to his opponents, said that his system was chiefly designed for use in high schools and for those who could play from music but could not sing at sight. Several musical examples and proofs of the efficacy of his system were admirably sung by some of his pupils at the Royal College of Music.

THE PLAIN CHANT OF THE MIDDLE AGES.

At a meeting of the Historical Research Society, held on the 5th ult., at the Archbishop's House (Roman Catholic), Westminster, the Rev. Dom. Wilfrid Corney read a paper, entitled "Plain Chant of the Middle Ages," in which the development of the liturgical music of the Roman Church was traced in a masterly manner.

The lecturer, after briefly referring to the interest of the subject to the archæologist and the musician, said that the student who had the curiosity and the leisure to examine the many graduals would notice, in the first place, the uniformity of form which prevailed amidst the diversity of details. The MSS. of the first period—say from the eighth to the eleventh centuries—were noted by means of certain signs called "neums," which were merely an adaptation of the oratorical grave and acute accents to the requirement of the diatonic melodies. The system of neumatic notation thus created was very imperfect, for the accents applied to the chant afforded no more definite guidance to the singer than to the reader—that is to say, the acute accent indicated a rise of the voice and the grave accent a fall; but the exact diatonic interval required by the melody had to be supplied by the memory of the singer, who through a long course of study and practice had learned by heart the melodies handed down by tradition. The variety of forms they assumed in different countries was almost infinite, but to the patient investigator these divergencies were easily accounted for, and traces of their common origin were clearly discernible.

In the eleventh century we came to what might be termed the second class of MSS., in which an immense advance was made in musical notation by the neums being written on or upon certain horizontal lines traced over a liturgical text, an invention generally attributed to the Benedictine monk, Guido of Arezzo. The idea, however, was not altogether original, for before Guido's time the line drawn with a dry point on the parchment to receive the text was made use of by the musician to fix his neums; at first the note Do, or C, was established on a yellow line, and Fa, or F, on a red line; later on the colours were discarded and the letters C or F written at the commencement of the line which was to bear those notes. The establishment of this system had a very important effect on the form of the neums, tending to make them more distinctive. About the commencement of the thirteenth century the notation of the MSS. assumed a still more legible appearance. Not that there was any essential change in the system, but the points assumed an enlarged and square form from the fact that the same broad pen now used to trace the Gothic character of the text was also employed for the notation, and accordingly as the pen was held horizontally or obliquely the point assumed a square or a diamond form. It should be noticed that the forms of the ancient accents, their elongation, their inclination to the right or to the left, had entirely lost their importance, and that the whole value of the (diasematic) new system consisted in the position of the points on the graduated scale. A tailed note therefore was merely a relic of the acute accent; a diamond note a modified grave accent.

It had been stated that MSS. from the eighth to the eleventh centuries could not be interpreted. This was not correct. In the Antiphonar of Monpellier dating from the eleventh century, discovered by M. Danjon, the neum marks were accompanied by alphabetical notation, and comparison with the books of the next period showed that the text had not been changed. If the copyists of the second period placed their neums on lines, they were always the same neums, and, moreover, their interpretation of the interval was so uniform that it might be reasonably argued that their version was the strict interpretation of the melodies handed down by careful tradition. All the plain-song MSS. from the eighth to the fourteenth or fifteenth centuries of whatever nationality agreed in presenting the melodies in precisely the same form. In recent years the Benedictine monks of Solesmes had rendered signal service by the publication of their quarterly periodical, La Paléographie Musical, and this publication proved the uniformity referred to, and showed that before the invention of printing there existed throughout the Latin Church a single definite uniform body of liturgical chant extending over a period of seven or eight centuries.

The interesting question then presented itself: Was this the body of chant commonly connected with St. Gregory the Great? There was no contemporary evidence of St. Gregory's work, but tradition existed at a very early period. Egbert, Archbishop of York, writing in the middle of the eighth century, about 150 years after St. Gregory's death, referred to "Blessed Gregory and his 'Antiphony.'" Popes Adrian I. (772-795) and Adrian II. (867-872) both bore witness to the tradition, and there was a letter dated a few years later from Leo IV. (847-855), in which this Pope spoke of the sweetness of the Gregorian Song. We possessed no copy of St. Gregory's Antiphony; but John the Deacon, writing the life of the Saint somewhere about 872, distinctly told us that an authentic copy of St. Gregory's work existed in his day.

Now if the melodies contained in this authentic Antiphonar were not identical with the uniform chant found in the MSS. of that date, how were we to account for the fact that almost simultaneously all traces of this precious Antiphonar disappeared, and that in its place there sprang up a new collection of chants equally venerated and respected, and yet there was no tradition that even suggested its origin or its author, nor trace of any such revolution? The fame of St. Gregory, whose work, upon this supposition, scarcely survived two centuries, has been handed down by tradition and is still amongst us, whereas we knew nothing whatever of the genius so capable of modifying, or may be replacing, the venerated melodies of the Gregorian tradition, while for six or seven centuries the churches vied with each other in their efforts to secure authentic copies of St. Gregory's work.

With the introduction of mensural music the chant became seriously affected, and particularly by the adoption of the plain chant signs to express the new measured chant. The result of this was that the virga, or tailed note, which originally signified a high note, became a long note; the punctum, or square note, was called a "breve," and had half the time-value of the long; and the diamond punctum was called a semibreve, with half the value of the breve. The other signs of modern notation were evolved in like manner. Sometimes the perfect and imperfect measures, or what we now call triple and common time, were used together in the same chant, and in that case the colour of the notes was changed, and when a copyist had no red ink he contented himself with merely tracing the outline of the note—hence our white and black notes.

The new notation soon destroyed recollection of the neums, and no doubt when the revival of plain-song set in the attempt to read the old signs according to modern teaching added to the consequent confusion. The editions issued abounded in errors. Baini considered the best to be that published in 1614, by order of Paul V., at the Medici Press in Rome, the editor of which was probably Roger Giovanelli, successor of Palestrina in the Apostolic choir. This edition of the manual, known as the "Medicæan edition," was of singular interest, as it formed the basis of the Mechlin and the Ratisbon editions, which were now most generally used in England. The Mechlin Gradual was a modified version, and the Ratisbon claimed to be a reprint of the Medicæan, and their common origin was easily recognised; but both were unsatisfactory. In the "Liber Gradualis," first published in 1883 by the Benedictine monks of Solesmes, the ancient plain chant was restored.

BRAHMS'S ORGAN FUGUE IN A FLAT MINOR.

It is doubtful if many lovers of Brahms have ever heard the master's Organ Fugue in A flat minor, but those who attended Miss Fanny Davies's "Brahms Memorial Concert," on the 19th ult., which took place, by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Threlfall, at 19, Hyde Park Terrace, listened to the work under most favourable conditions. Mr. Threlfall has one of the most charming and commodious private music rooms in London, and it moreover contains a fine example of Mr. Hope-Jones's skill in organ building. On this instrument and amidst these congenial surroundings Sir Walter Parratt gave a very finished reading of the fugue, which so greatly interested its listeners that it was repeated. The work is remarkable for its subdued and introspective character. There is not a forte note from beginning to end, and it seems to speak in a whisper of "sessions of sweet silent thought" and to "summon up remembrance of things past." It was originally published in 1864 in a supplement of the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung; but with its signature of seven flats it is doubtful if it increased the circulation of the number in which it appeared. In some preliminary remarks Sir Walter Parratt contradicted the common belief that this was the only organ fugue left by Brahms. He said he possessed another one, and had been told that there were others on the master's shelves, a statement that will doubtless incite some music-lovers to make enquiries. The other works heard on this occasion were the Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25), which was sympathetically interpreted by Miss Fanny Davies and Messrs. Arbos, Gibson, and Whitehouse; the first set of "Liebeslieder Walzer" (Op. 52), which were effectively sung by Miss Percival Allen, Miss Beatrice Wilson, Mr. Shakespeare, and Mr. Iles, with Miss Alice Dessauer and Miss Fanny Davies at the pianoforte; three pianoforte solos, delightfully rendered by the last-named lady; and some songs, tastefully sung by Miss Louise Phillips and Mr. Shakespeare.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(By our own Correspondent.)

The American Guild of Organists has issued a circular which states that examinations of candidates will be held during the present month in various important cities throughout the country. These examinations are to be conducted by the resident founders in each city, who will report on the practical organ-playing tests, and forward the paper work to the examining committee in New York. The examinations will take place in Chicago, Detroit, Denver, Pittsburg, Norfolk, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Cleveland, Boston, San Francisco, and Syracuse.

The first general meeting of the Guild was held in New York, at the house of the warden, Dr. Gerrit Smith, on the evening of the 1st ult. Mr. Huntington Woodman read a paper on "Intelligibility and uniformity in the non-liturgical service," and there was a discussion on "The theory and practice of chanting." The first public service was held at the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn (Mr. R. Huntington Woodman, organist and choirmaster), on Thursday evening, the 15th ult. The following anthems were sung: "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous" (Martin), "Oh, joyful light" (Tours), and "The shadows of the evening hours" (Blumenthal). Mr. David N. Wood, the blind organist, and Mr. Minton Pyne, both of Philadelphia, played the organ.

The Clemsen prize medal has been awarded to Dr. Smith N. Penfield, organist of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, New York, for the best anthem submitted to the examiners.

A new and very complete organ by Muller and Abel, of New York, has been erected in St. Dominic's Church, San Francisco. The dedication services were held on November 13, under the direction of Dr. H. J. Stewart, organist and choirmaster. Mr. Walter J. Clemsen, of Taunton, Mass., the donor of the Clemsen prize medal of the Guild of Organists, has presented St. Thomas's Church, Taunton, with a new three-manual organ built by Geo. Jardine and Son, of New York. The specification is very complete, and, judging by the other Jardine instruments, Mr. Clemsen will have a fine instrument in his church. St. Paul's, Camden, N.J., has also a new Jardine organ, which is admirable in tone and provided with thoroughly satisfactory mechanical arrangements. One of the very best organs in America is that in St. Luke's, Germantown; Mr. Geo. Alexander West is organist and choirmaster, and the music there is up to a high standard of efficiency.

REVIEWS.

Novello's Part-Song Book. Nos. 782, 784-5, 787-94.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Exceptional musical interest is attached to several of the recent additions to this series. No. 782 is a four-part song entitled "Sweet day, so cool," written by George Herbert (1593-1632), and composed by Edward C. Bairstow. This is intended to be sung unaccompanied, although for practice the vocal parts are written on two staves beneath the voice parts. These are written in a flowing and melodious style, easy to read and interesting to sing. The harmonic scheme is well devised and considerable originality is shown in the closing chords. No. 784 will interest madrigal societies. It is an attractive example in this form in five parts entitled "When love and beauty," from the unpublished opera "The Sapphire Necklace," written in 1863 by Sir Arthur Sullivan. It is set out for two sopranos, alto, tenor, and bass in the key of G. The part-writing is flowing and grateful to sing, and contains some effective imitative passages. No. 785, "Wreaths for our graves," is supplied by the same composer. The words are by L. F. Massey, and in design and character the music bears a curious resemblance to the "Evening Hymn" in the author's cantata "The Golden Legend." The harmonies are rich and resonant, the parts for the sopranos and tenors being doubled. It is written in G, but a footnote directs that it should be sung unaccompanied half a tone lower. The following seven numbers, Nos. 787 to 793, have been contributed by Sir Hubert Parry, and will doubtless widely engage the attention of choral societies. The words of the first, "O Love, they wrong thee much," have been taken from an "Elizabethan Song Book," and the period has appropriately influenced the music. Independent of the interest of the part-writing, which is very great, the music is remarkable for its faithfulness to the accent and spirit of the text, and each voice part possesses sympathetic individuality. The next number, entitled "At her fair hands," is a setting of some lines by Robert Jones. This will prove a most effective part-song for well-trained choristers who can give unanimous utterance to swift changes of sentiment, and to such it may be warmly recommended. "Home of my heart" has been written by Arthur Benson, and the pleading, wistful nature of the lines find sympathetic echo in the music, and with beautiful effect in the closing bars. There is a distinct vein of humour running through the music of "You gentle Nymphs," a setting of another excerpt from an "Elizabethan Song Book," and the final bars are well calculated to put an audience on excellent terms with itself. The text of No. 791, "Come, pretty wag, and sing," is by Martin Pierson, and the music is as bright as the words are gay. It will require sharp attack and crisp singing, but practice will be well repaid. The burden of the next number, "Ye thrilled me once," written by Robert Bridges, is, "For howsoe'er man hug his care, The best of his art is gay," and this healthy sentiment permeates the music. Some effective contrasts are, however, suggested by the poet, and these have been taken full advantage of by the musician. Beaumont and Fletcher have been called upon to supply the text of the last of this set of part-songs, the text chosen being the lines beginning "Better music ne'er was known," a statement that may be applied to the strains to which they are in this instance allied. Gaiety and vivaciousness distinguish the music, and it concludes a series that certainly increases the rich store of English part-songs. Last year the Madrigal Society offered a prize for the best setting of Alfred Austin's patriotic poem "Victoria." The judges had the pleasing task of examining thirty-four compositions, and finally gave the award to Philip Armes, whose setting forms No. 794 of this publication. The music is in five parts, for two sopranos, alto, tenor, and bass, and is worthy to be ranked amongst the best of its class. The parts flow in melodious phrases, and the harmonic scheme is dignified and is carried out with solidity befitting the subject.

Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 594-5, 597-8.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Late additions to this series are of considerable interest. No. 594 is Schubert's beautiful setting of Psalm xxiii., "The Lord is my Shepherd," arranged for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, by Sir John Stainer. No words are necessary concerning this music, nor is comment required on how the ex-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral has done his work. Little also need be said with reference to the next number of this series, which comprises the anthem "Light of the world, we know Thy praise," from Edward Elgar's oratorio "The Light of Life." It will be remembered that this anthem is one of the most beautiful portions of the work, which was produced at the Worcester Festival of 1896. It demands a well-trained choir to do it justice, but the part-writing presents no exceptional difficulties, and, if well sung, the anthem would be most impressive in a sacred edifice. In No. 597 will be found an arrangement for four voices, by Sir John Stainer, of William Crotch's setting of Bishop Heber's "Prayer for Peace." The music finely expresses the sentiment of the text, and some admirable contrasts are obtained by the unaccompanied passages. No. 598, "Behold, God is great," an "anthem for Trinity Sunday or general use," composed by E. W. Naylor, is an excellent example of its class and will interest its singers. It opens with declamatory passages for the tenors and basses in unison, and is continued by others of like nature for the sopranos, tenors, and basses alternately. Subsequently the choir enters in the usual four parts, and, after a section of impressive character, concludes the anthem with a movement of a jubilant nature.

Four English Dances. By Frederic H. Cowen. Arranged for Pianoforte and Stringed Instruments by John E. West. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Cowen's "Four English Dances in the olden style" have already become favourite measures at orchestral concerts, and their charm and musical interest are too well known to need description or comment. The arrangement under notice is for first and second violins, viola, and violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment, and will doubtless be widely welcomed in many musical homes. The chief characteristics of these attractive dances have been preserved, and the music will present few difficulties to average players. They would form admirable overtures and entr'actes for amateur concerts or dramatic entertainments, and the string parts could, of course, be doubled or trebled according to the number of the players available. It should be added that each dance can be had separately, but that the four, when performed consecutively, form a fascinating suite.

O rendimi il mio Core (O give me my heart again); Se mai giungi all' Idol mio (If thou seest the lad I love dearly); Per te vive e per te more (For thee living, for thee dying). Airs by Allessandro Scarlatti. Edited by J. A. Fuller Maitland.

The Lesson (Die Lehre); The Star of Love (Der Stern der Liebe). Words by Heine. Translated by Algernon Rose. Music by Georg Liebling.

A Good-bye. Song. By Filson Young.
[Forsyth Brothers.]

All the above songs are worthy of the attention of cultured vocalists. Those by Scarlatti have been edited by Mr. Fuller Maitland from a contemporary manuscript, and the style of the old master has been carefully preserved in the arrangement of the accompaniments for the pianoforte. The songs themselves are known to most singers, but it may be useful to state that the compass of "O Rendimi" extends over an octave and a tone, from E to F sharp, and that the two latter are published in two keys.

Herr Liebling's compositions always show artistic striving, and "The lesson" and "The Star of Love" are in his best vein. The former is a piquant setting of Heine's version of the old story of the moth and the candle flame. The latter is meditative and calls for a singer of poetic temperament and an accompanist who has a sympathetic and delicate touch. The tonality is restless and a chord in the key suggested by the signature, C, occurs so seldom as to appear accidental.

Mr. Young's "Good-bye" has the rare merit of being cheerful in tone and is consequently to be welcomed. The words over the initials "T. M. Y." take an optimist view of leave-taking, and the music effectively reflects the confident and trustful spirit of the text. Tenor singers will find this a graceful and expressive song.

Short Settings of the Office of the Holy Communion. No. 36, in E flat. By Arthur E. Godfrey.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This excellent series of settings of the Holy Communion Office, specially designed for parochial and general use, is being carried out with conspicuous ability. Mr. Godfrey's music will present no difficulties to the large majority of choirs, while it fulfils the necessary conditions of making the words more impressive. The Credo is set for choral unison with the exception of the section beginning "And was incarnate," which is set in four parts, but may also be sung by the boys alone, the harmonies being given by the organ. Not the least attractive portions are the music provided for the Offertory Sentences, those chosen being "Give alms of thy goods," "Be merciful after thy power," and "He that hath pity upon the poor." The Sanctus is directed to be sung unaccompanied, and is simple and devotional. The same character pertains to the Benedictus. The Agnus Dei contains some short solo passages for the tenor and bass soloists, who are answered pianissimo by the choir in four parts. Solo passages for the boys are also met with in the Gloria, the conclusion of which is set in unison for the voices with full organ accompaniment. A threefold Amen is provided at the close and intended to be sung after the Blessing.

In distant lands. Three pieces for Viola with Pianoforte accompaniment. Composed by J. Jacques Haakman.

Capriccio. Chanson Joyeuse. For pianoforte. By Lydon Harris.

'Tis sweet to stroll. Song. Words and music by Kate Willis. [Charles Woolhouse.]

Viola players will doubtless be glad to know of Mr. Haakman's pieces, which are well laid out for their instrument and possess musical interest. The pianoforte part is more difficult than that for the viola, and calls for an accompanist of some skill.

Mr. Harris's pianoforte pieces are bright and vivacious. The "Capriccio" is the more satisfactory of the two with regard to form and unity of design, but both are pleasing and of moderate difficulty.

Miss Willis's song is a melodious and graceful composition of meditative character, which, however, includes some effective contrasts.

A Shakesperian Cycle. (Op. 19.) For the Pianoforte. By Harvey Löhr. [Schott and Co.]

There is much evidence of artistic endeavour in these pieces. They are twelve in number, and each one is headed by a quotation from Shakespeare having reference to the several months of the year, and these quotations seem to have prompted the conceptions of the composer. For the most part the music is not of a difficult nature, but some of the pieces call for digital nimbleness. Others are ingeniously contrived to sound more difficult of execution than they really are, to which few pianists will object.

Six Morceaux. (Op. 114.) For Pianoforte Solo. By M. Enrico Bossi. [Milan: Carisch and Jänichen.]

These six pianoforte pieces by M. Bossi, the director of the Conservatoire at Venice, comprise a Valse, Gavotte, Petite Polka, Impromptu, Canzone-Serenata, and Romance, and, with the exception of the Impromptu, they will present few difficulties to the pianist of average attainments. The Impromptu, however, is a brilliant little piece, which will well repay any practice it may require to do it justice, while all the other compositions are excellent examples of light and pleasing drawing-room music.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace. A short Lenten Cantata. The words selected from Holy Writ by the Rev. W. J. Bettison. The music by J. H. Maunder.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This cantata is an admirable example of that commendable class of Church music which admits of the congregation joining in familiar hymns, which are made to form an integrant portion of the work. The hymns thus grafted in are "I heard the voice of Jesus say," "Lord, in this Thy mercy's day," and "How bright these glorious spirits shine." These severally conclude the three portions into which the cantata is divided, the preceding music consisting of solos for soprano or tenor and baritone, and four-part choral writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Festival Choral Society's second choral concert of the current series, given in the Town Hall on the 1st ult., was conducted by Mr. G. R. Sinclair, organist of Hereford Cathedral, in place of Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, absent on account of illness. Mr. Sinclair proved himself to be a genial, earnest, and painstaking conductor. The programme included, in addition to Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Max Bruch's cantata "Das Lied von der Glocke" (The Lay of the Bell), given for the first time in this country at our musical festival of 1879. The bass part of the Master or Narrator was assigned to Mr. Frangcon-Davies, the other principals being Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Lilian Hovey, Mr. William Green, and Mr. C. W. Perkins (organ). Mr. Green, who made his début before a local audience, created an excellent impression. The work done by the chorus and orchestra was superb in every way, and rarely, if ever, have our choristers achieved a more pronounced success.

The Midland Musical Society gave Mendelssohn's "Elijah" in the Town Hall, on November 26, under Mr. H. M. Stevenson's conductorship. The chorus of the Society was present in full force and to it fell the honours of the evening. The performance was the best work done by this association since its formation, nineteen years ago. The principals comprised Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Florence Bourne, Mr. William Molineaux, and Mr. William Evans. Mr. C. W. Perkins was the organist.

The tenth annual Scottish concert was given in the Town Hall, on the 2nd ult., by the Glasgow Select Choir, conducted by Mr. J. Millar Craig.

Mr. Max Mossel's second drawing-room concert was given in the Grosvenor Rooms on November 24. Herr van Rooy was the particular star, who gave a most interesting vocal recital of Schumann's cycle of sixteen songs, "Dichter liebe" (Poet's love), in addition to songs by Schubert and Beethoven, and an exquisite song by R. Strauss, entitled "Traum durch die Dämmerung." Herr Arthur Friedheim was the pianist, who, in addition to accompanying all the songs, gave capital performances of Chopin's Second Sonata in B minor (Op. 58) and of pieces by Liszt.

An excellent chamber concert was given in the Masonic Hall, on November 28, by the Willy Hess String Quartet from Cologne, this being its first appearance in our city.

The Birmingham Temperance Philharmonic Choir, conducted by Mr. H. W. Graham, gave a popular concert in the Town Hall on the 3rd ult. The choir was in good form and never sang better, especially in its delicate rendering of Pinsuti's "The sea hath its pearls."

Mr. Halford's orchestral concerts were given in the Town Hall on November 22 and the 6th ult., when fine performances of Beethoven's Second and Third Symphonies were secured by the excellent conductor. The first appearances here at these concerts of the new composer-pianist, Ernst von Dohnányi, and the Scotch pianist, Frederic Lamond, caused much excitement.

Mr. Wymark Stratton gave a somewhat novel concert in the Masonic Hall on the 7th ult., which consisted of Taffanel's Quintet for wind instruments and Beethoven's Quintet for pianoforte and wind. The concert-giver, who is a pianist and bassoonist, confined his efforts to the pianoforte only, taking part in the Beethoven quintet and playing for his solos Schubert's Impromptu in G flat and Schumann's Arabesque in C. Miss Rosina Hammacott was an excellent vocalist.

Messrs. Fred. Ward and Percy Strander's second chamber concert took place in the Masonic Hall on November 23.

The musical matinées in connection with the Royal Society of Artists were brought to a brilliant close on the 10th ult. The series proved the most attractive given under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction. The last concert was the 140th given by him.

The St. James's Choral Society, of Handsworth, gave its eighth concert in the Public Buildings, Handsworth, on the 13th ult., under Mr. B. Nock's conductorship. A good performance of Benedict's "St. Cecilia" was given, the soloists being Mrs. Bertram Nichols, Mrs. Northall, Mr. Henry Stokes, and Mr. H. Sims. Mrs. Cleobury was the accompanist.

Dr. Winn's second orchestral concert took place in the Town Hall on the 15th ult., the principal attraction being M. Vladimir de Pachmann, who gave a truly wonderful performance of Chopin's Second Concerto, magnificently accompanied by the orchestra. The principal orchestral novelties were César Franck's Poeme Symphonique, "Le Chasseur maudit," based on Bürger's gruesome ballade, "Der wilde Jäger," and Tschaïkowsky's "Capriccio Italien."

The West Bromwich Choral Society gave, under Mr. William Hartland's conductorship, a vocal and instrumental concert at the West Bromwich Town Hall, in aid of the Hamstead Miners' Relief Fund, on the 15th ult. The principal feature of the concert was the admirable singing of the choir in a number of choruses and part-songs.

The Moseley Choral Society gave a capital performance of "The Messiah" at the Moseley and Balsall Heath Institute, on the 16th ult., under Mr. J. Thomas's direction. The principals were Miss Edith Dudley, Miss Minnie Hackett, Mr. Frederick A. Thomas, and Mr. William Bennett.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

More choral performances have taken place during December than in any month throughout the past year. On the 6th ult. the Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society gave a performance of "The Messiah," in the Victoria Rooms. Mr. E. Pavey conducted.

The Bristol Æolian Male Choir gave its annual concert on the 7th ult., at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, under the direction of Mr. Sleigh. The programme was made up chiefly of familiar compositions, which were sung with a good degree of finish.

The ladies' night of the Gleemen fell on the 8th ult., when the most successful concert in the annals of the Society took place. Under the guidance of Mr. W. J. Kidner the ninety members sang, almost with uniform excellence, familiar and new compositions, to the delight of the assemblage who crowded the large hall of the Victoria Rooms. Miss Agnes Nicholls, whose songs added agreeable variety, paid her first visit to Bristol and won the hearty goodwill of the citizens.

It is gratifying to be able to record continued progress in Church music in our city and an increasing number of places of worship wherein suitable compositions are rendered at Christmas. On the 9th ult. a really excellent and impressive performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given in the Church of St. Mary, Tyndall's Park, by the choirs of the church and parish, which were united for the occasion. Miss Alice Boaden, Miss F. M. Bush, Mr. W. H. Lewis, and Mr. W. H. Wickes were the soloists. Mr. F. W. Rootham conducted. At Stapleton Church, within the extended boundaries of the city, a section of the Bristol Choral Society gave an excellent rendering of "The Messiah" (abridged), on the 14th ult. The soloists were Mrs. Barker, Miss E. Hartshorne, Miss Kate Downs, Mrs. M. Thomas, Mr. W. Fancourt, Mr. J. T. Tuckfield, Mr. Brinsdon, and Mr. Barker. Mr. J. Burn was the conductor. At both churches a small orchestra assisted.

In the scheme of concerts to be given during the season by the Bristol Choral Society—which had to be abandoned because of the destruction of Colston Hall—was a Christmas performance of "The Messiah." It was thought, however, that Yuletide should not pass without the oratorio being given in a smaller building and on a lesser scale, and, responding to an invitation, over 200 members offered their services. The representation took place on the 17th ult., in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, under the direction of Mr. George Herbert Riseley, nephew of Mr. George Riseley, and assistant-secretary of the Choral Society, who now came forward as a conductor in a more pretentious way than hitherto. The members of the choir knew their work thoroughly and sang with correctness, spirit, and expression.

Besides these choral performances, there is little else to record. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel gave a vocal recital on November 23, Master Warner's pianoforte recital took place on the 2nd ult., and Mr. Herbert Parsons and Mr. Otto Milani were joined in a pianoforte and violin recital on the 8th ult.

Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society gave a praiseworthy performance of "St. Paul" on the 8th ult. Miss Eva Hartshorne, Miss Agnes Wilkie, Mr. Gwillym Richards, and Mr. Arthur Wills were the principal vocalists, and Mr. Cook conducted.

Mr. Edward Elgar's "King Olaf" was given for the first time in Cheltenham, on November 22, by the New Philharmonic Society, under the able direction of Mr. C. J. Phillips, the indefatigable conductor of the Society. The rendering of this fine work produced highly satisfactory results, and the performance reflected the greatest credit on the orchestra and chorus and their talented leader (Mr. Lewis Hann) and conductor, who must have expended great energy and indomitable perseverance to carry it through so successfully. The solos were taken by Miss Alice Esty, Mr. Reginald Brophy, and Mr. Albert Archdeacon, who, one and all, earned hearty and well-merited applause.

On the 13th ult. the Clevedon Philharmonic Society gave an excellent representation of "The Messiah," under the direction of Mr. E. Cook. Miss K. Gerrish, Miss A. Wilkie, Mr. E. P. Law, and Mr. J. A. Basker were the soloists.

Two performances of Sullivan's "Golden Legend" were given by the Exeter Choral Society in the Victoria Hall, Exeter, on the afternoon and evening of the 9th ult., under the able conductorship of Dr. H. J. Edwards. The solos were safe in the hands of Madame Medora Henson, Madame Ruland, Mr. Reginald Brophy, Mr. Copland, and Mr. H. Long. The singing of the chorus reflected great credit upon Mr. F. J. Shapcott, the chorus master, nor was the band, led by Mr. Barrê Bayly, less efficient in its admirable accompaniments and in its rendering of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. Mr. E. M. Vinnicombe rendered excellent service at the organ.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

After a year's interval, the University Musical Society has once more taken in hand the question of a regular series of concerts in the two winter terms. The new scheme provides for chamber concerts only, but it is to be hoped that in the future orchestral concerts will also be included. Three concerts have been given this term, all of the highest class, and a gratifying amount of support has been accorded. The Gompertz Quartet appeared twice, on October 26 and November 9, and Mr. L. Sickert and Miss Fillünger were the vocalists. On November 21 Mr. and Mrs. Henschel gave an altogether delightful vocal recital.

The University Musical Society also gave a very successful performance of the "Last Judgment," in Trinity Chapel, on November 29. The work has not been heard in Cambridge for a very great number of years, and it was much appreciated by many who find modern developments of music not to their taste. There was no orchestra, but the exceptionally beautiful tone of the Trinity organ and the great skill of Dr. E. W. Naylor, who presided thereat, made all possible amends. The choruses were sung with accuracy and refinement, and the soloists, Miss Lucy Broadwood, Miss E. Downes, Mr. J. Reed, and Mr. Foxton Ferguson, formed a highly efficient quartet. Dr. Gray conducted.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

The Dublin Musical Society's first concert for the season, which took place at the Royal University Buildings, Earlsfort Terrace, on November 24, was in all respects a most successful one. The work chosen for performance was Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," which was preceded by Sullivan's funeral anthem, "Brother, thou art gone before us," given as a tribute to the memory of Mr. Joseph Robinson, many years conductor of the Society, whose death was recently recorded in these columns.

The artists specially engaged for this performance were Miss Evangeline Florence, Mrs. Ward-Moriarty, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Plunket Greene, who acquitted themselves with distinction in their several parts, while the choir and band (which now number 400) were at their best and did justice to the work entrusted to them and credit to their conductor, Dr. Joseph Smith. Mr. Arthur Darley led the strings and Mr. John Horan presided at the organ.

On the 20th ult. the Dublin Musical Society achieved a further success at the Christmas performance of "The Messiah," for which Madame Marie Duma, Madame Alice Lamb, Mr. Reginald Brophy, and Mr. Watkin Mills were specially engaged. It is needless to particularise the excellence of the performance of a work so familiar to the choir and orchestra; but a feature of some novelty in Dublin was the brilliant rendering of the trumpet obbligato in "The trumpet shall sound" by Mr. Jaeger, whose special engagement for this number gave great satisfaction to the Society's friends.

On the 7th ult. the Orpheus Choral Society gave its first concert in the Antient Concert Room, which was crowded by an appreciative audience. This Society is one of a number of new glee and madrigal choirs, the existence of which is distinctly traceable to the "Feis Ceoil" annual competitions, and numbers about ninety voices, including some of the leading amateurs of Dublin. Dr. J. C. Culwick is the conductor, and the performance of his choir at its first concert was of a character that leaves no doubt as to the future success of the Society. The programme included some of the best examples of madrigal and glee writing from the times of Orlando Lasso, Luca Marenzio, Dowland, Morley, &c., down to the modern part-song; and a selection of solos of a classical nature, contributed by Mrs. Werner, Miss Holland, Mr. Gordon Cleather, and Herr Bast. On the same date the Kingstown Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. Thomas F. Marchant, gave a performance of "The Messiah" at the Town Hall, Kingstown. The band and chorus were effective, and the solo parts were well rendered by Miss Agnes Treacy, Mr. Dan Jones, and Mr. Charles Kelly.

The Dublin University Choral Society's first concert for the season took place in the Examination Hall, Trinity College, on the 10th ult., when Costa's oratorio "Eli" was performed by the choir, under the capable direction of Mr. Charles F. Marchant. A good deal of the massive effects of the work was lost through its performance with a pianoforte accompaniment, but praise is due to the choir, which showed to much advantage in the several chorales. The leading parts were taken by Mr. Dan Jones, Mr. W. A. Kelly, and some members of the choir. Mr. Melfort d'Alton's concert, which took place at the Rotunda on the 12th ult., was from every point of view a great success. The gifted tenor was in capital voice, and was ably supported by Miss Clara Butt, Miss Amy Craig, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Page Thrower; Messrs. Charles Kelly, Gordon Cleather, Pecksai (violin), Rosenthal (pianoforte), and the Dublin Glee and Madrigal Union.

Professor Prout gave two lectures at Trinity College on the 15th and 16th ult., the subject being "The pianoforte works of W. A. Mozart."

Other events deserving of notice were the highly interesting "Wagner" lecture given on the 9th ult., at the Antient Concert Rooms, by Mrs. Leighton Cleather and Mr. Basil Crump; Miss Florence Connor's admirable violin recital at the Molesworth Hall on the 9th ult.; the concert of the Rathmines Choral Society on the 8th ult.; the Royal Dublin Society's Monday chamber music recitals; and an important meeting, on the 6th ult., to found a new orchestral society, under the direction of Signor Esposito.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

The Norwich Festival Committee completed its series of interim concerts on the 8th ult., when an audience filling St. Andrew's Hall assembled to hear Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," Schubert's "Song of Miriam," and Mendelssohn's "Loreley." The solos in these works were most creditably rendered by Madame Marie Duma and Mr. David Hughes. Dr. Horace Hill conducted, and the happy result of his training was the subject of general comment. Dr. Bunnett did useful work at the organ, and the band was mainly composed of the Norwich Philharmonic Society, led by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre.

The Norwich Working Girls' Orchestra and Singing Class, conducted by Mr. H. F. Howlett, gave one of its miscellaneous entertainments in the Agricultural Hall Assembly Room on November 28. Not only were part-songs, recitations, and selections for the band given with general success, but instrumental solos were introduced which would not have discredited players of a higher social rank—notably solos for violin, cornet, and trombone displayed good tone and remarkably true intonation. The conductor deserves every encouragement in his most commendable work.

Dr. Horace Hill read an interesting paper on Scottish Song before the students of the Norfolk and Norwich School of Music, on November 25. The musical illustrations were delightfully rendered by some of Dr. Hill's pupils.

The Norwich Orchestral Union gave its ninth concert in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 15th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Harcourt. Dr. Lloyd's dramatic cantata "Hero and Leander" and Haydn's almost forgotten "Tempest" were the works produced, the latter receiving a happy interpretation, but "Hero and Leander" severely tried the band and chorus (the latter very unevenly balanced). Miss F. Lancaster and Mr. F. Hobbs sustained the title characters with artistic intelligence.

A more than usually interesting amateur performance of Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was given by the choir of St. Mary's Baptist Church, at Norwich, on the 14th ult. The organist of the church (Mr. R. Lowne) conducted, and the singing of the choir reflected credit on his training.

The members of the Ladies' Musical Union, conducted by Mr. Vernon Blount, gave a performance of Cowen's cantata "A Daughter of the Sea," at Weston House, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, near Norwich, on the afternoon of the 1st ult.

The Diss Choral Society gave a miscellaneous concert in the Town Hall on the 6th ult. Excellently rendered part-songs, vocal solos, duets, and quartets, as well as pianoforte and clarinet solos, were the main features of the programme. Mr. T. M. Pullen conducted.

The Harleston Amateur Orchestra, numbering twenty-two performers, gave a concert in the Corn Hall, on November 24, conducted by Mr. J. E. Wilson.

The Downham Market Choral Society made its first public appearance this season on the 8th ult., when the fourth part of Haydn's "Seasons" received a good interpretation. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Alfred English, Master J. McBean, Mr. J. E. Jefferies, and Mr. Thomas Able. Mr. G. H. Harvey conducted, with Mr. W. O. Jones at the organ.

The Hunstanton Choral Society opened its ninth season, on the 14th ult., with the production of Barnett's cantata "Paradise and the Peri," the band and chorus numbering about 100 performers. By careful rehearsals Mr. A. H. Cross was enabled to conduct a highly satisfactory performance. The principal vocalists were Miss Clara Dow, Mrs. Hayter, Mr. Cross, and Mr. F. Ranalow.

The Lowestoft Musical Union, conducted by Mr. H. D. Flowers, opened the winter season with a performance of Haydn's "Creation," in the Parish Church, on the 13th ult. The principal vocalists were Madame Blanche Powell, Mr. H. J. Sawford Dye, and Mr. George Stubbs. The chorus was hardly strong enough for the building, but did its work with painstaking care, as did also the band, led by Mr. A. S. Coote Suggit.

The Beccles Choral and Orchestral Societies, conducted by Mr. Warden Harvey, united their forces at a concert given in the Town Hall on November 28. The programme included "To the Sons of Art" and a new work by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, entitled "A Greyport Legend," the latter being accompanied by the band, led by Mr. W. H. Delf.

The Great Yarmouth Musical Society gave a concert on the 15th ult., when Stanford's Irish ballad "Phaudrig Crohoore" and Bridge's "Flag of England" were presented for the first time to a Yarmouth audience. In the former the chorus (in spite of weakness in the tenors) sang fairly well, but the choral difficulties in the work were not all overcome. Sir Frederick Bridge's spirited music went with a swing, Miss Thudicum singing the solos. Mr. Haydon Hare conducted with unremitting attention.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH AND PERTH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Messrs. Paterson's twelfth annual series of orchestral concerts was opened with brilliant success in the McEwan Hall, on the 5th ult. Mr. Wilhelm Bruch, the new conductor of the Scottish Orchestra, was warmly welcomed, and in Weber's "Der Freischütz" Overture and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony he gave an encouraging foretaste of the solid and artistic work we may expect from the orchestra. Miss Leonora Jackson commanded enthusiastic appreciation by her magnificent playing; we should have liked, however, to have had an opportunity of hearing the distinguished young violinist in solos more worthy of her gifts. Madame Ella Russell was the soloist at the second concert (12th ult.).

At the third of the series the bright particular star was Madame Brema, who, in the air from "Orpheus," Purcell's "Mad Bess," and songs by Schubert and others, made a very deep impression on her audience. Berlioz's "Faust" (Choral Union in conjunction with Scottish Orchestra) was announced for the 28th ult.

The first of Mr. Denhof's series of chamber concerts, on the 1st ult., in Queen Street Hall, was distinguished by the delightful playing of the Hess Quartet Party. Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3) was perfection itself in its rendering, and the long Sinding Quintet was almost as successful. Mr. Denhof joined the quartet in the latter and also in Dvorák's beautiful Quintet.

Mr. Peter gave the first of his series of chamber concerts in the Freemasons' Hall on the following evening (2nd ult.). The chief numbers in an interesting programme were a Trio (Op. 72) by Godard, Beethoven's Trio (Op. 97), Rubinstein's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 13)

(M. Rieu), and a Violin Concerto in A minor by Goltermann (Dr. Pudor). Madame Pudor contributed songs by various composers.

The second University concert was devoted to German songs, admirably sung by Miss Fillünger. The programme was judiciously varied by Dvorák's "Romantische Stücke" and Schumann's Sonata in A minor for pianoforte and violin, played by Messrs. Townsend and Colin McKenzie. Mr. A. Scott Jupp accompanied the songs most admirably.

Perth.—Following the lead of the Musical Society, which in November gave a performance of the "Creation" under Mr. F. S. Graves, Mr. Stephen Richardson's Choral Society gave a concert rendering of "Carmen," on the 16th ult. The title-part was taken by Miss Kirkby Lunn, and the other solo parts by Miss Lily Heenan, Signor Salvi, Messrs. Fox and Chapman. At both concerts the choral work was carefully and efficiently performed. Mr. Graves and the Musical Society have also given their usual Christmas performance of "The Messiah."

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

The Choral and Orchestral Union ushered in its season's concerts under Royal auspices, in the person of the Princess Louise, who graced by her presence the performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 1st ult. The soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Miss E. Thornton, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Santley. The consummate art of the veteran baritone retains its wonted charm, and the other soloists lent efficient aid to a record performance by the Glasgow Choral Union. Thanks to the training of Mr. Joseph Bradley, who conducted, the chorus singing was exceptionally fine, and the band also earned a large measure of praise on its first appearance in public.

On the 3rd ult. the first Popular Orchestral concert took place, when Mr. Wilhelm Bruch, the new conductor, made his début before a Scottish audience. The programme included the "Tannhäuser" and "Oberon" Overtures, the Scherzo from the "Midsummer Night's Dream," and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. Mr. Santley was the vocalist of the evening. At the second orchestral concert much interest was centred in the first appearance here of Miss Leonora Jackson, the young and rising American violinist. She made an excellent impression by reason of her brilliant technique, as exhibited in Vieuxtemps's Concerto (No. 4) and in Ernst's "Hungarian Airs." The Symphony was Beethoven's in A, admirably played, and Mr. Bruch and his forces also favourably distinguished themselves in the "Freischütz" Overture, as also in the Prelude and Finale from "Tristan und Isolde." The second Saturday "Pop" was given on the 10th ult., when the Andante and March from Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, the graceful Dance from Sullivan's "Henry VIII." music, Ponchielli's ballet the "Dance of the Hours," and the "Rienzi" Overture were excellently performed, and it only remains to be said that Miss Florence Lancaster sang with much acceptance.

On the 13th ult. the classical programme comprised the Prelude to "Lohengrin," a selection from Berlioz's "Faust," and Mozart's G minor Symphony—interpreted in full sympathy with its ever beautiful workmanship. Tschaïkowsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto afforded Mr. Frederic Lamond a sufficient test of his remarkable powers as a pianist of high rank.

For the fourth classical concert (20th ult.) Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah" was announced, with Miss Marie Brema, Messrs. Ben Davies, Atherton Smith, and Daniel Price as soloists. On the following evening the Paisley Choral Union programme was devoted to Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," for which the customary excellent arrangements were made as regards the band (from the Scottish Orchestra) and soloists.

The Maryhill Philharmonic Society gave its annual concert on the 15th ult., when the programme included Cowen's "Rose Maiden." Stainer's "The Crucifixion" was accorded the honoured place in the concert given by Wellpark Free Church choir on the 14th ult., and, a few nights later, the annual concert by the Athenæum School of Music in aid of the Glasgow Infirmaries took place. Mr. Allen MacBeth conducted an excellent performance of Cowen's cantata "The Fairies' Spring."

The Greenock Choral Union gave, on the 15th ult., a kind of ancient and modern concert by performing Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and Hubert Parry's "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day." The soloists were Miss Alice Esty, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Alec Marsh, and a large contingent of the Scottish Orchestra assisted. The chorus sang excellently under Mr. W. T. Hoeck, who conducted throughout with his customary ability.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The first of the Philharmonic Society's concerts was given on the 6th ult. Schumann's Third Symphony in C claimed the place of honour and was admirably played under Mr. Cowen's direction. The chorus had a field day on the 20th ult., when Handel's "Israel in Egypt" was given, and upon the performance of the gigantic oratorio all concerned may be congratulated. Oratorio has happily been revived at the Pro-cathedral, two excellent performances of Spohr's "Last Judgment" having taken place on the 8th and 15th ult., under the direction of Mr. F. H. Burstall. The Post Office Choral Society, which has usually devoted the proceeds of its chief annual concert to the cause of charity, gave excerpts from Handel's "Messiah," on the 8th ult., under Mr. A. Phipps.

On the Cheshire side of the Mersey, Mr. Granville Bantock adopted "The Messiah" for the inaugural concert of the New Brighton Tower Choral Society, on the 15th ult., and two days later it was given at Liscard by Mr. Swift's choral and orchestral organisation. On the 12th ult. Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was performed at the Birkenhead Music Hall, by the Oxton and Claughton Choral Society, under Dr. C. T. Reynolds. On the 19th ult. the Rock Ferry Amateur Society gave Walthew's "Pied Piper" and Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," under Mr. W. R. Pemberton's skilful direction; the choir singing throughout excellently.

The Liverpool Orchestral Society gave a delightful ladies' concert at the Philharmonic Hall, the leading features of which were Dvorák's "New World" Symphony, conducted by Mr. A. E. Rodewald, and Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor, conducted by the composer. At the same concert a couple of songs by Mr. H. S. Welsing, already known as an exceptionally fine pianist, were produced, and these happy vocal compositions will surely be heard more of. At the College of Music Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony was capitally given, on the 15th ult., under Mr. Courvoisier, and three original part-songs deserve mention as the work of as many clever students, whose names are worthy of record: Miss Grace Davis, Miss Gorst, and Mr. R. C. Hazlehurst. The concert on the 4th ult. of the Sunday Society was devoted to excerpts from "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin," under Mr. W. I. Argent, with a band and chorus of 250.

The Schiever Quartet gave an excellent performance on the 17th ult., Brahms's Clarinet Quartet being the leading attraction.

Mr. Weingartner, one of the most esteemed of local professors, gave his annual recital on the 12th ult., in which the pianist was felicitously joined by his son, Mr. F. Weingartner, a violinist of great ability.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

The production here, at the Hallé concerts, of the "King Olaf" of Edward Elgar took place on the 1st ult. The young composer, who has rapidly come to the front as one gifted with considerable melodic endowment, has acquired an enviable command over orchestral resources. The industry and perseverance of the young Worcestershire musician are sure to lead to yet loftier heights than those attained even in the "Caractacus," which was so warmly received at the recent Festival at Leeds, and, doubtless, a larger experience may lead to a greater concentration of effort. The very readiness wherewith Mr. Elgar handles the orchestra is a temptation to diffuseness and to an excessive elaboration of the score, which somewhat interferes with unity of design and clearness of effect; and we shall eagerly wait for works based upon subjects with which we have more sympathy than we could ever feel for the old sagas and myths affected by Wagner and his disciples.

It is not needful to speak of the undying love for Handel's great masterpiece which, every winter, draws multitudes of worshippers to our churches and concert rooms. Very excellent was the performance of "The Messiah," on the 15th and 16th ult., under the direction of Mr. Cowen—happily, recovered from his indisposition and warmly welcomed—the principals being the Misses Palliser and Butt, with Messrs. Lloyd and Santley, and for the Saturday evening Mr. Lane engaged an almost equally strong cast, including the Misses MacIntyre and Ada Crossley, with Messrs. Ben Davies and Andrew Black.

For many years the Concert Hall of the Athenæum was celebrated for the excellence and great refinement of the part-singing there to be enjoyed, and Dr. Watson has acted wisely in establishing on such classic ground the vocal society over which he ably presides. Among the items of the diversified programme of the second meeting, on the 14th ult., Mendelssohn's "Why rage fiercely" was admirably sung, and a lullaby by T. Facer, "Rest thee, my little one," was redemanded. On the 7th the male choir of Mr. E. Sachs gave with effect Brahms's somewhat lugubrious rhapsody "But who goes there?" and a few more melodious and popular pieces.

The North Manchester Orchestral Society gave a vocal and orchestral concert at the Public Hall, Cheetham Hill, on November 30, when the programme included the Overture to "William Tell," German's "Henry VIII." Dances, and Mackenzie's Benedictus (orchestral arrangement).

Six pupils at Henshaw's Blind Asylum have passed the recent examination of the Incorporated Society of Musicians.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On November 23 the Durham Musical Society gave its first concert of the season in the Town Hall, when Haydn's "Creation" was successfully performed. The principal vocalists were Madame Wilby, Mr. T. H. Brearly, and Mr. Charles Knowles, all of whom acquitted themselves most satisfactorily, and the work of both chorus and orchestra was very creditable. Mr. F. Eustace Leatham conducted and deserves credit for the results of his labours. Another successful concert was that of the Durham Amateur Orchestral Society, which took place also in the Town Hall, on the 6th ult. The orchestra consisted of fifty-seven members, mostly, if not all, amateurs, and it speaks well for their enthusiasm and the skill of their conductor, Mr. Arthur Wallerstein, that they were able to give creditable performances of such works as the Overture to Weber's "Der Freischütz," Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, Goltermann's Violoncello Concerto in D minor, No. 2, and two movements from Massenet's Suite, No. 4, "Scènes Pittoresques." The solo violoncellist was Miss Hilda Richardson, and the vocalist, Mr. D. S. Macdonald. The Society is doing excellent work.

The Newcastle Chamber Music Society has given two concerts in the Assembly Rooms, the first on November 30 and the second on the 19th ult., which consisted of a pianoforte recital by Mr. Frederic Lamond.

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union gave its first concert of the season in the Town Hall, on the 8th ult., the work performed being Handel's "Samson." The choir and orchestra numbered 400 performers, and the soloists were Madame Medora Henson, Madame Dews, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Quite a feature of the concerts of this Society is the singing of the chorus, which found every opportunity of asserting itself in Handel's vocal phrases and massive effects, the most notable being in the chorus "Then round about the starry throne." Mr. James M. Preston conducted, as usual.

The Northern Musicians' Benevolent Society, which is also doing good work in the department of orchestral music, gave its annual concert in the Town Hall, on the 12th ult.

Franco Leoni's cantata "The Gate of Life" was performed in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 19th ult., by the Postal Telegraph Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. J. R. Andrews. The chorus had been carefully trained and the solos had the advantage of being entrusted to such capable artists as Miss Gertrude Hughes, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. David Hughes, the effect of the whole being decidedly satisfactory. The cantata is interesting and well worthy of the attention of provincial choral societies. A word of praise is due to the Postal Telegraph Society for its enterprise in first introducing the work to Newcastle.

In Sunderland a concert was given in the Lecture Hall of the Subscription Library on the 6th ult., by the Sunderland Chamber Music Society.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society's Christmas performance of "The Messiah" took place in the Victoria Hall on the 21st ult., the soloists being Miss Gertrude Hughes, Madame Hannah Jones, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Montague Borwell. The chorus and orchestra did ample justice to Handel's familiar music. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted.

The South Shields Choral Society gave a very interesting concert in the Royal Assembly Hall, South Shields, on the 7th ult. The programme included the first two parts of Haydn's "Creation," Arthur Somervell's cantata "The Forsaken Merman," a Concert-overture in F for orchestra, by Mr. C. Francis Lloyd (conducted by the composer), and Edward German's Three Dances from "Henry VIII." The principal vocalists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Douglas Powell. The whole of the music was very creditably performed and Mr. M. Fairs conducted with much skill.

The Bishop Auckland Musical Society, conducted by Mr. N. Kilburn, gave a very successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," on the 7th ult., in the Town Hall. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Hughes, Madame Hannah Jones, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Montague Borwell, all of whom acquitted themselves well. The chorus and orchestra contributed very largely to the success of the performance.

On the 7th ult. the Gateshead Vocal Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," in the Town Hall, with Miss F. Roscoe, Miss Lillie Southern, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Charles Knowles as principal vocalists. The choruses were sung by a choir of 140 voices; Mr. J. E. Hutchinson was the pianist, Mr. W. Walker presided at the organ, and Mr. Newton Laycock conducted.

A very successful performance of Handel's "Samson" was given on the 12th ult., in the Temperance Hall, Whitby, by the Whitby Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. Henry Hallgate. The soloists were Miss F. Roscoe, Miss Maggie Rankine, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. James Browning.

The Darlington Choral Society gave a performance or "The Messiah" in the Drill Hall, Darlington, on the 13th ult. The conductor of the Society, Mr. T. Henderson, deserves much credit for having brought the choir to its present state of efficiency.

On the 14th ult. the Middlesbrough Musical Union, which, under the diligent supervision of Mr. N. Kilburn, has grown into one of the most successful institutions of its kind in the North of England, gave a very excellent performance of Handel's "Samson" in the Town Hall, Middlesbrough. Thoroughly efficient soloists were secured in Madame Alice Esty, Miss Jessie King, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Alec Marsh, and with the very capable choir and orchestra available for these concerts Handel's music received full justice. Mr. Kilburn conducted.

A performance of "The Messiah" was given in the Borough Hall, Stockton, on the 15th ult., by the Stockton Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. Felix Cruse, and with Miss Marjorie Eaton, Mrs. F. J. Pringle, Mr. T. H. Brearley, and Mr. John Browning as principals.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society made an important epoch in local musical history when it entrusted its conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood, with the formation and training of its new City orchestra. At its first appearance, at the concert on the 8th ult., the band numbered over ninety performers, of whom two-thirds were local musicians, including several ladies. Their performances fully realised the most sanguine expectations. Miss Cantelo, a local artist, was the solo pianist, and Mr. Louis Frölich, the vocalist. It is no secret that Mr. Wood was well satisfied with the efforts of his new orchestra. Under his admirable training the band may aspire with confidence to take a leading position. The Nottingham public will be guilty of gross ineptitude if they do not warmly and continuously support the Sacred Harmonic Society in its effort to permanently establish orchestral concerts in this city.

The Stapleford Choral Society gave a very creditable rendering of "Judas Maccabæus," on the 8th ult., under the direction of Mr. Geo. Spencer, whose training of the chorus gave good results. The principals were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Jessie Marshall-Ward, Mr. Kemp (of Lichfield Cathedral), and Mr. Rowland Hill, who did ample justice to their solos.

The Mansfield Harmonic Society gave a performance of Handel's "Alexander's Feast" on the 14th ult., under the direction of Mr. R. W. Liddle, organist of Southwell Cathedral. The choruses were excellently rendered, as were the solos by Miss Large, Mr. Kemp (Lichfield Cathedral), and Mr. Coleman (Southwell Cathedral). A miscellaneous second part of considerable artistic merit concluded a capital concert.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Academic affairs are always very prominent in Oxford, and it is impossible therefore to avoid recording the fact that the Term just over has been rendered notable by a number of proposals for modifying the requirements for degrees in music. But as the controversy and everything connected with it will have been consigned to the limbo of the rapidly forgotten past by the time that these pages appear, the whole matter may be safely dismissed without further comment.

In dealing with the "Early Harmonization of Hymn Tunes," on November 9, Sir John Stainer was engaged on a subject that he has made peculiarly his own. He selected three or four well-known tunes for discussion and traced their gradual development into their present shape. Few of the auditors were probably prepared for the extent of the changes that have taken place in familiar tunes, and the manner in which the "Easter Hymn" has been built up by the congregations that have sung it was of really remarkable interest. On November 22 and 29 Dr. Iliffe discoursed on the Preludes in Bach's "Das Wohltemperirte Clavier," and was most successful in securing the close attention of his audience to a thoroughly teaching lecture, which was inevitably technical in places and embodied the result of a good deal of original work.

Apart from matters connected with the University there is not much of interest to chronicle. The Choral and Philharmonic Society gave a satisfactory rendering of Haydn's "Creation" on November 8, in the Town Hall. Perhaps the most notable feature of the concert was the excellent playing of the orchestra, which was very largely composed of local performers. On November 24 the Oxford Gleemen gave a miscellaneous concert in the Town Hall, at which they had the valuable help of Mr. and Mrs. Henschel and Mr. C. W. Perkins, of Birmingham. The progress of this Society during recent years has been very striking, and it now possesses an admirable chorus.

Other concerts have been plentiful enough, but call for no special notice.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The list of works to be performed at the forthcoming Sheffield Festival now stands as follows:—"Messiah" (Handel), "King Saul" (Parry), "Golden Legend" (Sullivan), "King Olaf" (Elgar), "Samson and Dalila" (Saint-Saëns), Choral Symphony (Beethoven), and "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn),

The Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society gave a concert on November 29. Among the works performed were Ambroise Thomas's descriptive part-song "The Tyrol" and Beale's madrigal "What Ho!" The Society was assisted by Mr. Charles Fry, whose recitation of "King Robert of Sicily," with Mr. West's choral and instrumental accompaniment, created a profound impression, and the gifted elocutionist declaimed Hood's "Dream of Eugene Aram" (with Mackenzie's music) in dramatic style. Miss Florence Hoole sang ballads and Mr. J. A. Rodgers conducted and accompanied the musical recitations with much skill.

On the 1st ult. the Amateur Instrumental Society opened its twenty-seventh season with a successful concert. Under Dr. Coward's direction, Spohr's "Power of Sound" Symphony, the chief feature of the concert, was adequately performed.

Handel's "Theodora" was performed, for the first time in Sheffield, on the 5th ult. To the Choral Union belongs the distinction of introducing this rarely heard work to a Sheffield audience. Mr. Suckley's forces rendered a good account of the music. The principals were Mrs. Hutchinson, Misses Amy and Bertha Skerritt, Mr. R. Thompson, and Mr. T. C. Fagg.

On the 6th ult. the Musical Union gave a concert-recital of Gluck's "Orpheus." In the absence of Miss Marie Brema, the title-rôle was undertaken at short notice by Miss Lilian Hovey, who won a brilliant success and one which should do much to enhance her reputation. Dr. Coward conducted a performance distinguished for the fine singing of the chorus. Madame Norledge and Miss Louise Coward were the other principals.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society performed "Elijah," on the 8th ult., under Dr. Coward. The chorus singing was admirable, and the principals, Madame Norledge, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Douglas Powell, acquitted themselves with credit.

The Norton Lees Choral Society performed Cowen's "St. John's Eve," in very satisfactory style, on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. W. H. Robinson.

"Elijah" was performed at Heeley on the 11th, under Mr. E. Jeffs, the soloists being Mrs. Bradbury, Miss F. Hoole, Mr. W. H. Burrows, and Mr. F. Shimeld.

The St. Peter's (Abbeydale) Choral Society gave Haydn's "Creation," with great success, on the 13th ult. Mr. W. Gadsby conducted.

Spohr's "Last Judgment" was sung in the Parish Church, Chesterfield, on the 12th ult. The rendering of the work reflected much credit on Mr. H. Biggin, who conducted.

Dr. Henry Coward gave the last of the useful and interesting University Extension lectures on music, on the 12th ult., his subject being "English Instrumental Music, Opera and Oratorio," with vocal and instrumental illustrations.

A performance of Bennett's "May Queen," by the Diamond Choral Society, was given in the Music Hall, Sheffield, on the 14th ult. Madame Pollini conducted a small band and chorus whose efforts met with appreciation by the audience.

The Retford Vocal and Instrumental Society gave a concert in the Town Hall, Retford, on the 16th ult. Directed by Mr. Hamilton White, the chorus and orchestra rendered Mendelssohn's "Christus," "Hymn of Praise," and Webbe's glee, "When winds breathe soft," in an admirable manner.

The Amateur Musical Society gave its seventieth concert on the 20th ult., performing Haydn's "Creation" at the Albert Hall. The singing of the choir in "The Heavens are telling," "Awake, the harp," "Achieved is the glorious work," reached a very high standard. Mr. Schollhammer conducted. The principals were Miss Beatrice Pallister, Mr. William Foxon, and Mr. Joseph Lycett.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTHERN COUNTIES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Two performances of Maunder's sacred cantata "Penitence, Pardon, and Peace," were given during the last week of November, in Holy Trinity Church, Bournemouth. The rendering of the work was admirable and reflected great credit upon all concerned. Mr. W. Lee ably presided at the organ, and Mr. Walter Barnett, organist of the church, conducted.

The Bournemouth Musical Festival Committee have selected Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha," and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" for performance at the next festival, which will be held in the spring of 1900. "The Golden Legend" and "Elijah" will probably complete the two days' programme.

On November 28 the Southampton Philharmonic Society gave the opening concert of the season, Haydn's "Creation" being chosen for performance. The orchestra, which included thirteen members of the Royal Marine Artillery band, and the excellent choir of the Society rendered the work most satisfactorily. The soloists were Miss Lena Pulvermacher, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Samuel Heath. Mr. E. Jones officiated as leader of the orchestra and Mr. H. M. Pike was in his accustomed place as conductor.

The members of the Choral Society in connection with St. Matthew's Church, Southampton, gave a performance of Cowen's cantata "The Rose Maiden," in the Shaftesbury Hall, on the 6th ult. Mrs. Tilling, Miss Daisy Turner, Mr. M. G. Conlan, and Mr. T. Faulkner, all local artists, were the principal vocalists. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Mrs. Ellis. Mr. T. W. Dunning conducted.

"The Rose Maiden" formed the chief feature of the concert given by the Lymington and District Musical Society on the 7th ult. Mr. Charles N. Frecknall, who conducted, is to be congratulated upon the success of this, the best concert the Society has yet given.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

We have had a good allowance of music in Leeds during the past month. The Philharmonic and first Subscription concert took place on November 30, when Dr. Stanford conducted his "Requiem." Though there is a healthy variance of opinion as to its merits when compared with the rather later "Te Deum," the excellent performance by the Leeds chorus, with one of the strongest "scratch" orchestras that has ever been got together in Leeds, demonstrated the remarkable strength of the work and the warmth of colour and emotional power of many parts of it. The soloists were Madame Esty, Madame Brema, Mr. Thomas Thomas (whose exceptionally fine voice won much praise on this, its first hearing in Yorkshire), and Mr. Plunket Greene. Bach's fine cantata based on the chorale tune "Sleepers, wake," and the "Vätergruft" of Cornelius formed the latter half of the programme. Cornelius's ballad was, as it were, an echo of the festival, and in it Mr. Plunket Greene renewed his success so as to win an encore. On the 5th ult. Miss E. A. Atkinson, a local pianist, gave a recital that revealed a high degree of technical efficiency, and on the 7th ult. Miss Eisele and Mr. Rawdon Briggs, also well known in connection with local music, gave an unusually interesting chamber concert, at which the first of Beethoven's so-called posthumous quartets was (mirabile dictu) played for the first time in Leeds. On the following day an amateur orchestra, the Leeds Symphony Society, gave a concert. Its performance of a Svendsen Symphony was perhaps more praiseworthy in intention than in effect, but the conductor, Mr. Grimshaw, none the less deserves credit for what he has accomplished with such material as is at his disposal. Mr. Bernard Johnson's very neat and crisp playing of Sterndale Bennett's Capriccio for pianoforte and orchestra was among the pleasanter features of the concert. At the Leeds Parish Church two of the customary Advent Services have taken place. Neither the "German" Requiem nor the "Last Judgment" are new to these services, but Brahms's great work had, on the 9th ult., a better chance than heretofore, since the general adoption of the low pitch enabled the organ to be used with the orchestra for the first time. For the second work, on the 14th ult., Mr. G. R. Sinclair, of Hereford, represented the orchestra, playing the accompaniments on the organ with his usual mastery. Mr. Benton conducted on both occasions. The re-opening of the Leeds Town Hall organ by Mr. Fricker, its new organist, took place on the 10th ult. I have already had occasion to eulogise Mr. Fricker's commanding powers as a soloist. As for the organ, it has certainly been improved by the very drastic alterations introduced by Messrs. Abbott and Smith, not being as conspicuously blatant as heretofore in its louder combinations, and containing many soft stops of really pleasant quality. On the 13th ult. the Messrs. Haddock gave one of their musical evenings, at which Madame Duma, Madame Kate Lee, Mr. W. Lawley, and Mr. Andrew Black sang, the violinist being Miss Edith Robinson and the pianist Miss E. Brook. On November 30 Mr. Christensen gave a concert, assisted by several local artists, and on the 20th ult. Mr. Dolmetsch gave one of his interesting and entertaining lectures on old instruments.

At Bradford the Festival Choral Society has been much in evidence, and no greater proof of its energy could be found than the fact that in less than three weeks it has been responsible for the performance of three great choral works. They were familiar ones, it is true, but in each the chorus, which is now under Mr. Cowen's excellent conductorship, proved thoroughly up to its work. On November 25 it gave a really admirable performance ot Berlioz's "Faust," and here a large share of the credit belongs to the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, which accomplished its important share of the task with a finish quite unusual in provincial performances. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Watkin Mills. On the 9th ult. the same Society supplied the chorus for the Subscription concert. "Judas Maccabæus" was the work chosen, and it suffered from the absence of Mr. Cowen, who was ill, and whose place was taken at the shortest possible notice by Dr. J. C. Bridge, of Chester, who did all that could be done, considering that full rehearsal was impossible. On the 3rd ult. the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave a concert of rather lighter character than usual, with, however, hardly such marked success as to warrant a renewal of the experiment. Franco Leoni's "Gate of Life" was successfully performed by the Salem Musical Union, Bradford, on the 5th ult., under the baton of Mr. J. Paget Priestley. This was stated to be the first performance of the work in the North of England.

The last two of the Huddersfield Subscription concerts have been of greater artistic interest than is commonly the case, Mr. Paderewski giving a recital on the 6th ult., while on the 13th the Hallé band appeared, and with it Mr. Moritz Moszkowski, who played with the utmost brilliance and crispness his exceedingly agreeable Pianoforte Concerto in E. The rest of the concert, conducted very ably by Mr. Cowen, presented no features of special importance.

At Keighley the Musical Union, under Mr. Alfred Benton's direction, gave, on November 29, a creditable performance of Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and an excellent one of the "Walpurgis Night." More unequivocal praise might be given, had not the more modern work proved somewhat beyond the resources of the band, for the chorus was good throughout. The soloists were Madame Sadler-Fogg, Miss Lilian Hovey, Mr. Wm. Green, and Mr. Geo. Uttley. The Pudsey Choral Union deserves credit for breaking from the monotonous round of stock oratorios by giving Benedict's "St. Peter," on November 28. Mr. W. Thornton gave a considerable amount of dramatic expression to the part of St. Peter, and the other soloists were Miss Jaques, Mrs. Annie Holmes, and Mr. T. Child. The band was, as is so often the case, the weak spot in the performance, the chorus singing with remarkable energy and pluck under Mr. Jowett's direction. Some novelty characterised the programme of the Batley Choral Society, on the 13th ult., when Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" music was coupled with Leoni's cantata "The Gate of Life." The performance seems to have been a moderate success. Mr. Tomlinson conducted, and the soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Ineson. The Wakefield Choral Society gave Parry's "Judith" on the 19th ult., under Mr. Hardy's conductorship, and with Madame Norledge, Madame Bertenshaw, Messrs. Child and Knowles as principals. Considering the difficulties which the work presents to a small society, the performance was extremely creditable.

Choral societies have been busy during the past month, but their doings have, for the most part, little more than a parochial interest, and a mere record of the performances will suffice. "Judas Maccabæus" was given at Farsley on November 29, under Mr. Jowett, and with Miss G. Harrison, Mrs. Holmes, Messrs. Brearley and Thornton as principals. The same popular oratorio was chosen by the Morley Choral Society for its concert on the 7th ult., when the soloists were Miss Jaques, Miss Frood, Messrs. Brearley and Browning, with Mr. Benton as conductor. The Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society, under Mr. Wright's direction, gave a miscellaneous programme on the same date, Mr. Frederick Dawson's pianoforte solos being the chief attraction of the evening. At Armley, on the 6th ult., "St. Paul" was performed by the Choral Society, Mr. H. H. Pickard conducting, and the chief parts being taken by Miss Roscoe, Miss Hall, Messrs. Riley and Browning. Though the chief "Messiah" performances have not, at the time of writing, taken place, an early one at Mirfield, on the 6th ult., may be mentioned here. The principals were Miss Jaques, Miss Grimshaw, Mr. Berrey, and Mr. Gordon Heller; Mr. W. C. Ainley being the conductor.

Coming to a somewhat different district, "Elijah" was given at Harrogate on the 6th ult., by the Harrogate and St. Cecilia Musical Society, with somewhat maimed rites, the orchestra being composed of strings only. Miss Annie Jackson, Mrs. Henderson, Messrs. T. Child and W. Thornton were the soloists, and Mr. F. K. Hattersley conducted. On the same date the Ilkley Vocal Society performed "Acis and Galatea," with the still more meagre accompaniment of pianoforte alone. Mr. Akeroyd conducted, and Miss Docksey, Mr. Blagbro, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Ryder were the principals.

The York Musical Society, which, under Canon Hudson's direction, has shown a very marked advance, gave, on the 6th ult., a highly creditable performance of Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride." The orchestra might have played more delicately, but the chorus sang remarkably well, and the principals, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Albert Archdeacon, were most efficient. "Samson" was the work chosen by the Scarborough Choral Union for performance on the 5th ult. Miss Ada Beecroft, Madame Grew, Mr. Fallas, and Mr. Webster were the principals, and Mr. Pitcher conducted. The same work was given by the Selby Choral Society on the 13th ult., when the soloists were Miss Jaques, Madame Bertenshaw, Messrs. Child and Billington. The "Hymn of Praise," coupled with Mr. J. F. Barnett's popular cantata the "Ancient Mariner," formed the programme of the concert given by the Skipton Choral Society, on the 13th ult. Mr. A. Pearson conducted, and the soloists were Miss Palliser, Miss Ramsden, Miss Windson, Mr. Wild, and Mr. H. Brown.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

The new theatre of the Opéra Comique, erected on the site of the historical building which was destroyed in the disastrous conflagration of May, 1887, has at length been opened. The official inauguration, at which the President of the Republic assisted, took place on the 7th ult. The performances at the new house, however, practically commenced on the 5th, when the representatives of the press and friends of the managers had been invited to witness the representation of "Carmen," with Mdlle. Georgette Leblanc in the title-rôle. The lady, who appeared in the part for the first time, was able to invest it with some novel features of interest and a charm of her own. Mdlle. Guiraudon, MM. Bouvet and Beyle were the other leading interpreters, orchestra and chorus being under the able direction of M. Luigini. As regards the mise-en-scène, M. Carré may be sincerely congratulated upon the conspicuous success of his efforts in this direction. The new house, the architect of which is M. Bernier, has been subjected to some more or less severe criticisms in different quarters, which, however, is usual in similar cases.

At the Opéra the première of M. Vidal's new opera was expected to take place towards the end of last month. The title of the work has been changed from "Gauthier d'Aquitaine" tó "Gauthier de la Bourgonde," and the general rehearsal, taking place on the 20th ult., was open to the public, the receipts being intended for the projected monument to Garnier, the famous architect of the Opéra.

The Lamoureux concert of the 4th ult. was devoted to Berlioz, and included excerpts from "Les Troyens à Carthage," in which Madame J. Raunay, who, with M. Engel, interpreted the solo parts, gained a most brilliant success. Amongst the finest achievements of the orchestra, on this occasion conducted by M. Chevillard, was the playing of the "Chasse fantastique," likewise from the "Troyens," which was applauded to the echo. The concert of the 18th ult. included the performance of the entire second act of "Tristan und Isolde."

The 100th performance of Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust," which was recorded at the Colonne concert of the 11th ult., was rendered an impressive solemnity by the special arrangements made by the popular conductor for the celebration of the event and by the enthusiasm displayed by the multitude who had come to second his efforts.

Mr. Luard Selby, most industrious and persevering amongst native composers of chamber music, produced a new Pianoforte Quartet (in B major) from his pen at his concert given at the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 6th ult. Concise and symmetrical in form throughout, it is well contrasted as regards style. In the important matter of thematic material the composer has been almost uniformly happy, most of his subjects being indeed charming, and in several instances distinctly original. Amongst these the second subject of the first movement merits special mention. The quaint Scherzo with waltz-like Trio, and the moving "Elegy" which works up to a very effective climax but ends abruptly, pave the way for a vigorous and tuneful Finale, which, after running its spirited and joyous course, ends impressively in slow time with a few soft chords played alternately by the strings (pizzicato) and the pianoforte. Mr. Selby also produced two clever pianoforte studies and an elegant little song, "The Dove," sung by Mrs. Mary Davies, and Mr. Walter Ford introduced two charmingly melodious and well-written songs, "Shall I compare thee" and "Sweetheart, sigh no more," by Miss Mary Carmichael.

Amongst the large number of concerts which have taken place since the last issue of The Musical Times the following merit record:—

Queen's Hall.

Bruno Steindl's only pianoforte recital, 7th ult.

Queen's (Small) Hall.

Mr. Gregory Hast and Mr. Dal Young's vocal and pianoforte recital, November 28.
Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. Charles Phillips' second concert, 5th ult.
Mr. Vanderbeeck's vocal recital, 13th ult.

Salle Erard.

Miss Katie Goodson, Mr. Marsick, and Mr. Marix Loevensohn's third concert, 1st ult.; last concert, 5th ult.
Herr Arnold von Auer's concert, 14th ult.
Messrs. Josef Ludwig and Paul Ludwig's second concert, 16th ult.

Steinway Hall.

Master Basil Gauntlett's fourth pianoforte recital, November 29.
M. Otto Hegner's third and last pianoforte recital, 5th ult.
Herr Freidheim's vocal recital, 7th ult.
Miss Lloyd and Miss Nightingale's recital, 13th ult.
Mr. Charles Copland and Mr. Algernon Luido's concert, 12th ult.
Miss Annie B. Carswell's vocal recital, 14th ult.
M. David Zeldenrust's vocal recital, 17th ult.

The Richmond Philharmonic Society gave a highly successful concert, on the 14th ult., in the pavilion of the "Star and Garter" Hotel. The programme included Hiller's "Song of Victory" and Elgar's "The Banner of St. George," both works being rendered by the band and chorus with praiseworthy skill. The choir specially distinguished itself in Mr. Elgar's attractive "Ballad," and the band worthily showed its capabilities in Haydn's Symphony in E flat, Hamish MacCunn's suite "Highland Memories" (Op. 30), and Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture. The vocalist was Miss Enriqueta Crichton, and Mr. James Brown admirably conducted a performance upon which he and his forces, vocal and instrumental, are to be sincerely congratulated. A word of praise must be said for the exceedingly tasteful programme. At the next concert Sir Hubert Parry has consented to conduct a selection from his works. The Richmond amateurs are fortunate in having so excellent and enterprising a Philharmonic Society in their midst.

The operatic class of the London Organ School and International College of Music gave more than creditable performances of Gluck's "Orpheus," at St. George's Hall, from the 12th to the 17th ult. Miss May Coleman successfully sustained the title-part and displayed a fine and well-trained contralto voice. The Eurydice of Miss Amélie Molitor and the Love of Miss Ethel Lowe were also highly commendable, and an excellent chorus and band were conducted by Mr. Gustave Slapoffski. Mr. Arthur Fayne was stage manager. Afterwards came a new arrangement of the classic legend of "Pandora," the book being by Risden Home, and the tuneful music by Mrs. Lynedoch Moncrieff. In this the chief honours were won by Miss Lillie Williams, Miss Kate Bensted, and Miss Evelyn Downes, who spoke her lines well and sang a Persian love song with much charm. Mr. Hedmondt would have been heard to greater advantage if he had had a better knowledge of the text.

The Victoria Madrigal Society has, in a very brief period, obtained the attention and respect of admirers of part-music. That the interest the members have kindled is warranted, was manifested at St. Martin's Town Hall on November 28, when they sang a number of glees and madrigals — ancient and modern—in an unexceptionable manner. Their selection included John Benet's delightful "All creatures now," Wilbye's "Stay, Corydon," Stevens's "Blow, blow, thou winter wind," and Weelkes' "In pride of May," each a worthy example of its particular school; and Mr. Josiah Booth's "Hunting Song" was particularly well received. The performance by the choir, directed by Dr. G. Stanley Murray, was throughout instinct with finish. Songs were contributed by Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. John Sandbrook, and Mr. Percy Deane, and Mr. Claude M. Pollard gave some pianoforte selections.

The strains of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" in a Workhouse Chapel! Can it be true? Yes, the performance of a part of that popular work actually took place at the City of London Union, Hackney, on the 6th ult., when the musical portion of the service was sung by the choir of St. Alphage, London Wall, under the direction of the organist and choirmaster of St. Alphage, Mr. Arthur C. Tattersall. The service also included Stainer's Evening Service in A, and, after the same composer's Sevenfold Amen, Mr. Tattersall played a short selection of pieces on the organ. Such efforts to brighten the dull lives of the inhabitants of a workhouse deserve commendation and emulation. A fine opportunity is hereby presented to church choirs to follow the example set by that of St. Alphage.

The Stoke Newington Choral Association, assisted by the North London Orchestral Society, successfully gave a performance of Franco Leoni's cantata "The Gate of Life" and of Sullivan's "On Shore and Sea," at the Shoreditch Town Hall, on the 8th ult., in aid of the Metropolitan Hospital. Leoni's work, first performed a few months ago at the Albert Hall by the Royal Choral Society, improves greatly upon acquaintance. The interest of the story and the character of the music are not likely to be ignored by choral societies seeking effective novelties. The choir and orchestra (numbering about 200) did well under the baton of Mr. Percy Taylor, and the solos were competently rendered by Miss Kate Cherry, Mr. Charles Ellison, and Mr. Charles Copland. The work was very favourably received.

An interesting performance of Handel's little known oratorio "Belshazzar" was given at the People's Palace on the 15th ult. by the Handel Society, the proceeds being devoted to the Stepney Relief Society. The soloists were: Queen Nitocris, Miss Ethel Wood; Daniel, Madame Lena Law; Belshazzar, Mr. H. Stubbs; Cyrus, Mr. F. Harford, all of whom acquitted themselves admirably. Mr. W. H. Cummings (a vice-president of the Society) kindly undertook to play the pianoforte part, and Mr. E. G. Croager presided, as usual, at the organ. As Handel's original orchestration was used on the occasion these two instruments played important parts in the performance of the work. The chorus, under the conductorship of Mr. J. S. Liddle, sang with spirit and accuracy.

The Finsbury Choral Association made a good start upon its twentieth season on November 24, at the Northern Polytechnic Institute. As the performances have considerably improved under the direction of Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, it was natural that his male-voice cantata "A Greyport Legend" should evoke special interest. There is much in the work that is exceedingly telling, and on this occasion none of its good points were missed, either by the executants or the audience. Mr. Woods' cleverly constructed composition only needs to be known to be highly appreciated. Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" was also performed, and Mesdames Emily Davies and Dews, Messrs. Braxton Smith, Edwin Webster, and D. Price were the soloists.

Mr. Theophil Wendt, late Sterndale Bennett scholar at the Royal Academy of Music, and an earnest and gifted young musician, gave his farewell concert on November 16, in the Town Hall, Grahamstown, South Africa, previous to his return to England. He played, inter alia, two very charming and artistic Valses de Salon (Valse Gracieuse and Valse Dansante, Op. 9, Nos. 2 and 3) and an exceptionally melodious and piquant "Air de Ballet avec Intermezzo," which, according to a note on the programme, are shortly to be published by Messrs. Novello. Mr. Wendt was assisted by Misses E. Spoor, M. Taylor, and M. de Morgan, and Messrs. De Morgan and W. Jeanes (vocalists); Miss H. Williamson (pianoforte); and Mr. Percy Ould (violinist).

Barnby's tuneful cantata "Rebekah" was performed at Leytonstone Congregational Church on the 15th ult., to celebrate the re-opening of the organ after renovation and additions. The choir of sixty voices and the small (string) orchestra performed their parts with much precision and taste. Mr. T. H. Goodwin, the organist and choirmaster, conducted with much skill, and the soloists, Miss Maud Snell, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. W. Irvine, were excellent in their respective parts. In the second part of the programme Miss Gertrude Lester played some violin solos charmingly, and Mr. Bernard Sandwell and Mr. Goodwin presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively with much acceptance.

Miss Adèle Haas, a pupil of Mr. Willem Coenen, gave a pianoforte recital at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton, on the 5th ult., with marked success. The well-selected programme included solos from the works of Bach, Beethoven, Grieg, Rubinstein, Chopin, and Liszt, all of which were executed by the fair pianist in a manner calling for special commendation. With Mr. Coenen, Miss Haas played Mendelssohn's "Allegro Brillante" in A for two pianofortes. Miss Lilian Burgess contributed some songs with much acceptance. This is the second occasion on which Mr. Coenen has successfully started a Guildhall School pupil on a public career.

"Elijah" was performed by the Bow and Bromley Choir, in the local hall, on the 10th ult. The principals were Miss Louise Burns, Miss Adelaide Lambe (a new contralto of considerable promise), Mr. Gawthrop, and Mr. Charles Knowles, of Leeds. Mr. Knowles is unknown to Londoners. It is safe to say that, after his performance of the part of the Prophet on the present occasion, he will soon be in request in the metropolis. He possesses a voice of unusual power and volume, and sings with dramatic earnestness. The orchestra was led by Miss Gwynne Kimpton and Mr. H. F. Ellingford was at the organ. Dr. McNaught conducted.

The Maze Pond Choral Society followed up its recent performance of Handel's "Samson" by a rendering of "Judas Maccabæus" in Maze Pond Chapel, Old Kent Road, on the 1st ult. The choir sang with spirit and accuracy, showing a firmness which proved the value of practising without instrumental aid at rehearsal. The soloists were Miss Bessie Spells, Mr. T. Lester Jones, and Mr. F. Swinford. Mr. Edward Partridge presided at the organ, Miss M. Tyrer was the pianist, and the band rendered good help under the efficient leadership of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. Mr. W. Dexter Miller conducted with his usual carefulness.

Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons have recently manufactured the "Tastalto," or raised keyboard (Mr. Henschel's patent). It is believed that this new invention by the distinguished vocalist will prove of great value to singers, teachers, and students of singing, as by its use they will be enabled, whilst singing, to play the pianoforte in a standing and perfectly free, upright position. The same firm announce that they intend to build a new factory at Bedford. As the new building will not be completed for two or three years, manufacturing will still be carried on as usual at Horseferry Road. The change will not, however, in any way affect Messrs. Broadwood's arrangements at Great Pulteney Street as regards their customers.

The Mozart Society offered an interesting programme at the Portman Rooms on the 10th ult. The first part was historical, Mr. J. H. Bonawitz playing on the organ and harpsichord a number of pieces by Palestrina, Frescobaldi, Purcell, Couperin, Bach, and other old masters. By means of his String Quartet in C minor, the well-known pianist also figured with encouraging results as a composer. Mr. G. Saint-George played a graceful Menuetto by Milandre on a viola d'amore, Mr. C. S. Loveday gave, on the violoncello, Goltermann's Romance in E minor, and Mrs. Kate Bartholomew was the vocalist.

The concert given on the 17th ult., at the South-Western Polytechnic, Chelsea, by the students of the music section, under the direction of Mr. John B. Ivimey, was most successful. Mendelssohn's "Loreley" and the part-songs "You stole my love" (Macfarren) and "Weep you no more, sad fountains" (Ivimey), were well rendered by the Choral Society. Haydn's Symphony in E flat was admirably performed by the orchestra, to whom a special word of praise is due for their careful accompaniment of the "Loreley." The concert reflected the greatest credit upon masters and students alike.

Anyone who was present in St. Saviour's, Southwark, on Friday, the 9th ult., would certainly have been greatly impressed. Spohr's "Last Judgment" was rendered on that evening in that most beautifully restored church in a manner which left nothing to be desired. The choir, which numbered some seventy voices, was at its best, and both solos and choruses gave evidence of the pains and care which had been taken by its accomplished organist and choirmaster, Dr. Madeley Richardson. There was a small orchestra of trumpets, trombones, and kettledrums, and Dr. Richardson presided at the organ.

A highly gratifying feature of the good work in progress at the Bermondsey Settlement was the concert given in the Bermondsey Town Hall, on the 15th ult., when Professor Stanford conducted admirable performances (given by the Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union) of his "Revenge," "Irish Symphony," and "Phaudrig Crohoore." Miss Helen Jaxon and Mr. Daniel Price sang, and Miss Miriam Timothy was an efficient harpist. Mr. John E. Borland, the excellent conductor of the Society, directed performances of some Wagner selections.

The Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London Choirs held a social gathering at Marlborough Place Lecture Hall, St. John's Wood, on the 3rd ult., when Mr. W. H. Cummings, who was the guest of the evening, gave an excellent address. His remarks were partly autobiographical, yet always practical and delivered with an earnestness which made a deep impression. At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Cummings rehearsed the assembled choirs in his short anthem "The Lord is nigh unto them."

The Misses Fanny and May Cheeseman gave their fourth annual musical and dramatic recital at the Camden Athenæum, on the 13th ult. The two reciters won hearty commendation from the audience in a varied programme, and were ably assisted in two scenes, one from Shakespeare and the other from Molière (in French), by Mr. Arthur Fayne. Mr. Edwin Webster displayed a fine baritone voice to advantage in three songs, and Mr. Gerald Walenn delighted the audience with his masterly violin playing.

The Bishopsgate Institute Choral and Orchestral Society gave its first concert of the season on the 8th ult., under the able direction of Mr. W. A. B. Russell. An excellent performance was given of Cowen's "St. John's Eve," in which both choir and orchestra distinguished themselves. The soloists were Miss Florence Matthews, Miss Bertha Salter, Rev. Leslie Currie, and Mr. Bertram Mills. The second part, which was miscellaneous, included Schumann's "Gipsy Life," well rendered by choir and orchestra.

Spohr's "Last Judgment" was sung at the Church of St. Michael-at-Bowes, Bowes Park, on Sunday evening, the 4th ult. The soloists were Masters W. French and Watson, Mr. Trenchard, Mr. Edwin Bryant, and Mr. M. A. Moore, all, with one exception, members of the voluntary choir of the church. The accompaniments, the overture, and the symphony were played by Mr. Herbert Rolfe, the organist and choirmaster, and the choruses were finely rendered by the choir of about forty men and boys.

The two composition prizes of £25 each, offered by the Incorporated Society of Musicians, have just been awarded. Sonatas: prize to Signor Esposito, Dublin; commended, Mr. J. W. Hudson, Hull. Trios and quartets: prize to Mr. F. W. Austin, Birkenhead; commended, Mr. W. Wolstenholme, Blackburn. Nineteen works (twelve sonatas and seven trios and quartets) were sent in. The adjudicators were Professors Hiles and Prout and Dr. Charles Vincent.

At Hornsey Parish Church, on the 8th ult., a very fine rendering of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given by the choir, numbering upwards of sixty voices. The solos of Master Willie Gammage (soprano) and Mr. R. E. Miles (bass) deserve the highest commendation, the other solo parts being capably rendered by Mr. Ernest Marriott and Mr. Henry Beaumont. Mr. Herbert Gresham ably presided at the organ and Mr. Henry J. Baker conducted.

A selection from Bach's "Christmas" Oratorio (Parts I. and II. and a portion of the fourth section) were sung at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, on the evening of the 22nd ult. and on the evening of Christmas Day. The choruses were admirably rendered and the solos were efficiently taken by Messrs. F. Henry, A. Pinnington, and Leo Wilson. Mr. E. H. Lemare presided at the organ, and, as usual, displayed its resources to great advantage, notably in the "Pastoral" Symphony.

Mr. G. W. Chadwick, director of the New England Conservatoire of Music, Boston, Mass., has recently issued a theoretical treatise, entitled "Harmony: a course of Study." In his preface to the work, the author says: "The object of this book is to give the student a working vocabulary of chords for the harmonizing of melodies in the order of their practical value and harmonic importance."

On the evening of the 15th ult. and the following Sunday afternoon the "Last Judgment" (Spohr) was sung at St. Anselm's, Davies Street. The soloists were Masters Rochelle and Elstob and Messrs. Corlett and Cope, all members of the choir; the accompaniment being rendered on the pianoforte (Mr. F. M. Reade), organ (Mr. D. J. Thomas), and several violins.

Mr. J. H. Maunder's sacred cantata "Penitence, Pardon, and Peace" was sung at St. Katherine Cree Church, Aldgate, after Evensong, on the 11th and 18th ult. The soloists were Master Duell (of St. Luke's, Kew) and Mr. H. Fell. Mr. Carl Bassett, of St. Bartholomew's, City, presided at the organ, and Mr. Arthur G. Charles (organist of the church) conducted.

Verdi's beautiful setting of the "Hymn to the Virgin," from Dante's "Paradiso," was sung for the first time in London (during last month) at the residence of the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck (Precentor of Westminster) by the Cordelia Quartet, comprising Signora Elvira Gambogi, Miss Aurelia Holding, Miss Florence Bulleid, and Miss Annie Stonex.

AN excellent performance of the "Creation" was given at the People's Palace, on the 17th ult., by the People's Palace Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. C. H. Allen Gill. The principal vocalists were Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Mr. Edwin Wareham, and Mr. Arthur Walenn. The choir sang with spirit and Mr. B. Jackson officiated at the organ.

MR. J. R. GRIFFITHS, who for nearly eighteen years has been organist and choirmaster of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, has recently been presented by the members of his choir with a beautiful gold-mounted ivory baton and a gold pencil-case. Recipient and donors alike are to be congratulated upon so gratifying an incident.

THE Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of "The Messiah," in the concert-room of the Crystal Palace, on the 10th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Simons, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. Fountain Meen presided at the organ and the conductor was Mr. J. W. Lewis.

THE Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "The Messiah" in St. Bartholomew's Church, South Bermondsey, on the 7th ult. The soloists were Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Florence Child, Mr. Frank Tebbutt, and Mr. Swabey Russell. Dr. E. H. Turpin accompanied.

"THE MESSIAH" was admirably performed at Trinity Presbyterian Church, Streatham, on the 7th ult., by a choir of about seventy voices, under the direction of Mr. William H. Thomson. The accompaniments were admirably played on the organ by Mr. J. Charlesworth, organist of the church.

SPOHR'S "Last Judgment" was performed at Hampstead Parish Church on the 9th ult. The soloists were Messrs. Reynolds Wood, Alfred Osmond, Clarke, and Master Herbert Harden. Mr. George Aitken, organist and choirmaster of the church, presided at the organ.

MR. FELIX MOSCHELES gave a very interesting lecture, with musical illustrations, at the Bishopsgate Institute, on the 20th ult., entitled "Mendelssohn as I remember him." Mr. Moscheles is the son of the famous pianist, Ignaz Moscheles, and a godson of the composer.

CONCERTS were given by the Eton College Musical Society on the 13th and 14th ult., under the direction of Dr. C. H. Lloyd. The programmes included Sir Frederick Bridge's choral ballad "The Inchcape Rock" and Sir Hubert Parry's "Eton."

THE ninth annual Morecambe musical festival and competition will be held on April 26, 27, 28, and 29, in the Winter Gardens, Morecambe, when the adjudicator will be Sir Frederick Bridge.

MR. GEORGE LANGLEY gave an illustrated lecture on "Music as a means of expression" at the Town Hall, Eastbourne, on November 29, treating his subject in a masterly manner.

THE dates fixed for the Worcester Musical Festival are September 10, 12, 13, 14, and 15.

MR. C. H. ALLEN GILL has been appointed assistant-conductor to the Alexandra Palace Choral Society.

FOREIGN NOTES.

AUGSBURG.—A performance of Handel's oratorio "Israel in Egypt" was given, on the 4th ult., by the Oratorio Verein, under the zealous conductorship of Herr Wilhelm Weber, and with leading artists from Munich and Vienna in the solo parts. The occasion was rendered special by the fact of Dr. Chrysander's edition of the work being used for the first time in Germany. The performance was excellent and produced a marked impression.

BERLIN.—The performance by the Sternsche Gesangverein of Handel's oraotrio "Deborah," on November 26, attracted a numerous audience and produced a very marked impression. It was the first Berlin production of the work as revised by Dr. Chrysander, and had been most carefully rehearsed by the distinguished conductor of the Society, Professor Gernsheim.——The concert given on the 5th ult. by the Wagner Verein was rendered specially interesting by the fact that Richard Strauss, the new Capellmeister of the Opera, conducted two new compositions from his own pen—Schiller's "Hymne" and Goethe's "Pilger's Morgenlied," in a setting for solo voice with orchestral accompaniment. Finely interpreted by Herr Scheidemantel, they were unanimously pronounced equal to the best efforts of their composer.

COLOGNE.—A grand concert was given on November 23, at the Gürzenich Hall, to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of Professor Isidor Seiss's conductorship of the Musik-Gesellschaft. A new symphony by Felix Weingartner was produced, for the first time, on November 30, at the same hall, under the composer's direction, and very favourably received. At the succeeding Gürzenich concert, the preludes to the second and third acts of the new opera by the talented composer, Arnold Mendelssohn, entitled "Der Bärenhäuter," obtained a first hearing, under Dr. Wüllner's direction, and stimulated the desire on the part of the audience to make the acquaintance of the entire work.

COPENHAGEN.—Dr. Joachim, who had not appeared here for over thirty years, gave a concert last month, and also played at one of the symphony concerts of the Royal Orchestra, arousing the audience to unwonted enthusiasm.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.—In the orchestral concert of the Museums Gesellschaft, of the 4th ult., Eugene d'Albert achieved considerable success with an excellent performance of his Symphony, No. 1, under his own direction. On the same occasion Mr. Harold Bauer made his first appearance before a Frankfort audience, whose enthusiastic approval he gained with a remarkably fine interpretation of Brahms's D minor Pianoforte Concerto.

GENEVA.—A highly interesting and successful recital was given on November 24, at the Conservatoire, by M. Brunet, professor of elocution, and the pianist, Herr Willy Rehberg, the programme comprising Tennyson's poem "Enoch Arden" (translated into French by Lucien de la Rive), with Richard Strauss's melo-dramatic music, and Bürger's ballade "Leonore," to the accompaniment of music by Liszt.

HAMBURG.—A very favourable reception was accorded, on November 25, at the Stadt-Theater, to a new opera, entitled "Hiol," with Frau Moran-Olden and Herr Somer in the principal parts. The composer, Richard Lederer, of Munich, was a painter of some repute before he devoted himself entirely to the art of music.——The directors of the Stadt-Theater have acquired the right of performance in Germany of Giordano's new opera "Fedora," which is already in preparation here. Amongst other new works to be brought out during the season are D'Albert's "Die Abreise" and the now completed comic opera by Siegfried Wagner, "Der Bärenhäuter," the son of the Bayreuth master having, by a coincidence, both a subject and title similar to that of the new operatic work by the Cologne composer, Arnold Mendelssohn.

LEIPZIG.—The seventh Gewandhaus concert of the season, under Herr Nikisch's direction, on November 24, included the first performance here of Smetana's symphonic poem "Vltava," from the cycle entitled "Mein Vaterland," which met with a most favourable reception. The vocalist, Madame Blanche Marchesi, was likewise heard here for the first time, and, very naturally, at once ingratiated herself into the favour of her audience.——The annual performance at the Royal Conservatorium, in memory of its benefactor, the late Professor Justus Rodius, was given on November 22. The programme included a new serenade for string orchestra by Dr. Carl Reinecke, the prelude to the opera "Melusine," by Grammann, and other orchestral works. In the solo productions the interpretation of several violoncello pieces by a pupil, Miss Constance Vipar, of Eastbourne, attracted very favourable attention.

MADRID.—The performance, on the 2nd ult., at the Royal Theatre, of a new opera in three acts entitled "Maria del Carmen," has produced quite a sensation, alike amongst amateurs and critics, on account of the originality, melodiousness, and dramatic power displayed in the score. The composer, Señor Enrique Granados, is a pupil of Felipe Pedrell, and his present first effort in dramatic composition is considered to justify the highest expectations in the future.

MAYENCE.—The combined choirs of the Liedertafel and the Damen Gesangverein, under the admirable conductorship of Herr Fritz Volbach, gave a highly appreciated performance, on the 3rd ult., of Liszt's seldom-heard 13th Psalm, for chorus and orchestra, and of Schubert's Mass in E flat major.

MILAN.—Umberto Giordano's new three-act opera "Fedora," brought out at the Teatro Lirico, on November 23, met with a most enthusiastic reception. Signora Gemma Bellincioni's interpretation of the titular part was excellent. The composer, who conducted, was recalled many times at the conclusion of a performance which had attracted music-lovers from all parts of Italy.

ST. PETERSBURG.—The directors of the Imperial Opera having acquired the exclusive right of performance in Russia of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," the work will be brought out in a Russian version by Tchechichin during the present season at the Marie Theatre.

SCHWERIN.—The first performance at the Court Theatre of the music-drama "Ingwelde," by Max Schillings, took place on November 29; Fräulein Friede and Herr Gura, son of the distinguished Munich baritone, taking the principal parts. The work is considered one of the most important modern German lyrical stage productions, and, with a view to its better appreciation, Herr Zumpe, the zealous conductor at the Court Theatre, delivered a public discourse on the work, with illustrative excerpts, on the eve of its performance.

STUTTGART.—Samuel de Lange's oratorio "Moses" was produced, for the first time in Germany, on November 30, by the Society for Classical Church Music. The choruses especially, in which some original Hebrew melodies have been introduced, met with much appreciation.

VIENNA.—A concert in aid of the projected Brahms monument was given by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, on the 11th ult., when the two great secular choral works of the master, the "Schicksalslied" and the "Triumphlied," were the principal numbers in the programme. Subscriptions to the fund, from France, were announced recently, amounting to over 53,000 francs.——The result has just been published of the International Prize Competition for a pianoforte concerto, instituted some time since by Herr Ludwig Bösendorfer, and in which seventy-two manuscript compositions had to be considered. The first prize has been awarded to Herr Edward Behm, the second to Herr Ernst von Dohnányi, and the third to Herr Jan Brandts.

OBITUARY.

THE death occurred, on the 2nd ult., at Neuilly, near Paris, of EMILIO PACINI, the distinguished librettist, at the mature age of eighty-eight. He was the son of the composer Giovanni Pacini, whose birth-centenary has recently been celebrated in Italy, and for many years occupied a post in the French Fine Arts Ministry. He wrote the libretto to Verdi's "Il Trovatore" and was also the author of the French version of "Der Freischütz" when that work was first produced at the Paris Opéra.

FRIEDRICH BRENNER, for upwards of forty years the highly esteemed musical director at the University of Dorpat, died on November 27, at Munich, aged eighty-four. He was considered in Germany as one of the best modern composers of Protestant Church music, amongst his best-known works being a "Choralbuch" and a number of four-part choral compositions.

WALTER LACY (Walter Williams) died at Brighton, on the 13th ult., in his ninetieth year. In former days Mr. Lacy was one of the best comedians of his time. He will be remembered by many old students of the Royal Academy of Music as professor of elocution in that Institution, where his handsome and commanding presence made him a "feature" of Tenterden Street in the old days. His professorship at the Academy extended from January, 1863, to September, 1890—a period of upwards of twenty-seven years.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDWARD GERMAN'S "HAMLET."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I thank you for the appreciative notice contained in your last issue of my Symphonic Poem "Hamlet," which was performed at Mr. Robert Newman's Symphony concert on October 29. The notice, however, contains an inference to the effect that Mr. Henry J. Wood, who conducted the work, had not taken such pains with its performance as he possibly might have done had it been the product of a foreign composer.

In this connection I feel it is only my duty to state that for Mr. Wood to have taken greater pains with my work than he actually did would have been quite impossible.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
EDWARD GERMAN.

ROBERT BROWNING AS A MUSICIAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In corroboration of Mr. Charles Fry's remarks on "Robert Browning as a Musician" in your October issue, perhaps the following extract from a paper containing reminiscences of the poet by Mrs. Bloomfield Moore in Lippincott's for May, 1890, may prove of interest to your readers.

"He possessed the gift of improvising at the piano. To listen was to be entranced as by the rapt strains of Beethoven's compositions or of Mendelssohn's glorious melodies, as the poet's hands swept the keys, passing from one theme to another; but you could listen only once to the same strains; the inspiration came and went; the poet could never repeat his melodies. Few there were who knew of this divine gift, for only to those who were most intimate with him did he reveal himself in this way. He shunned everything like ostentation."

That Browning had also a sound technical knowledge of music no one who has read "Abt Vogler," "A Toccata of Galuppi's," or that most animated and amusing description of a fugue in "Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha" can deny, while no less an authority than the late Sir Charles Hallé has remarked on the poet's familiarity with music by certain of the earlier, little-known composers of which even he (Hallé) was unaware.

Had Browning's genius found its outlet in music instead of literature, what a musician we might have had!

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
Glasgow. GILBERT S. FERRIER.

THE SCHERZO OF THE CHORAL SYMPHONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Permit me, as a humble and non-performing amateur, to record my protest against the remarks of your critic in dealing with Mr. Henry J. Wood's recent rendering of the Scherzo of the Choral Symphony.

My reason for doing so is that I have twice heard this Symphony under Dr. Richter, who is certainly no sentimental "purist"; and if my ears have not deceived me, he follows the score, fortissimo strings included.

Apart from the unique authority of Richter in the interpretation of Beethoven, I cannot believe that your critic is artistically right in his contention. I assume that the horns are made to play in octaves with the lower wood-wind parts. But, in the first place, does the timbre of the horn lend itself to this, and next, is it necessary to import that timbre into the "pretty tune"? In Richter's reading the gay outburst is striking and charming in the extreme, the flutes especially asserting themselves through the octave figure of the strings. And, further, is it certain that Beethoven wanted more than a flavour, so to speak, of the "tune"?

Last time I heard the "Choral" I remarked with delight to my neighbour that the melody in the passage in question was not given to the horns; and, for myself, I shall think it time to talk of change when Richter does so.

Your critic ends by asserting, with a crack of his whip, his "unrepentant mind." This is very sad. I trust that, in due time, he will find a place of repentance in your columns.

With many thanks for your ever-delightful paper,

I am, &c.,
R. H. E. Bayles.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Ashford (Kent).—The combined forces of the local choral and orchestral societies in this town gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," on November 24, in the Corn Exchange. The solos were sung by Miss Amy Harding, Mrs. E. Colville, Mr. Wilfred Kearton (Of St. George's Chapel, Windsor), and Mr. Byron Dewhurst (of Canterbury Cathedral). "But the Lord is mindful" was sung with great pathos by Mrs. E. Colville and "Be thou faithful unto death" received a beautiful rendering by Mr. W. Kearton. The chorus sang well throughout, more especially in "Happy and blest are they" and "Is this he?" The band played the accompaniments with great care. The performance was conducted by Dr. Wilks, to whom Ashford is greatly indebted, as both societies owe their existence entirely to his interest and energy.

Barnet.—Mr. W. R. Driffill's Choral Society gave a successful performance of Sullivan's "Golden Legend," in the Town Hall, on the 8th ult. The soloists were Miss Lillian Foote, Miss Ada Kempton, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Albert E. Rayner, all of whom were efficient in their respective parts. Miss Barnetta Bowden presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Douglas Jones officiated at the organ. Mr. Driffill conducted with marked ability.——Mr. J. F. Barnett's "The Ancient Mariner" was performed by the Barnet Choral Society at its concert in the Town Hall, on November 29. The vocalists were Miss Winnifred Wynne, Miss M. Ingram Tucker, Mr. Trefelyn David, and Mr. Robert Grice, who did full justice to their respective solos. A small orchestra was supplemented by the pianoforte (Miss Ida M. Knott and Miss Lucy E. Richards) and organ (Mr. W. A. Richards). The performance, efficiently conducted by Mr. Frank B. Wood, reflected credit upon all concerned. The programme did not contain the composer's name!

Basingstoke.—The first concert of the Choral Society for the season was given in the Town Hall, on the 8th ult., when a miscellaneous selection, consisting of Stanford's "Revenge" and Mendelssohn's "Loreley" (with Miss Amy Sargent as the soprano soloist), was performed. Mr. Arthur Strong played three violoncello solos, Miss Amy Sargent and Mr. Reginald Chalcraft contributed some songs, Mrs. H. Seymour was the accompanist, and Mr. H. E. Powell, as usual, conducted.

Bath.—The Bath Choral and Orchestral Society, at its first concert of the season, on the 19th ult., performed Dr. C. H. Lloyd's "Hero and Leander" and Mr. Edward Elgar's growingly popular choral-ballad "The Banner of St. George." Both these works were admirably rendered by the Society, under the skilful conductorship of Mr. Sims. The vocalists were Miss Alice Esty and Mr. Douglas Powell, both of whom did full justice to the music assigned to them, and Mr. J. W. Duys played Wieniawski's Second Violin Concerto with brilliant effect.

Berkhamsted.—A successful performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given by the members of the Church Choral Society, in the Parish Church, on the evening of the 8th ult. The solos were well sustained by Miss Whitfield, Mrs. Ling, Mr. E. Branscombe, and Mr. Streatfield. An orchestra of strings, drums, and brass was most ably led by Mr. Halfpenny. The choruses were attacked with vigour, especially "Stone him to death" and "Rise up, arise." Mr. S. Mosdell presided at the organ and Mr. W. H. London conducted.

Bishops Stortford.—Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given in the Parish Church on a recent Wednesday evening, under the able direction of the organist and choirmaster of the church, Mr. A. Eaglefield Hull, who presided at the organ. The soloists were Master Harold Curd (solo chorister of St. Albans, Holborn), Messrs. Watson, Rodway, Searles, Ackermann, and Dupère, all of whom realised their respective responsibilities. On the 19th ult. Mr. A. E. Hull gave a lecture before the Students' Association on "Early Music."

Bradfield.—The annual school concert at Bradfield College took place on the 17th ult., under the direction of Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams. The chief feature of interest was the performance of S. P. Waddington's "John Gilpin" by the College choir and orchestra, which was rendered with great vivacity and go. Mr. A. M. C. Nicholl, the Senior Prefect, was deservedly encored for his singing of "Nazareth." Professor Bower received a similar compliment for his violoncello solo. The orchestra performed creditably in the first movement of Beethoven's Symphony (No. 1) and the War March of the Priests from "Athalie." Mr. Williams is to be congratulated on the high standard of music attained at Bradfield.

Bromley (Kent).—The Bromley Philharmonic Association gave its first concert of the season on the 14th ult., at the Drill Hall. The programme included Alice Mary Smith's "Ode to the North-East Wind," Anderton's "Wreck of the Hesperus," and Eaton Faning's "Miller's Wooing." The soloists were Miss Cordelia Grylls, Mr. Bert Pearce, and Mr. Cyril Streatfeild. The string band was ably led by Mr. Norman Bath and Mr. T. Chambers presided at the pianoforte. The conductor was Mr. Frederic Fertel.——The first part of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was performed at the Parish Church on the 7th ult., by the choir, in conjunction with that of St. Mark's Church, under the direction of Mr. Frederic Fertel, who officiated at the organ. The soloists were Master Stevens and Messrs. Dutton, H. R. and B. H. Latter.

Chard.—Haydn's evergreen "Creation" was selected for performance by the Chard Harmonic Society at its concert on the 8th ult. The soloists were Miss Ethel Wynn (who efficiently replaced Miss Nellie Palmer, absent through illness), Mr. Morgan, and Mr. Brandon, both of the Bristol Cathedral choir. The chorus sang throughout with marked success, the unusually distinct enunciation of the words being a commendable feature. The band, too, led by Mr. R. Crawford, discharged its important duties with distinct credit, and it had a fine opportunity to display its efficiency in Edward German's Three Dances from the music to "Henry VIII." The popular conductor of the Society, the Rev. H. N. Dymond, led his forces in a manner calling for the highest praise.

Cirencester.—A singularly impressive Advent service was held in the Parish Church, on the 14th ult., when Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given by the choir, assisted by the following soloists: Master Willie Gammage, Master James McBean, Mr. A. Kenningham, and Mr. G. Stubbs, under the able direction of Mr. A. H. Gibbons, the organist of the church.

Chorlton-cum-Hardy (Manchester).—On the 14th ult., at the Macfadyen Memorial Congregational Church, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung by the choir and Choral Society. The soloists were Madame Lizzie Burgess and Mr. G. A. Seebohm. Both the principals, as well as the chorus, gave an excellent rendering of the work. Mr. James Haley (of the Hallé orchestra) played a violin solo in the second part. Mr. G. F. Walter, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted.

Dover.—The Dover Choral Union gave a specially interesting concert in the Town Hall, on the 7th ult.—interesting from the fact that a new cantata, composed by the popular conductor of the Society, Mr. H. J. Taylor, was performed for the first time. The title of the new work is "The Last Supper," which received an admirable rendering by band and chorus alike. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Daisy Boyton, and Mr. Iver McKay. The concert began and ended with Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and "Hymn of Praise" respectively. Mr. H. J. Taylor, who conducted with conspicuous ability, received a perfect ovation at the conclusion of the performance of his new cantata.

Durban.—Mr. George C. Macfarlane gave a vocal and instrumental concert in the Town Hall, on November 19, of which the chief features were a Suite de Ballet by Mr. Charles Hoby (performed for the first time in its entirety and conducted by the composer) and Edward German's "Henry VIII." Dances. The concert-giver contributed some tenor songs, and Mr. R. Houston Macdonald, the Borough organist, contributed an organ solo. Mr. Hoby and Mr. J. F. Proudman were the accompanists.

Eastbourne.—Under the able baton of Mr. Stephen Sangster, a successful performance of Handel's "The Messiah" was given on the 15th ult., in the Devonshire Park Pavilion, by the Musical Society, with orchestral accompaniment. The solos were sung by Miss Louise Burns, Miss Minnie Chamberlain, Mr. Wills Page, and Mr. Felix Hotchkiss.

Foots Cray.—The members of the Foots Cray Choral and Orchestral Society gave a successful performance of Cowen's "St. John's Eve," on the 15th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. James H. Stevens. The solos were ably sustained by Miss Alice M. Langley, Miss Margaret Francis, Mr. Bert Pearce, and Mr. Richard Langley. The tenor solo and tenor and soprano duet were well received, as were also several of the choruses. Both chorus and orchestra (led by Mr. B. Mills Francis) acquitted themselves admirably.

Gloucester.—On the 19th ult. the Choral Society performed Coleridge-Taylor's cantata "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" with much success; the performance reflecting great credit on the conductor, Mr. A. Herbert Brewer. Mr. Iver McKay did full justice to the beautiful tenor love song.

Gravesend.—Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens" in its new form was given by the Gravesend and Milton Choral Association on November 30, at the Public Hall, under the able conductorship of Mr. C. R. Green, Miss Maggie Davies and Mr. Dan Price being the soloists. The rendering of the work by the band (led by Mr. W. Frye Parker) and chorus was exceptionally good, and the popularity of Beethoven's characteristic music was fully maintained.

Grimsby.—The popularity of Mr. J. F. Barnett's cantata "The Ancient Mariner" was further demonstrated at its performance in the Town Hall, on the 6th ult., by the Grimsby and District Philharmonic Society. The solos were admirably rendered by Miss Ethel M. Wood, Miss Isa Frood, Mr. Walter Driver, and Mr. William Riley. A specially engaged professional orchestra and chorus (100 performers) did full justice to Mr. Barnett's dramatic music. Mr. Walter Porter again proved himself to be the right man in the right place as conductor.

Hastings.—Two interesting musical events took place in All Saints' Church on the 14th ult. In the afternoon an organ recital was given, at which Miss Abram, Miss Innocent, Mr. D'Arcy Clayton, and Mr. Arthur Walenn sang with much acceptance, and Dr. Abram, the well-known organist of the church, played five organ solos with all possible effect. In the evening Gounod's "Redemption" received an excellent rendering by the members of the Choral Union, assisted by the above-named vocalists, with the addition of Miss Sybil Innocent. Mr. Percy Kennard presided at the organ, and Dr. Abram conducted with the wisdom that comes from experience and musicianly equipment.

High Wycombe.—The Wycombe Choral Association, with Miss Louise Burns, Miss Florence Croft, Mr. Reginald Brophy, and Mr. Edward Jackson as soloists, rendered Spohr's "Last Judgment" with admirable effect at the Central Hall on the 5th ult. The chorus, especially in the pianissimo passages, was perfectly under the control of its skilful conductor, Mr. J. G. Wrigley.

Ilford.—The Vocal Society and Orchestral Union gave Bridge's "Rock of Ages," Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and Spohr's "Last Judgment" on the 1st ult. Mr. Henry Riding was the organist and Mr. A. Storr conducted.

Kettering.—At the dedication festival of St. Andrew's Church, on November 30, an orchestra of strings was used with the organ. The Canticles were sung to Stanford in A and the anthem was Beethoven's Hallelujah chorus from the "Mount of Olives." After the service selections were played from the works of Handel, Smart, and Mackenzie, under the direction of Mr. A. H. Essam, organist and choirmaster of the church.

Leek. — The eighty-ninth concert of the Amateur Musical Society was given in the Town Hall on the 12th ult. Handel's popular oratorio "Judas Maccabæus" was chosen for performance, and it received an adequate rendering by the band and chorus of the Society. The soloists were Miss Rosa Travis, Miss Annie Sumerling, Mr. Edward Kemp, and Mr. S. Heath. Mr. J. Matthews, of Liverpool, led the orchestra, and Mr. W. H. Eaton presided at the organ. Mr. James Gwynne conducted with his usual alertness and skill.

Loughton.—Lloyd's "Hero and Leander" and a selection of operatic choruses by Wagner and Gounod were very well given by the Loughton Choral Society, in the Public Hall, on the 5th ult., with Mr. H. Riding as conductor.

Madeley.—"The Messiah" was most successfully given in the Anstice Memorial Institute, on the 20th ult. The soloists were Miss Maude Ballard (soprano), Miss Marian Blinkhorn (contralto), Mr. W. Anstice (tenor), and Mr. W. J. Ineson (bass). Mr. James Smart conducted an admirable performance of Handel's familiar masterpiece.

Monmouth. — A successful performance of Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" was given in the Rolls Hall, on the 15th ult., by the Monmouthshire Musical Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. G. Renecle. The soloists were Miss Lindsay Watson (Edinburgh), Miss F. Evans (Hereford), Mr. Geo. Banks (Hereford Cathedral), and Mr. J. Edmonde. The accompaniments were rendered by a string band, the wind parts being played on the organ by Mr. C. H. Payne and the harp part on the pianoforte by Miss Enid Payne. The violinist in the second part of the concert was Miss Noverre, who played Wieniawski's "Légende."

Newport (Mon.). — An admirable performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given in the Temperance Hall, on the 15th ult., by the Gwent Choir, with full orchestral and organ accompaniment. The soloists were Miss Nellie Jones, Miss Mabel James, Mr. E. T. Morgan, and Mr. J. Doll. The choir sang with spirit and precision and produced a fine body of tone. Mrs. Alfred Morris was an able conductor.

Reading.—The Reading Philharmonic Society gave a fine performance of Gounod's "Redemption" in the Large Town Hall, on the 6th ult. The soloists were Miss Stella Maris, Miss Ethel Bevans, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Franklin Clive, all of whom acquitted themselves with distinction. The chorus sang throughout with great expression, and the rendering of the whole work reflected the highest credit on the able and veteran conductor of the Society, Mr. W. H. Strickland. Mr. A. F. Rippon was leader of the band and Mr. W. D. Boseley was an efficient organist.

St. Albans.—The St. Albans Oratorio Society gave its first performance of the season on the 6th ult. The choral works were Schubert's "Song of Miriam" and Stanford's "Phaudrig Crohoore," and the instrumental numbers included Mozart's G minor Symphony and "Figaro" Overture, and, of special interest, an admirable festival overture by Mr. W. H. Speer, the excellent conductor of the Society. The last-named work was composed for the Bournemouth Symphony concerts. The soloist was Madame Bertha Rossow, who sang with much acceptance.

ST. HELENS.—The St. Helens Choral Society opened its season on November 21 by a choral and orchestral concert, when the principal choral features were Sir Frederick Bridge's "Flag of England" and Mendelssohn's Finale to "Loreley." The soprano solos in both works were well sung by Miss Alice Esty. The band and chorus, numbering 140 performers, under the skilful conductorship of Mr. J. T. Elliott, proved to be most capable and effective.

SIDCUP.—The Musical Society gave a very creditable performance of Handel's "Saul," in the Public Hall, on the 12th ult. The choruses in Handel's fine work were sung with the greatest precision and intelligence. The solos were in the safe keeping of Madame Ada Paterson, Miss Marion Blinkhorn, Mr. William Fell, and Mr. Frank Wilson. Mr. Newlandsmith was the leader of the orchestra, and Mr. A. E. Butterworth conducted with conspicuous ability.

THORNHILL LEES (DEWSBURY).—Stainer's popular cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" was excellently performed by the Choral Society, in the Memorial Schools, on November 29, by an orchestra and chorus of fifty performers. The soloists were Madame Barter, Mr. Henry Norbury, and Mr. Fred. Hirst. Mr. J. R. Kilner conducted with marked efficiency. The Rev. W. J. Holloway accompanied.

WALSALL.—The Philharmonic Union gave its first concert of the season in the Temperance Hall, on the 12th ult., with Miss Kate Cove, Miss Marguerite Gell, Mr. Charles Ellison, and Mr. Robert Carter as principals, and a band and chorus of 150 performers. The works performed were Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" and "Ode to the Passions," both of which were admirably rendered and much appreciated by a large audience. Special mention must be made of the brilliant pianoforte playing of Miss Florence Gittings in Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto in E minor, whereby this gifted young lady received an enthusiastic recall. Mr. Amos Keay, who conducted, through the unfortunate illness of the Society's conductor, Dr. Swinnerton Heap, proved himself to be an excellent substitute.

WIMBORNE.—The annual performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" took place in Wimborne Minster on the 14th ult. The solos were sung by Mr. Haydn, of Salisbury Cathedral, Messrs. G. F. Score and A. Wareham, of Wimborne Minster, and Master J. McBean, of Holy Trinity Church, Wandsworth. The work, accompanied by strings, wood-wind, drums, and organ, was conducted by Mr. J. Edis Tidnam, organist of the Minster.

WORCESTER.—The first concert of the season of the Worcester Musical Society took place in the Public Hall, on the 13th ult., when Spohr's "God, Thou art great," and Elgar's "Banner of St. George" (the latter for the first time in Worcester) were admirably performed by a band and chorus of 120 performers. The soloists were Miss Laura Taylor, Miss Spackman, Mr. Henry Peacey, and the Rev. A. L. E. Griffiths. In the "Banner of St. George" band and chorus literally came off with flying colours, and Mr. W. Mann Dyson, the excellent conductor of the Society, had every reason to be proud of the forces under his control. The programme also included Gounod's "Judex" ("Mors et Vita") and Wolstenholme's Intermezzo for orchestra, entitled "Phantasy." Mr. W. H. Dyson was the leader of the orchestra and Mr. W. C. Box presided at the organ.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Howard Moss, Organist and Choirmaster to Gravesend Parish Church.—Mr. R. H. Whall, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Chepstow.—Mr. Raymond Bennett, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John's, Angel Town, Brixton.—Mr. Kenneth G. Burns, Organist and Director of the Choir to Christ Church, Beckenham.—Mr. Matthew Dunn, Organist and Choirmaster to the Church of St. John the Baptist, Kingston Vale.—Mr. C. Luther Martin, Organist and Director of Music at Bath College.

CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Harry Elliott (Bass), to Peterborough Cathedral.—Mr. F. Horace Robinson (Tenor), to Christ Church, Blackfriars Road.—Mr. Lewis S. G. Hayward (Alto), to Christ Church, Norwood.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

BARITONE.—(1) We think you are wrong in your reference. It was in regard to the registration of Bach's "Schmücke dich, O liebe Seele," that Mendelssohn wrote, and not as to his own organ sonatas. See the letter, dated "Munich, October 6, 1831," in Mendelssohn's "Letters from Italy and Switzerland," p. 289, et seq. (2) The dot is probably omitted after the crotchet in your copy of Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso (Op. 14), hence your difficulty. Hans von Bülow, in his edition of the work (his interesting preface is well worth perusal), gives the rate ♩. = 96 (100), but he himself would probably have played it faster.

L. P.—The statement that the Maccabean Hymn (sung at the recent Jewish military service at the Central Synagogue) was by Mendelssohn is an error of the newspaper reporter, as it was sung as usual to its traditional tune. The Maccabean Hymn is a hymn in honour of the success of the Maccabees, and is always sung at the Maccabean Festival (Chanucah). We hope to refer to the matter more fully in our next issue, from information supplied by one of the best authorities on the subject.

J. C.—"The Shepherd's song" (Hirtenleid) was originally written by Mendelssohn as a solo. The autograph is dated "April 20, 1839," and it was published as No. 2 of Op. 57. In the summer of the same year—MS. dated "14 June, 1839"—he arranged it as a four-part song. It was not, however, published in that form during his lifetime. It appeared as No. 3 of Op. 88, the seventeenth of the Posthumous works.

A. O. B.—For pieces for small orchestra suitable for performance at an amateur dramatic entertainment, you will find the following suitable:—"Marjorie" Gavotte, John E. West; "Henry VIII." Dances, Edward German; Gavotte, Sir G. J. Elvey; Four English Dances, F. H. Cowen; "Westwood" Gavotte, Battison Haynes.

PIANIST.—Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto may be played at the following rates of speed:—First movement, 𝅗𝅥 = 120; second movement, ♪ = 96; last movement, 𝅗𝅥 = 100.

H. G.—The tune "St. Raphael," by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, can be sung to the hymn "Lo! He comes with clouds descending," without any repetition of the fifth (short) line.

J. H.—You would probably obtain a copy of the service book by writing to Dr. G. J. Bennett, 7, Eastgate, Lincoln, and enclosing thirteen stamps.

H. W.—We cannot give the names of "good coaches." Write to the Registrar, Victoria University, Manchester.

AVELINA.—The second subject really begins at bar 17. The sonata is somewhat of the Fantasia species.

⁂ Notices of Concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded to us immediately after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot possibly be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S

PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK
FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

NOVELLO'S
VILLAGE CHANT BOOK
No. II.

CONTAINING

50 DOUBLE CHANTS.

Price Sixpence.

The Chants contained in the above collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. 2 (No. 23, by Lord Mornington), which is included on account of its great popularity.

NEW SACRED CANTATA

THE ROLLING SEASONS
By CALEB SIMPER.

Price 1s. 6d. net; Sol-fa, 1s. net.
Orchestral parts are published.

The work occupies about thirty-five minutes in performance.

From the Alderney Gazette: "We strongly advise all organists and choirmasters to get it, for a more tuneful, melodious, and effective composition we have seldom heard. The whole of the Cantata was a treat to hear."

From the Belfast News Letter: "An attractive and splendid little work; abounds in exquisite passages—exceedingly bright and tuneful. The Symphony is a most charming number, the brass, the reeds, and strings in turn contributing to make quite a pretty tone-picture. The work was followed with great interest by the large audience, which frequently testified its approval with enthusiastic applause."

A pamphlet containing recent and numerous opinions will be sent on application to the Composer, Barnstaple.

The following New Music will be ready about January 20:—

Benedicite, No. 6 (Order by the Number only) .. .. .. 2d.
A splendid and interesting arrangement. Exceptionally good.
He liveth unto God. Easter Anthem. (Sol-fa, 2d.) .. .. 3d.
Very effective and varied, with brilliant final Chorus.
No. 5. Anniversary Selection. Sol-fa or O.N. .. .. each 2d.
Contains eight charming pieces. All gems.
Walk about Sion. General and Anniversary Anthem .. .. 3d.
Exceedingly attractive. Will be sure to become a universal favourite.

AN ENTIRELY NEW AND CAREFULLY REVISED EDITION
MENDELSSOHN'S
LIEDER OHNE WORTE
EDITED AND FINGERED BY KARL KLINDWORTH.

This new edition of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte will supersede all others and will rank with Professor Klindworth's unrivalled edition of Chopin. Its educational value is greatly enhanced by the valuable annotations of the learned Editor in his Preface and Explanatory Notes, the result of his unique experience as a teacher and as an editor of pianoforte classics. The Historical Notes, specially written for this edition, give fresh and interesting information regarding these familiar pianoforte pieces.

YE JACOBITES BY NAME. Poem by ROBERT BURNS.

THE FAREWELL. Poem by ROBERT BURNS.

THE LAWLANDS O' HOLLAND. Old Ballad.

A SONG OF INNOCENCE. Poem by WILLIAM BLAKE.

Price Two Shillings each.

"Dr. H. Walford Davies's settings of Rudyard Kipling's 'Our Lady of the Snows' and 'Hymn before Action' are stirring and spirited in no ordinary degree; not only are the melodies of entire originality and their treatment worthy in all respects of the composer's high position among the younger generation of English musicians, but the songs have the splendid swing and force that make for universal and permanent popularity. 'The Farewell' and 'Ye Jacobites by Name,' set by the same composer to Burns's words, are gloriously gallant and vigorous songs, and in Blake's 'Little lamb, who made thee?' Dr. Davies shows that he can represent the tender mood of the 'Songs of Innocence' no less successfully than the martial vein of the modern poet."—The Times.

SONGS by GRAHAM P. MOORE.

NO ANSWER. Poem by ROBERT REINICK.

WANDERER'S NIGHT SONG. Poem by EICHENDORFF.

TO THE ABSENT ONE. Poem by GOETHE.

A RED, RED ROSE. Poem by ROBERT BURNS.

THE DREAM OF YOUTH. Poem by OELBERMANN.

HOW WONDROUS FAIR THOU ART. Poem by STRACHWITZ.

Price Two Shillings each.

"The songs are one and all the work of a sound musician, with something of his own to say, and a most graceful and effective way of saying it. 'No Answer!' and 'The Dream of Youth' will perhaps be the most successful, but cultivated amateurs will find in the version of 'An die ferne Geliebte' distinction and beauty of a rare kind."—The Times.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

A CANTATA

FOR TENOR SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 30.)

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
String Parts in the Press; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

. . . As clever, musicianly, and masterly in its way as anything its author has yet done. Moreover, it is full of a picturesqueness and a freshness that are rare even among much older composers. The part-writing is clear and eminently singable without ever being obvious, and the orchestration is vigorous and sometimes brilliant, though never too obtrusive. But it is even more in the invention of his themes than in his treatment of them, whether for voice or instruments, or both, that Mr. Coleridge-Taylor shines. Often and often again he happens upon a haunting theme or phrase, which clings to the ear because it is fresh and hitherto unheard. The first part of the tenor solo—the tenor being the only soloist employed—for example, is of exquisite beauty.

STANDARD.

Music which expresses with remarkable truth and force the wild environment of the poem. In its economic use of thematic material, reiteration of short and striking phrases, boldness of harmonic progressions and transitions, and picturesqueness of orchestration, the music has much in common with the style of Dvorák, but it also possesses a freshness and individuality which proclaims Mr. Coleridge-Taylor to be singularly gifted, and justify expectancy of works from his pen of great musical interest and value. "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" is set out for chorus and tenor solo, and the latter is the gem of the work. Tenor vocalists have rarely had a more beautiful and impassioned love-song written for them.

TELEGRAPH.

Reveals not only a remarkable gift of melody, but exhibits great variety and fertility of resource in handling his orchestra. . . . Let it suffice to note that a "motto" theme, heard both at the commencement and end of the work, is freely employed at various points on the journey. The narrative is carried forward by the chorus, one solo, for tenor, at "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" providing agreeable relief. The song is, indeed, charmingly melodious. . . . Just previously, the setting of the lines commencing "Then said they to Chibiabos" for chorus lightly accompanied, is quite pleasing, and a touch of humour illuminates the pages wherein is described the boastful character of Iagoo.

THE GUARDIAN.

We are free to express sincere admiration for his setting—by turns exhilarating and pathetic—of that portion of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" which describes the wedding feast of the hero. The composer has managed, with singular insight, to convey the impression of primitive gaiety natural to such an occasion and to such dramatis personæ. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a genuine tune-coiner; he also shows a remarkable command of the orchestra . . . while of the bulk of the work it would be true to say that no one but Mr. Coleridge-Taylor could have written it. The reception of the cantata was most enthusiastic. Indeed, the whole cantata has the quality, rare in modern music, of appealing immediately to the hearer. . . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is richly endowed with one sovereign antidote to satiety in his hearers—the capacity of indefinitely varying his themes; also that, while he excels in the musical delineation of primitive or even barbaric emotions, his melodies are always redeemed from triviality by some unexpected yet unstudied deviation from the obvious. Best of all, he shows a sensitive appreciation of romantic beauty. Nothing is finer in Longfellow's poem than the simple touch of the departure of the guests, leaving the hero alone "with the night and Minnehaha," a passage which is set to the most tender and haunting strain in the entire work.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It has the same strong vitality, the same youthful energy that characterised the Ballade. Here, where the composer has had more scope, he has shown even more convincingly his resources as a melodist. . . . The tunefulness that is manifested in every page of "Hiawatha" has the great charm of spontaneity, the melodies abound with life and energy, indeed, a large proportion of them have a distinctly dance-like rhythm. . . . There is, however, no want of variety in the music, which sweeps along with a force that carries all before it. . . . "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" proves, as might be expected, the most prominent feature of the work. It is, indeed, a remarkably beautiful tenor solo, melodious, sensuous, charmingly coloured, and thoroughly vocal and grateful to the singer. . . . Throughout the work the music is distinguished by unfailing resource, by a spring of melody that never runs dry, and by a picturesqueness that is in perfect keeping with the subject; in short, it is long since we have come upon a young composer whose work is not only so full of promise, but is in itself so fresh and well sustained.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

*UNA

SIXTH AND SEVENTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Ninth and Tenth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twentieth to Twenty-fifth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FIFTH AND SIXTH THOUSAND.

RODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

*ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal Parts, each 1s. Words only, *7s. 6d.; †5s. per 100.

A NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION
A HANDBOOK
EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC
CONTAINING
600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS
BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,
Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A. E. A. D.

MR. T. HENRY BREARLEY

(TENOR),
Principal, Leeds Parish Church Choir; of the Leeds Festival Concerts, 1898.

"Creation" (Lancaster Choral Society).—"Mr. T. Henry Brearley was thoroughly at home in the music allotted to him, and he made the most use of his good voice without forcing his effects, while giving sufficient expression to his declamatory solos. With his singing of 'Now vanish before the holy beams,' it was at once apparent that he would be thoroughly successful, and he drew forth a cordial demonstration of approval for the manner in which he rendered 'In native worth' and the recitative 'In rosy mantle.' It is some time since we listened with more pleasure to a tenor singer in the Palatine Hall."—Lancaster Standard, December 30, 1898.

"Messiah" (Edinburgh Choral Union).—"Mr. T. Henry Brearley, a tenor, with a voice of fine quality, did his part every justice. He had a successful opening with 'Comfort ye' and 'Every valley,' and, later on, 'Thou shalt break them' was dramatically rendered."—Evening Despatch, January 2, 1899.

"Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast."—"The solo, 'Onaway! Awake, beloved!' was very finely rendered last evening by Mr. Brearley, who took and sustained the high B flat with ease."—Leeds Mercury, January 6, 1899.

"The tenor solo was exactly suited to Mr. Brearley's beautiful voice."—Yorkshire Post, January 6, 1899.

Address, 32, Ella Street, Leeds.

WINCHESTER CHRONICLE.

"Mr. G. B. Hoskings, the tenor, displayed an excellent voice, especially noticeable in 'Cujus animam.'"

ISLE OF WIGHT COUNTY PRESS,
December 17, 1898.

"Mr. George Hoskings (tenor) was Olybius, the lover of the martyr, and his singing was both sweet and forceful and done with telling effect throughout. 'Come, Margarita, come,' was nicely done, and 'Curse upon this faith' was a good example of his power. . . . Mr. Hoskings's clever singing received due recognition at the hands of the audience, and he and Miss Crosby had to acknowledge such recognition for the duet 'Have mercy.' The trio by Julia, Olybius, and Callias, given unaccompanied, was yet another good piece of vocalisation."

ISLE OF WIGHT OBSERVER,
December 17, 1898.

"Mr. George Hoskings sang the solos allotted to Olybius with the greatest ease and finish, and it is long since a gentleman with such a finished and well-controlled tenor voice has been heard in Ryde. His solos were all greatly appreciated, but his best effort was his rendering of the solo 'See what Olybius' love prepares for thee.' Another enjoyable and well rendered solo was 'Come, Margarita, come.' A musical treat, however, was the duet between Mr. George Hoskings and Miss Lilian Crosby (Margarita), which was exceedingly well rendered, and loudly applauded by the audience."

"Ryde Musical Society,
"Dec. 17, 1898.

"Dear Mr. Hoskings,

. . . .

"I must offer you my thanks and congratulations upon your very spirited performance. You pleased me exceedingly, and I shall retain the impression you gave me a long time.

"I am, yours faithfully,
"Frank C. Wardall
"(Conductor)."

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
FEBRUARY 1, 1899.

GEORGE RISELEY.

Bristol bred and born is the alliterative birthright of the subject of this biographical sketch. George Riseley first saw the light in the city of the West on August 28, 1845. The family consisted of a nonet—three girls and half-a-dozen boys. A remarkable and probably unique circumstance is that all the six boys were choristers of the Cathedral—in fact, the choir of Bristol bristled with rising Riseleys! Thomas, the eldest, after being assistant at Bristol, became organist of Calcutta Cathedral; he subsequently returned to England and, previous to his death at Kensington, was organist of Cheltenham College; John, the second boy, was organist of St. John's Church, Bristol.

George, the fourth of the Riseley boys, entered the choir of Bristol Cathedral in 1852. He was then seven years old, and thus early he began that long connection with the Cathedral of his native city, as chorister, assistant-organist, and organist, which was severed only last year—a period extending to upwards of forty-six years. When his voice broke, a commercial career was proposed for the boy, as it was not thought desirable that two brothers should follow the profession of music in the same city. However, after the departure of his brother Thomas for India, George in 1862 was articled to John Davis Corfe, who was organist of Bristol Cathedral for fifty-one years. Corfe was a good all-round musician and an excellent accompanist. Though naturally of the old school and of the pre-C organ period, he tried to keep himself abreast of the times, and, to this end, he had a set of C pedals attached to his pianoforte. He was always exceedingly kind to Riseley and not a little proud of his pupil. He would frequently attend the recitals in the Colston Hall, and at his death in 1876 he bequeathed to George Riseley the sum of £100.

Riseley's master, the Bristol Corfe, was a brother of Dr. Corfe, organist of Christ Church, Oxford, the "Corfe-mixture" member of that cathedralesque family. Riseley often played at Oxford for Dr. "Corfe-mixture" Corfe when that worthy was taking his long walks, the organ being then on the floor of the Cathedral. And in this connection it is interesting to record that one of Mr. Riseley's pupils, Dr. Basil Harwood, is now organist of Christ Church Cathedral.[*]

EARLY STUDIES.

As he did not begin the serious study of music until he was seventeen, Riseley had a great deal of leeway to make up, especially in regard to pianoforte and organ technique. He, therefore, unknown to Corfe, spent a month's holiday in London in taking organ lessons from George Cooper, who numbered amongst his pupils Sir John Stainer and Sir Walter Parratt. He worked through Bach and Mendelssohn with Cooper, and well remembers how the congregation at St. Sepulchre's, Holborn, would begin to assemble after the sermon, in order to hear Cooper's masterly performances in the way of going-out, or—as it proved to be—coming-in voluntaries. He also took lessons in theory from Dr. Steggall, who, by the way, also taught Sir John Stainer.

[*] "Being a musician of the old type, Dr. Corfe rarely changed his stops during the Psalms. Ouseley and his young friends got so accustomed to one particular quality of tone that they named it the Corfe-mixture. Ouseley knew that Dr. Corfe always at the close of one service prepared his stops for the giving out of the chant at the next. Moreover, Dr. Corfe was fond of long walks, and made a point of rushing into the organ-loft just in time to place his hands on the keys. This offered a temptation to the undergraduates which was irresistible. Watching Corfe safely out of the Cathedral one morning, Ouseley put in all the pre-arranged stops, and then drew on each manual the most horrible and startling combination he could think of. When evening service commenced, Ouseley and his friends stood behind a pillar to hear the effect. Sure enough, just as the Psalms approached, Dr. Corfe hurried in and placed his hands on the keys. Everybody in the church gave a start, except Dr. Corfe himself, who placidly held down the chord while he one by one put in the objectionable registers, and gradually drawing his usual stops once more reverted to the inevitable Corfe-mixture."—Sir John Stainer on "The character and influence of the late Sir Frederick Ouseley." (Musical Association Proceedings, Session xvi., p. 32.)

During the period of his assistant-organistship at the Cathedral, Riseley was successively organist of St. John's, Bristol (following his brother in the appointment); St. Mary Magdalene, Stoke Bishop; and All Saints', Clifton. In 1876, upon the death of his old master, Corfe, he was appointed organist of Bristol Cathedral, from which post he has recently retired with a pension.

One serious difficulty that the organist had to contend with was the very inadequate instruments at his disposal. At his first church, St. John's, the organ had only an octave and a half of pedals. These were of brass and used to cut the player's boots "all to pieces." To show how much even the present Cathedral organ is behind the times, it will hardly be credited that the manual compass is G to G and the pedals C to F, that it has a short swell, and only three stops on the pedal!

DR. S. S. WESLEY ON CATHEDRAL ORGANS.

In 1861 the organ was removed from the screen to its present position on the North side of the Choir, and in this connection it may be interesting to give a hitherto unpublished letter from Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley on the subject of the positions of organs in Cathedrals. It should be added that the Dean and Chapter of Bristol had first asked the advice of Ouseley and then of Wesley, who, some years later, while organist of Gloucester Cathedral, visited Bristol and accompanied his Service in E and his anthem "The Wilderness."

Here is Dr. Wesley's characteristic epistle:—

Winchester,
Nov. 11, 1858.

Sir,

I trust you will pardon me if I submit that, having a great deal to do for a miserably small stipend, as organist of a Cathedral, I always pass unnoticed letters addressed to me as organist, and requiring my opinion on professional subjects without enclosing me a fee proportionate to the importance of the subject in question. Your inquiry suggests another objection. It is not sent merely to me—I believe—but is also addressed to such organists as have organs placed at the side, and therefore my opinion would rank beside that of such Professors as the organists of Canterbury and Durham, and I am sure I don't belong to that class of musician. Another objection I feel to giving my opinion on the subject you name is its great importance, as I might do harm. I might inform you that I think it very wrong to place an organ at the side of the Cathedral Choir, as all balance in Antiphony is lost; and, also, as the organ is almost useless for every object when its powers are wanted in the Nave, the sound being diffused most unevenly or ineffectively as regards many places, and wrong, also, because the singers on one of the sides may hear it less well than those at the other, and all these are serious objections to placing an organ at the side. But if my opinion might lead to the great ugly case of a bad Cathedral organ being built up to the destruction of all architectural effect and that in some instance where the singing and the music sung were so bad as to call for their removal altogether, I should be sorry to give any advice at all. I certainly cannot imagine any case where it might be well to put an organ on one side of a Cathedral Choir.

At Bristol I was much struck by the state of the Cathedral. However beautiful the architecture, there seemed less accommodation for the people than in any Cathedral I was ever in, and this the more impressed me as Bristol is probably the most important of all Cathedral cities excepting London. I should not have thought it possible that a Cathedral so apparently neglected could have been found anywhere. This I should not presume to mention were it not that I also thought that the Cathedral, if reformed, might present an almost unrivalled opportunity for effect, as far as music was concerned, and this is no small a matter now for the increase of taste, and knowledge of the subject, is surprising. If a desire existed at Bristol to make music of great importance, the great thing to do would be to reconstruct the West end of the building. Not to build a Nave, but to render the West end a vast apse for the reception of an Organ, &c., and to use all the vacant space for choir and congregational purposes, the present Choir screen and organ being removed.

But if this were quite out of the question, I feel sure that the next best thing to do would be to keep the organ where it now is; but whether it might be right to retain the present organ and its case, and not have everything new, and much more beautiful, I cannot say; or whether it might not be well to alter the Choir screen and make it, more or less, the case of the organ I know not. The Choir screen might be the organ, the entrance to the Choir being through the organ. This idea, I believe, arose with myself, and for our new organ here, I procured a design from the eminent Cockerell who said the thing, if carried out liberally, would [be] the finest novelty possible. His design was by no means completed, but the drawing made by an artist is quite at your service if you would like to see it. To do much in such a matter demands very high genius in an architect, and where to find a pure talent fit for the task I do not know, but I should uncommonly like to be joined to such a man in carrying out a work of the kind. I fear that any attempt to use the whole of Bristol Cathedral for congregational objects must entail a great outlay and that nothing could be well done, as regards connecting the Choir, and other parts, and keeping the organ in its only suitable place, the centre, without it. The organ might stand on an arch.

It was thought here that the public would give nothing towards a new organ, but we raised—in all—£2300, but the Dean and Chapter gave £500. Bristol could raise any amount for Cathedral objects and would be proud to be asked, I feel sure. There is a great love of a Cathedral abroad in the public mind, and any improvement could be effected anywhere I believe. The music too, at Bristol, was much better performed than I am accustomed to hear it in Cathedrals, and this would favour any effort in support of choral matters, no doubt. I fear I have taken a great liberty in thus expressing my random thoughts on your Cathedral. I can now better refer to your inquiry and give the brief reply you alone desired to have.

I am of opinion that great injury arises at this Cathedral as to the diffusion of the organ's sound and its support of the choral singing, and also as to the effect of my accompaniment, on every occasion when the organ is used, from the instrument being placed at the side of the Choir. The effect of the organ is so different in various places, from this cause, that I cannot adapt my accompaniment to the powers of the singer properly. I am too loud here, and too soft there. The organ's quality is lost in some situations, and, as regards the antiphonal singing, the effect is greatly marred; which would be a point of great moment were the music of this class not usually very feeble indeed in its merit as compositions in England. The Italians used Antiphony with great effect. At Leeds, the organ was at the side and I had abundant opportunity of testing the effects of this situation.

I have asked TRUE judges their opinion of the effect at Canterbury and Durham, and their reply was just what I expected but what I had not heard from others, that is, strongly unfavourable—and people who were usually in raptures with what they knew nothing about I found made no objection, but the reverse.

The late organ-builder, Bishop, moved the Durham organ to the side, and he being a conscientious, clever man, I asked him how he could be induced to take so shameful a step. He laughed and said he should like to move many more to the side, as the time would soon come at which they would all be moved back again.

The truth of the matter is, the architects speak their minds and the Musicians keep silence. The latter are of a rather low class as regards the church. The stipends being too small to attract eminent men.

I do not believe that the really first-rate architects desire to throw the whole space open. Cockerell said it was not intended in our English Cathedrals. The architecture shews this. A high rood-loft separated the Choir from the Nave, and he preferred the surprise and pleasure of a new view when he entered the Choir. The length, too, in proportion to the height becomes disproportioned by an uninterrupted vista. Height is destroyed. We feel this at Winchester particularly, the effect being that of looking through a railway tunnel or a gun-barrel. Bristol would be free from this, having no Nave.

How far a correct knowledge of all circumstances at Bristol might alter my views I cannot say. I have only seen the Cathedral once and that during the service hour. The subject is one of great interest, much depends on what is done, and no step should be taken without the first architects and organists being consulted, perhaps.

Your most obedient Servant,
S. S. Wesley.

In connection with the above letter it is very interesting to note how generally Dr. Wesley's opinion upon the position of the organ is shared by our present Cathedral organists. In 1892, when the interior of Bristol Cathedral was being re-arranged by the late Mr. Pearson and the position of the organ was under discussion, Mr. Riseley solicited the opinions and experiences of all the Cathedral organists, who, with only two exceptions (and they were not very strong ones), were entirely in favour of the organ being placed on the screen. Later on, an eminent architect proposed the removal of the organ from the screen into a "tomb chamber" of another of our Western Cathedrals, but the Dean and Chapter asked Riseley to allow them to see his correspondence on the matter, and, to the great joy of the organist, it was decided that the instrument should remain on the screen.

ORGAN RECITAL WORK.

We may now turn from the purely church side of Mr. Riseley's work in Bristol and refer to that phase of his career which has brought him so much distinction—his organ performances. The circumstances that led to his becoming an eminent recital-player are curious and interesting. In his early days organ music other than that purely sacred was unknown in Bristol, as all the instruments were in the churches. The new school of organ playing had not found its way to the city on the Avon. Riseley was its pioneer.

The Colston Hall was then without an organ of any kind. Most of the concert-giving in Bristol was in the hands of Mr. Philip John Smith, a musicseller, who hired a two-manual organ (by Bryceson) for the Colston Hall for the use of the Philharmonic Society. This was in 1869. Mr. Smith engaged Riseley to give a series of organ recitals on Saturday evenings throughout the season. The young organist worked tremendously hard at his technique, especially on the pianoforte, and he possesses an interesting memento of his early years of hard work in the keys of his first pianoforte, of which the ivory is in many cases worn right through to the wood. The organ in the hall, with its limited resources of only two manuals, needed very skilful manipulation to produce any effect in operatic overtures and similar compositions—such compositions being absolutely necessary for lightening the programmes to suit popular audiences. Riseley doggedly determined not to be beaten. He played everything, and spent nearly all the money he received for the recitals in paying the blower! Success attended his efforts, and in proof thereof the following notice of one of his earliest recitals appeared in the Western Daily Press (Bristol) of October 18, 1869:—

> The programme included selections from Handel, Beethoven, Hesse, Haydn, Bach, Rossini, and Sir Michael Costa, and was arranged judiciously with a view to produce the antithetical effect which is so often overlooked in preparing programmes. The performance, judging by the applause, which rose even to the encore pitch, appeared to give great satisfaction and to afford a real enjoyment to the audience, which was a numerous one. Very probably many persons present were surprised to learn something of the capacity of the organ. What the majority of the public know of the organ is, as a rule, what they hear in the place of worship they attend; and as in many instances they hear it only as an accompaniment and played by an inferior performer, they have little idea of its vast capacity, its infinite variety, its tremendous power, its extreme delicacy. When they hear it well played for the first time they are astonished at the massiveness of the volume of sound and its almost vocal power of interpreting the highest class of music. To introduce such an instrument into a city for public performances is to supply a new and pure source of enjoyment which must have many appreciators. These recitals deserve and will obtain support.

COLSTON HALL RECITALS.

The directors of the Colston Hall, seeing how successful the recitals had become, decided to have an organ of their own and one more worthy of the building named after one of Bristol's most distinguished citizens. Father Willis was therefore engaged to erect a four-manual instrument at a cost of £2,500. As a matter of fact, Sir (then Mr.) W. H. Wills, who was one of the directors and still is, bought the organ, which was opened by Mr. W. T. Best in October, 1870. Riseley was appointed organist, and thenceforth, till the destruction of the building by fire last September, he has continued, week by week, to delight numberless Bristolians by his fine performances. These results were, however, not attained without sheer hard work and indomitable perseverance. After a day's teaching, and playing at two Cathedral services, Riseley would make his way to the Colston Hall, let himself in by his private key, turn on the water—the instrument being blown by "hydraulic water," to use the language of a Canterbury verger—and practise away from eight p.m. till three o'clock in the morning! "I was never without a full score in my hand," he says. "I used to mark the instrumentation most carefully, so as to bring out, as nearly as I could, the orchestral colouring. But I could not have obtained these effects if it had not been for Willis's buttons. Although I played much orchestral music, I never neglected pure organ music. And then I had to accompany many oratorio performances, given by the Festival Choral Society, entirely on the organ. The intimate knowledge of orchestral scores that I was obliged to acquire for this and my recital purposes have been most invaluable to me." Whatever work Mr. Riseley has undertaken to do he has never failed to "put his back into it." When he gave eight organ recitals at the Albert Hall during the Exhibition of 1885, he started practising at 5.30 a.m., "like a workman," he says, and, we may add, much more industriously. An interesting feature of his work at the Colston Hall was the special Sunday afternoon and evening services for the people held in the great building. On these occasions he played three organ solos and accompanied the congregation in four hymns. There was no choir, but he was able not only to control the great mass of voices, but to suggest the natural expression of the words. A magnificent tuba of Willis's was used with fine effect on these occasions. "Rough youths from the street were intensely interested in my performances," he says, "and in the whole service. They used to sit round the organ stool and would frequently ask for some favourite piece to be included in the next programme. During one of my holidays in Scotland a railway porter, addressing me by name, offered to carry my bag. When I asked him how he knew me, he replied, 'Colston Hall, sir, on Sundays.'"

In 1889 Mr. Riseley was honoured by a request from the Danish Ambassador to give an organ recital in the private chapel of Luton Hoo, Bedfordshire, in the presence of T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of York, and many others.

BRISTOL ROYAL ORPHEUS GLEE SOCIETY.

For ten years, during the conductorship of his old master, J. D. Corfe, Mr. Riseley was first a chorister and then, for fifteen years, librarian of the Bristol Madrigal Society. He therefore gained great experience in the renderings of and a knowledge of the scores of the unrivalled school of English vocal composers. What more natural than that, on the death of Alfred Stone, in 1878, Riseley should be elected conductor of the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society? This organisation consists of ninety-five gentlemen amateurs who meet once a fortnight for the practice of glees, from 8 to 10 p.m. After the first hour an interval of thirty minutes is allowed for social intercourse over a cup of tea, &c., and then the practice of the music is resumed. Although the annual subscription is two guineas, there are always many applications for membership, which, however, is strictly limited to ninety-five. The concerts are always given for charities, and in this way the sum of £2,500 has been raised by the Society. They have a "tremendous library," including many glees that are practically unknown and never sung elsewhere. The difficulty is to get some of them published in cheap form. Three fine glees by S. S. Wesley have thus been issued by Messrs. Novello expressly for the Society.

THE QUEEN'S APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Monday, December 2, 1895, was a red-letter, never-to-be-forgotten day for the Royal Bristol Orpheus, as on that day they had the honour of singing before Her Majesty the Queen at Windsor Castle—an event which sanctioned the addition of the word "Royal" to their title. The Queen entered the concert-room at half-past ten, and when she left at midnight she seemed the least fatigued of any of the company. After the entire programme had been gone through, the Queen, after the manner of Oliver Twist, asked for more, with the result that two extra glees were sung. The Bristolians were on their mettle and they sang magnificently. The rendering of Viotta's "The Dying Child" visibly affected Her Majesty, and Mr. Riseley's massive arrangement, in five parts, of "God save the Queen" (sung twice) was electrical in its effect. Moreover, the Queen was not, as she never is, a mere passive listener. Three or four times during the performance she summoned Mr. Riseley to her side and asked him several questions about the various glees sung—as, for instance, whether this composer wrote music for the Church, and so on. "She was exceedingly pleasant and most animated," Mr. Riseley recalls, "and she sent me a very handsome satinwood baton mounted in gold and set with jewels." No wonder that these fine gleemen were in the highest glee up to the time of reaching Bristol, at half-past two in the morning. It should be added that the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society have paid several visits to London. Such visits cannot be too often. Unaccompanied choral music is a glorious heritage which English people must conserve and of which they should be proud.

AS AN ORCHESTRAL CONDUCTOR.

Mr. Riseley is conductor of the Bristol Society of Instrumentalists, a body of about eighty amateur players, ladies as well as gentlemen, who meet for rehearsal once a week. Each member pays an annual subscription of a guinea, but music is provided for their use. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha (Duke of Edinburgh) has taken a great interest in the Society. During his command at Devonport he took part in three concerts; he attended long rehearsals and, on one occasion, played a solo. "We play everything that's going," says the indefatigable conductor, "and this Society was the first to have ladies playing in the orchestra so far as Bristol is concerned." In 1877 he started and carried on at his own risk Monday Popular Concerts. These concerts were orchestral, and the educational value of Mr. Riseley's organ recitals was made apparent by the fact that the listeners, having gained familiarity with some of the movements through hearing them played on the Colston Hall organ, experienced additional enjoyment and followed the music with intelligent interest. "The audience were ready for the symphonies. We played the whole of Beethoven's 'Nine,' and I am sure they proved a great educator. I most carefully nursed English music at these concerts, and many composers came from London specially to conduct their own works. I did not receive a penny from any local authority towards the expense—in fact, I was considerably out of pocket. I think that it is the duty of the municipalities to take up and subsidise orchestral music. We must work away for that."

THE BRISTOL CHORAL SOCIETY.

This Society—the second largest of its kind in the kingdom—was founded in 1889. It originated in the formation of a chorus necessary to carry on the Monday Popular (orchestral) Concerts when the "Choral" Symphony was performed. The choir, which consists of 650 voices from various grades of Bristol society, meets every Tuesday evening. Every member pays a subscription. Those who can afford to do so pay a guinea, while others pay five shillings per season, and they seldom miss a rehearsal." Happy conductor! Moreover, they buy their own music! Four concerts are given during each season. "But what about the present season, now that the Colston Hall is in ruins?" we ask. "Ah! that is most gratifying and delightful to me," is Mr. Riseley's reply. "When I told them there would be no concerts this winter, they said, 'We shall subscribe and go on'—that is to say, just for the pure love of the thing. 'It is not the concerts alone we come for: we love our rehearsals quite as much.'" Who will say that choral music in England is in danger when such a spirit animates those who so ably maintain one of the best traditions of English musical life?

Enough has been said to prove that Mr. Riseley has done great things for music in Bristol during the last thirty years. He has met as many as 1,000 people in a week for the practice of music in its various forms. His appointment as conductor of the Bristol Musical Festival in 1896 was the culminating mark of Bristol's appreciation of all his manifold labours in the cause of the divine art in his native city. The result of his first Festival was not only a musical success, but, for the first time for many years, a profit was made, thus relieving the guarantors from their usual call.

It was a terrible blow to him when the Colston Hall was destroyed by fire last September. His dear Willis organ also perished. The only tangible part of this fine instrument rescued from the flames are four pedal keys, which Mr. Riseley will carefully preserve as a memento of the "many miles" he has walked over them. But the Colston Hall will soon be rebuilt, and Father Willis, from a specification drawn up by Mr. Riseley, is again to provide the organ.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. Riseley has led such a very busy life as cathedral organist, solo organist, conductor, and teacher in Bristol that he has not been able to devote himself to composition. He has, however, written a Jubilee Ode (1887), a Jubilee March for the organ, some part-songs for men's voices, &c. In 1893 he was appointed a professor of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music. And this leads us, in conclusion, to refer to Mr. Riseley's new departure of dividing his time between Bristol and the Metropolis. With a railway journey of only two and a half hours, the distance is, after all, not very formidable. It must not be supposed, however, that he intends to forsake the city of his birth. He speaks with great appreciation of the unbounded kindness he has received from the Directors of the Colston Hall Company, of whom Mr. Herbert Thomas has been chairman during his entire twenty-seven years' connection with them as their organist, and this kindness has been meted out to him by the people of Bristol generally. He received many letters of sympathy—one from far-away Agra—in connection with the burning of the organ, all of which gratified him exceedingly. He did not in the least degree seek his London appointments. A telegram unexpectedly received from Mr. Robert Newman asking him to come and conduct at once was the beginning of his engagement as conductor of the Queen's Hall Choral Society. At the opening last spring of the Alexandra Palace—of which Mr. Riseley is now director of the music—he brought his Bristol Choral Society to London to sing the choruses in the "Elijah." With two instruments at his immediate disposal—at the Alexandra Palace and Queen's Hall—it is to be hoped that Londoners will enjoy the advantage of hearing him give some organ recitals.

In life's retrospect it is interesting to note how little we imagine in our younger days that certain incidents of that period might have any connection with the events of subsequent years. In illustration of this Mr. Riseley can testify to a curious coincidence brought about by the whirligig of time. In the year 1870, Mr. H. O. Wills, Father Willis, and Mr. Riseley visited the first Alexandra Palace, which contained Willis's grand Exhibition organ (1862). After a thorough inspection of the instrument, a specification was drawn up for the Colston Hall organ: the order was given to Messrs. Willis and duly executed. It will be in the recollection of our readers that the Alexandra Palace and its fine organ were totally destroyed by fire, June 9, 1873. A similar fate befel the Colston Hall and its organ last year. Thirty years have passed away. Mr. Riseley finds himself located at the Alexandra Palace as its Musical Director. Still more extraordinary, Sir W. H. Wills (who gave the first organ) and Father Willis, who were so closely associated with Mr. Riseley in preparing the scheme of the first Colston Hall organ, are again assisting him with the magnificent instrument which is to be placed in the new building. Such is life.

AN APPRECIATION BY PROFESSOR PROUT.

"I gladly send you a few lines," writes Professor Prout, "about George Riseley. My acquaintance with him dates from 1879, when he invited me to come and conduct my first organ concerto, which he was proposing to play at one of his concerts in the Colston Hall. I readily accepted the invitation, and he then wrote, asking me to compose a new work specially for the concert. I agreed, and wrote a Minuet and Trio for orchestra. That visit laid the foundation of a friendship that has never been shaken. I have frequently since gone to Bristol, to conduct works of my own, at Mr. Riseley's request; and my second organ concerto, which he performed at the last Bristol Festival, was composed in 1883 expressly for him.

"With possibly the single exception of Mr. Manns, no man living has done so much for the works of English composers as Mr. Riseley. I believe that the programmes of his orchestral concerts at the Colston Hall contain even a larger percentage of works by native musicians than those of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts. It was, indeed, the exception to find one of his concerts at which some important English work – symphony, concerto, or overture—was not included. Few people realise how much the cause of British art is indebted to Mr. Riseley's exertions.

"The qualities which most impress those who are brought into personal contact with Mr. Riseley are his thoroughness and his enthusiasm. As illustrating the former, and showing his conscientiousness, I may mention that on the occasions when I have visited him, and he was to play one of my concertos next day, though he was perfectly familiar with every note, I have known him to sit up till the small hours of the morning to practise the difficult passages on a pedal piano that he has in his house. The same minute attention to detail will have been noticed by anyone who has seen him, as I often have, conduct an orchestral rehearsal. He has studied the score so thoroughly that he knows exactly what he wants, and no one understands better how to get it. No less remarkable is his enthusiasm for everything that is good, no matter of what style. He has a large library of orchestral music, and is equally at home with a symphony of Beethoven, Brahms, or Dvorák, a suite of Massenet or Délibes, or a Wagner selection. Unlike some other fine orchestral conductors, Mr. Riseley is no less successful as a chorus-master, as those who attended the last Bristol Festival or who have heard his magnificent male-voice choir can testify. His fine organ playing is the more remarkable when it is remembered that he began to work at the instrument at a much later period of life than most who attain distinction.

"Of his personal character it would perhaps be unbecoming to say much. Those who know him best will the most highly appreciate his honesty of purpose and the warmth of his heart."

Mr. Riseley is a man of fine physique and splendid constitution. Thoroughly businesslike, a strict disciplinarian, delighting in hard work, he has made the best use of his "picking up" opportunities. His career offers a fine example to the young men of our time of what may be accomplished by earnestness of purpose and enthusiastic zeal in the discharge of every duty.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS.

VI. A Trap for the Vicar.

In the present days of cheap music only those who remember an earlier time can form a just idea of the straits to which church choirs in rural districts were reduced for lack of a supply of tunes, anthems, and chants. I recall the condition of two large and important parish churches—those, namely, of Berkeley and Thornbury—to which I successively belonged in the capacity of a choir boy. Let me, however, confine myself to the case of Berkeley, where a noble Early English edifice of almost cathedral-like proportions, standing hard by the castle of a powerful peer and serving the needs of a prosperous district, suggested rather an excess of equipment than the poverty which, as a matter of fact, existed.

The Church musician of whatever degree who now finds ready to his hand, in profuse abundance, everything required for the discharge of his duty, will smile to be told that the music library of Berkeley Church consisted of about a dozen more or less dilapidated manuscript books. In my time these must have been many years in use. Such, at least, was the evidence of their condition given by exterior and interior alike. Broken and time-stained bindings found their testimony supported within by an extraordinary collection of anthems, tunes, and chants, representative of many tastes and fashions, written by a number of hands, and indicating by more or less faded ink the long periods that sometimes elapsed between one entry and the next. Over these books no supervision of any kind was exercised; to their contents nothing was ever added; the organist lived seven miles away, and the state of musical affairs was about as bad as it could be in regard of provision for wants.

I must here add that Berkeley parish and church had, previous to the time now spoken of, undergone some curious experiences, demoralising and entirely unfortunate. For years there was no vicar, and the gentleman last appointed to the post, the Rev. Caleb Carrington, went to law with his flock on some question, was defeated, and spent the rest of his days in jail, as a prisoner for debt. Mr. Carrington had been chaplain to the Earl of Berkeley, from whom he received a presentation to the living. He appeared as a witness in the celebrated Berkeley Peerage case heard by the House of Lords in 1811, and something may be read of him in the "English Spy," a now scarce and costly book written by "Bernard Blackmantle" (nom de plume of a London editor for whom the late Alfred Bunn did much as a collector of gossip and scandal), and illustrated with coloured plates by Robert Cruickshank. During Carrington's enforced absence from the parish, the clerical duties were, so to speak, put into commission; and after his death a clergyman was appointed to keep the place warm for a nominee then at Cambridge. The young gentleman in question, John Seton Karr, was, I believe, a scion of a Scottish family, in whom the patron of the living took great interest. Anyhow, the post was left open till John Seton Karr gained his B.A., received ordination, and qualified himself after a fashion to enter upon his sacred duties.

The new vicar of Berkeley presented himself to his parishioners as an exquisite of the first water—a clerical dandy entirely irreproachable. He was a young fellow of the "oiled and curled Assyrian bull" species. Well built, with a handsome face, raven black hair and the neatest of curled whiskers, faultless in attire, a capital reader and a good preacher (in an academical way), Mr. Karr considerably fluttered the country-side at his coming. Many gentle bosoms were excited by the presence of such a paragon in the pulpit, while the entire district took in him an admiring if not exactly an affectionate interest. It is true that a few parishioners of the stricter sort complained because he rode to hounds instead of visiting the poor and sick, and were further of opinion that Berkeley Castle, where the notorious Colonel Berkeley, under the style and title of Earl Fitzhardinge, reigned as lord, was not exactly the place in which a young clergyman should dine every night. There was no perfecting the Christian life, they thought, in that atmosphere, and they were not far wrong. None the less because of the mutterings of a minority did the Reverend John Seton Karr, B.A., vicar of a huge parish, and without a curate, employ himself in hunting, shooting, and making one at the castle dining-table.

In the "forties" a Mr. Leech, editor of the Bristol Times, greatly interested his readers by visiting the churches of Somerset and Gloucester, making observations and recording them in a chatty, pleasant manner over the pen-name, "Church-goer." He did not neglect Berkeley; the volumes in which his articles are collected containing one of the best possible word-portraits of John Seton Karr. Leech was, so to speak, fascinated by the reverend gentleman—by his good looks, his exquisite reading, and his general demeanour in the discharge of sacred duties. At any rate, the Bristol journalist dwelt with gusto upon the vicar's elaborate preparations for the delivery of his sermon. Wearing the black Geneva gown and bands, the vicar would stalk majestically from chancel to pulpit, float upward with flowing sleeves like wings, and from the topmost height of the three-decker survey the congregation. That done he would remove a massive gold watch from his person, and, with bejewelled fingers, place it securely on the velvet pulpit-cushion, to the right of the sermon case. Next, a dainty handkerchief was forthcoming and carefully laid on the left to balance the watch on the right. These preliminaries went on with the greatest deliberation before the admiring eyes of the people. Having completed them, the vicar would sink upon his knees, and in suave tones, with the nicest possible regard for supplicatory modulation, offer the prayer before sermon.

My excellent friend, the reader, may think that I have unduly wandered from the main line of such story as I have to tell. In so far as he is right, I crave pardon, but plead that I have given a true description of the state of things existing in an important parish more than half-a-century ago; scarcely tolerable at present even in thought. And now to the story again.

Mr. Samuel Partridge, of whom I have made grateful mention before, was organist of Berkeley Church on Mr. Karr's arrival. To him it naturally occurred that the young vicar, so careful concerning his own equipment, would pay at least some regard to the furnishing of the church. It chanced, moreover, that a "Psalmist," words and music, the precursor of many, came into being just then. Here was a favourable conjunction to the end of abolishing the worn-out manuscript books, and to utilise it did the organist much incline. He interviewed the vicar and explained matters, but took little by his pains. The reverend gentleman, fresh from the conservative influences of Cambridge, as Cambridge was then, intimated that he saw no necessity for change; also that the new "Psalmist" was costly, and if purchased, would create aggrieved parishioners; also that, if at any future time reform seemed to be called for, he would take the matter up himself. So poor Mr. Partridge retired from the presence snubbed and discomfited. But if the vicar thought he had snuffed out the organist, he had quite mistaken his man. Mr. Partridge was remarkable for quiet persistence in what he conceived to be the right course. He had set his heart upon the new Psalm books, and not one denial—no, nor twenty—could make him give up hope of them. Like the woman who, in the parable, got the better of the unjust judge, he was, from the vicar's point of view, continually coming. As often, alas! he went empty away. Clearly, thought the organist, another method must be tried. There was nothing to be done by a front attack, but it might prove possible to turn the vicar's flank with success. A plan therefore matured itself in the artful organist's head.

Mr. Karr's taste in music was shrewdly suspected to be somewhat light. As a rule, he made no comment upon what was done by the choir, but sometimes dropped a word of approval after the rendering of a "pretty" anthem, the more secular and catching the better. Upon that revelation of weakness our organist acted, and in pursuance of his plan we were called upon to "get up" a new anthem of a particularly frivolous description. I have quite forgotten the name of it, as also the identity of its composer, only a fragment of a rollicking "Gloria," with which the piece ended, remaining in my memory, while, of my own solo in it, I can only recall an impression of something lackadaisical and, to mundane ears, very fetching. The anthem was rehearsed con amore. We liked it ourselves, and soon stood ready for singing its lightsome strains "to the praise and glory of God," or any other purpose. In Berkeley Church, at that time, the organist was permitted full control of the musical part of the worship; choosing metrical Psalms (there were no hymns) and anthems as seemed to him good. Thus it came to pass that on a particular Sunday our new anthem figured in the order of service, without question, or thought of question, in any quarter. I have the clearest recollection of the performance, which was safe and spirited; also of the unusual attention paid by the congregation. The vicar was distinctly seen to nod his head to the lilting rhythm—an absolutely unheard-of occurrence in the history of the parish, I should say. As for the organist, he turned upon his seat, after the final "Amen," with an expansive smile. He also nodded his head, equally with gratification; perhaps, also, with some hope, as to which, however, we knew nothing at the time.

The result was soon proclaimed, and, the choir being kept back for practice, we were all witnesses. Mr. Partridge, good man, stood in the centre of the West gallery, fronting the vicar as he came down the noble nave to go out at the North door, and so home. The reverend gentleman rarely showed bad form, and he could not pass without a word. The following dialogue, as a matter of fact, ensued:—

Vicar (looking up). Partridge!

Organist (looking down). Sir!

Vicar. That was a very pretty anthem you sang this morning—a very pretty anthem indeed, and very well rendered.

Organist. We are extremely obliged to you, Sir.

[Vicar moves a few steps towards the door. Organist's face falls. Vicar again stops.

Vicar. Oh, Partridge!

Organist. Sir!

Vicar. You—yes—you can get those books.

"Those books" were in their places a fortnight later, the MS. volumes being then consigned to dust and oblivion for ever and ever. The moral is that a thing may be done in more ways than one, and that the way which is the most direct is not always the shortest.

DR. ARNE'S "CARACTACUS."

Mr. Edward Elgar is not the first composer of music to "Caractacus." On December 6, 1776, Mason's drama "Caractacus" was produced at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, with incidental music by Dr. Thomas Augustine Arne. It is quite impossible to institute any comparison between the works of the two composers, seeing that the aim of each was entirely different. Arne provided an overture and incidental music only for the Druidic scenes in the drama, while Mr. Elgar has set to music, in cantata form, a libretto written by Mr. H. A. Acworth—the work to be performed in the concert-room. There are, however, several points in connection with the earlier work which are certainly deserving of notice. Arne, next to Purcell, is one of the most prominent names in the history of English music, and a name, moreover, to which full justice has scarcely been rendered. No apology, therefore, need be offered for the subject of this brief article.

When Arne published his "Caractacus" music, he wrote some introductory remarks concerning which the "Dictionary of National Biography" observes that "Arne shows a curious insight into the relationship between dramatic poetry and music." The writer (Mr. Barclay Squire) further remarks: "He (Arne) expresses opinions on the subject, the truth of which, though couched in the stilted language of the period, is only beginning to be recognised at the present day."

Now the opening words of Arne fully bear out the above comment. The composer says:

> The design of this Music is to represent, by corresponding sounds and rhythms, the Ideas expressed, and those alluded to, in the Drama, principally in it's lyric parts; the former is attempted to be done by the vocal, the latter by the instrumental Music.

Of his instrumental music he remarks that it

> professes to represent that to which the drama in different parts refers, viz., Symphonies, or that which may be expressed by Symphonies; the words therefore which precede or follow will often sufficiently point out the nature of each: but, as there is no such guide for the Overture and some others, and as several of the rest are very generally referred to, I shall subjoin a particular explanation of such as I think require it.

The overture, then, is not of the ordinary formal kind, but one of dramatic intention and meaning. It consists of two parts: the first representing the "Spirits of Snowdon lamenting the approaching fall of Mona"; and the second the "Souls of the departed Druids, personified by the harp, interceding to avert the impending danger." Later on there is a symphony "suitable to the character of the Druids."

In the matter of programme music the composer shows himself quite an English Berlioz. One instrumental number represents "the beginning, progress, and completion of a storm." But here is something more in the spirit of the composer of the "Symphonie Fantastique":—

> No. 26, to where the bassoon enters, is intended as a solemn and pleasing symphony to excite ideas suitable to the occasion described in the preceding words. From the bar where the bassoon enters to the end of No. 26 I have endeavoured to represent, by the notes allotted to that instrument, the act of dying of a man, such as alluded to in the words; the upper part, which may be considered as a continuation of the symphony, being intended to soothe him in his last moments.

From many other remarks in the Introduction it is sufficiently clear that Arne was trying to write music which would only have force and meaning if heard in connection with stage action. The New Morning Post, or General Advertiser, of December 7, 1776, in noticing the production of the work, congratulates the town "on the acquisition of so fine an entertainment as 'Caractacus,' where poetry and music unite their fascinating powers." The writer fears, indeed, lest "the general solemnity of the performance may render it not perfectly pleasing to the taste of so slight an age as the present." By "performance" the writer, of course, refers not merely to the music but to the play; but the two were practically one: the form, character, and even colouring of the music show how intimately it was connected with the scenes and with the words and gestures of the actors.

There is an interesting letter from William Mason, author of the play, to Thomas Harris, manager at Covent Garden, which shows that he, too, was concerned about the union of poetry and music. He had altered his play, which at first was published merely to be read. He had curtailed it. But he fancies "it may still be too long for representation." "If, therefore," he continues, "upon rehearsal with the music (the italics are mine), you should find this to be the case, I will send you a second copy, in which several other lines and passages shall be marked with inverted commas, which you may either omit, or retain, as shall then seem expedient." The poet, therefore, looked upon the musician as an ally, as one who was trying to strengthen his drama.

As to the music itself, it may reasonably be doubted whether it would be worth reviving at the present day. The composer's intention, rather than what he actually achieved, is here the point for notice. The music is certainly not lacking in interest, though how far it would satisfy ears attuned to the dramatic works of the nineteenth century is open to question.

Just a word or two about the orchestration. Many numbers, such as the overture, are for strings, with addition of harp or organ, flutes, clarinets or trumpet, but some have quite special combinations. Thus, No. 7, "a sweet and pathetic invocation of Snowdon," is for flutes, bassoons, and two harps. The sepulchral tones of the bassoon were suitably chosen, as mentioned above, to express "the act of dying of a man." Afterwards, as his spirit is supposed to be "stealing from the earth," there is a short Andante section for one bassoon and one violoncello; as the spirit rises higher, the sound of flutes, harp, and bassoons is heard. In a Largo in the third Act, the words which follow refer to "Rome's rav'ning eagle"; then, and for the first time, trombones combined with harp are introduced. The trombones, three in number, are marked tutti piano. A Dead March "for the end of 'Caractacus'" is written for flutes, clarinets, bassoons, serpent, and kettle-drum.

At the head of the published score of "Caractacus" (the autograph appears to be lost) there is a letter from the composer to the author of the drama, in which he says:—

> I have in them (i.e., pages of music) endeavoured to restore to Music its ancient and long neglected office of handmaid to Poetry. Poetry is the language of enthusiasm and passion; Music the suitable enunciation of that language; while therefore the latter subordinately cooperates with the former, it acts in its proper sphere: but when, quitting this dependent situation, it arrogates to itself independence of, nay dominion over, its powerful directress; it loses sight of the end of its nature and becomes justly reprehensible.

J. S. S.

A very important and gratifying announcement reaches us from Dublin in regard to the foundation of a permanent orchestra in that city. Hitherto the Irish capital has had to rely upon a "scratch" orchestra to accompany choral performances. Moreover, there seems to have been no taste for purely orchestral music until it was appetised by the visit of the Hallé orchestra last year. The new scheme is that of Signor Esposito, and is founded on the lines of the Milan orchestra—viż., that it shall exist at least seven years, and consist of a Society formed of Foundation and Performing members. The former contribute a sum of £25 down, or £30 in six annual instalments. The performing members practically take all the profits but do not share the losses, should there be any, as they are guaranteed a minimum payment of something above half their ordinary fees if the concerts should prove financially unsuccessful. Signor Esposito convened a public meeting in Dublin at which he explained his scheme. Its bare outline is: 100 subscribers of £25 each (or £30 in instalments) to the Foundation Fund, this sum to represent subscriptions for tickets for seven years; one-seventh of the Foundation Fund would thereby be paid into capital each year, and the remainder would form a sort of Reserve Fund for contingencies, especially in the early days of the orchestra's existence. One gentleman generously offered to give £500 if the sum of £2,000 were found by New Year's Day, and the result of this challenge has been that the Society is now practically formed. As the expenses each year will not be far short of £1,000, and only £360 will be available to draw upon, the Fund will need to be further augmented, as only about £200 is estimated to be obtained from the sale of tickets. Perhaps some natives of the Emerald Isle dwelling in England and elsewhere may feel disposed to lend their aid. A very exhaustive and carefully compiled set of rules has been drafted by the provisional committee, which will in all probability have been adopted at the general meeting announced to be held on the 26th ult., after we had gone to press. The band (to be led by Herr A. Wilhelmj) consists of sixty-one players—the second clarinettist being a Mr. J. L. Toole—all of whom constitute the performing members of the Society, and Signor Esposito is the conductor. Operations have already commenced; and as thirty-four rehearsals are to be held before any concert is given, a high standard of performance may be expected. The concerts are to be given in the large hall of the Royal University, the authorities having very kindly placed this locale at the disposal of the Society. We shall watch with interest the development and outcome of this commendable enterprise. With such splendid freedom from the bonds of mere financialism, "the powers that be" should see to it that the music of native composers —using the word "native" in no narrowed sense— should have its proper place in a scheme that is of a nature so distinctly national in its scope.

The outline programme for the Norwich Triennial Musical Festival has been approved by the general committee. The Festival will take place on October 3, 4, 5, and 6. New compositions will be contributed by Mr. Edward Elgar, Mr. Edward German, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, and the Abbé Perosi's oratorio "The Passion of Christ" will be given for the first time in England. Other selections made by the committee of management are Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," Berlioz's "Faust," Verdi's "Stabat Mater," "Hymn to the Virgin," and Te Deum, Handel's "Messiah," Cowen's "Ode to the Passions," Tschaïkowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique," and a Symphony by Brahms. In addition to the new work—which, we believe, will take the form of an overture—by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, the same composer's increasingly popular cantata, "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," will be performed at the Festival. It speaks well for the Norwich committee that they have selected a work by a British composer purely on its merits—a work that is rapidly making its way without the prestige attaching to a Festival novelty. The committee are also to be commended for including in the scheme Mr. Cowen's "Ode to the Passions," thus giving a Festival repetition performance of a Festival work that made a distinct success at Leeds last October. Mr. Randegger will, as heretofore, conduct.

The Festival of the Three Choirs will be held this year at Worcester. The following programme has been adopted by the committee:—

Tuesday morning: "Elijah." Tuesday evening: orchestral piece, Mr. C. Lee Williams's new short work, "Die Vätergruft" for bass solo and chorus (Peter Cornelius), and the "Creation" (Haydn), Parts I. and II.

Wednesday morning: Te Deum (Dvorák), "Coronation" Mass (Liszt), a new Symphony by Mr. Elgar, and "Requiem" (Brahms). Wednesday evening: (concert in the Public Hall) miscellaneous, including an instrumental work by Mr. Elgar and Wagner selections.

Thursday morning: "Hora Novissima" (Parker), "Stabat Mater" (Palestrina), Symphony in A (Beethoven), and "Last Judgment" (Spohr). Thursday evening: "God's time is the best" (Bach), "Blest Pair of Sirens" (Parry), and "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn).

Friday morning: "The Messiah."

The novelties are: a new short work by Mr. Lee Williams, a symphony by Mr. Elgar, and "Hora Novissima," the Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaix on the celestial country, set to music by Professor Horatio W. Parker, who is in the front rank of American composers. Special interest attaches to Mr. Elgar's symphony, as it will practically constitute his début in the highest form of purely instrumental music. Liszt's "Coronation" Mass was specially composed for the coronation of the Emperor and Empress of Austria, as King and Queen of Hungary, June 7, 1867; this will be its first performance in England. It may be added that Bach's cantata "God's time is the best" has never been performed before at the Festival. Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral, will be the conductor, this being his first appearance in that capacity at the Festival of the Three Choirs.

Professor Horatio William Parker, whose "Hora Novissima" is to be performed at the Worcester Festival, was born of American parents at Auburndale, Massachusetts, September 15, 1863. He received his earliest instruction in music from his mother, whois a highly cultured lady of considerable literary attainments. He afterwards became a pupil of Mr. Stephen A. Emery, of Boston, for harmony and counterpoint, and of Mr. George W. Chadwick for composition. After holding organ appointments at St. Paul's, Dedham, Mass., and St. John's, Boston Highlands, Professor Parker, in 1882, went to Munich in order to study composition with Rheinberger and conducting under Ludwig Abel. His ballad "King Trojan" was performed in Munich in 1885. Upon his return to America the gifted young composer followed his profession and held various organ appointments in the neighbourhood of New York. He is now organist and choirmaster of Trinity Church, Boston, the most important church in the New England States, and he also occupies the chair of music at Yale College. Professor Parker has composed several important works, including a symphony, a pianoforte concerto, overtures, &c. His chief choral work, "The Legend of St. Christopher," produced in New York last April, still awaits a hearing in this country. Its fine dramatic music should commend it to the attention of some first rate choral society which would be able to do justice to its undoubted merits. We may add that an analytical review of "Hora Novissima" appeared in our issue of October, 1893. Professor Parker is a young man of whom great things may be expected. We believe that Worcester is the first "open door" offered to an American composer. No worthier entrant could be found than the composer of "Hora Novissima." While we congratulate the Worcester authorities on their choice, we shall welcome the young musician from across the Atlantic if not in person, through the composition which will give the Festival unusual interest, both musical and international.

The programmes of Mr. Robert Newman's forthcoming season of Symphony concerts at the Queen's Hall have been published, and we cannot feign any surprise at observing that they do not contain a single note of British music, old or new. Since we drew attention in our last issue to the neglect of native composers, it has formed the subject of a discourse by Mr. Frederick James at the annual conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, as well as of more or less outspoken articles in the press. The Standard, Daily Telegraph, Observer, Truth, Musical Standard, and Musical News, amongst others, have come forward with complaints and suggestions, and even with excuses for the poor concert-giver, who would be only too happy to produce British music if there were any worthy of production, or if somebody would have the kindness to make it "fashionable." The Standard echoes our remark that our composers should learn to handle the full modern orchestra like their foreign rivals, while its "musical" namesake considers our attitude "a little amusing," because we remarked that unless their works were scored effectively they would appeal in vain to Mr. Henry Wood. "If their scores do not appeal to Mr. Wood," remarks our contemporary, "it is very possible they do not appeal to the musical amateurs of London." But we need hardly say that we have a higher opinion of our musical amateurs than to suggest that they are to be imposed upon by mere orchestration. We merely meant to suggest that since the Queen's Hall conductor has quite a unique chance of doing something for his compatriots, it would be just as well if, in their turn, they clothed their works in that rich garb of dazzling orchestration which exercises such a fascination over him. If our composers can improve their masterful works by rich, modern orchestration and by such means secure that recognition which is at present denied them, we shall be the first to welcome the change, though we need hardly repeat that we would always wish them to regard orchestration as a means to an end. To argue that we condemn all music not so scored as old-fashioned is going too far. We might as well deny all claim to vitality to such masterpieces as Schumann's symphonies, which cry aloud, so to speak, for better orchestration.

As to the Standard's suggestion that greater recognition might be extended to English music in high quarters, so that it might speedily become a fashion to support it, we may point out that the said high quarters certainly did not set the present fashion in Russian music. The craze, such as it is, is of Mr. Newman's and Mr. Wood's creating. Tschaïkowsky's one great symphony proving a phenomenal success, they let loose a flood of Russian music—good, bad, and indifferent, without discrimination and without mercy. We admire the brilliant band of young Russians, with Glazounoff at their head, and believe that before long they will produce music of lasting value; but why their every note should be deemed worthy of production at the Queen's Hall, while our own composers' best works are ignored, is a mystery. Mr. Newman speculates in foreign novelties to any extent, and more often than not they neither attract overflowing audiences nor do they prove popular or artistic successes.

An esteemed contemporary remarks that "Individuals and associations must conquer recognition not by grumbling, but by good work"; but does the writer mean to imply that all these foreign novelties have thus conquered recognition at the Queen's Hall? And Mr. Edward Elgar, whom he mentions as proof of his assertion that "if an Englishman writes a good work he has as fair a chance of fame and profit as his foreign rival," is the very composer who has so far been utterly ignored by Messrs. Newman and Wood, except that they performed a few light dances from his pen at their Promenade concerts, which they evidently think quite good enough for native composers. Moreover, nothing but "good work" has brought Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor as with one bound to the front. His beautiful and original cantata, "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," and his striking Orchestral Ballade are being heard throughout the country, but not at the Queen's Hall. Instead, we shall no doubt ere long hear young Perosi's works there. They are being exploited in the Italian press. That suffices. Meanwhile, our composers will spend glorious hours in creating fresh works, and anxious, despondent months, aye, years, waiting for a performance that never comes. We repeat, is it not time that something was done?

It was a happy thought to inaugurate the New Year at the Foundling Hospital with a carol-service, held in the same chapel where Handel conducted his "Messiah," and in the pulpit of which Lawrence Sterne and Sydney Smith preached. Nothing is more delightful than to listen to the fresh young voices of the children who form the choir of the Institution founded by good Captain Thomas Coram in the first half of the eighteenth century—the girls in their quaint costumes and high mob-caps, the boys in their peculiar uniforms. On the occasion above referred to — Sunday afternoon, January 1 — ten carols were rendered with charming effect in the presence of a large congregation. Among them were such well-established favourites as: "See, amid the winter's snow" (Goss), "Sweeter than song abiding" (J. F. Bridge), "Sleep, baby, sleep" (Adams), "The First Nowell," "Good Christian men, rejoice," "A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin" (Barnby), and "In the fields with their flocks abiding," the words of the last-named being by Dean Farrar and the music by John Farmer. Mr. Davan Wetton, organist of the Foundling, is to be congratulated upon the successful training of the children committed to his musical charge.

A correspondent in New Zealand has asked us for a list of the names of lady graduates in music at British Universities, and Mr. T. L. Southgate, the honorary secretary of the Union of Graduates in Music, has kindly furnished us with the necessary information. It appears that there are no less than seventeen of the fair sex who have obtained degrees in music at various Universities. As only one of their number is a "Doctor," the remaining quadruple quartet are of necessity female "Bachelors." The Royal University of Ireland can claim six of these "sweet girl graduates." Oxford follows next with five; London and Victoria can claim two each;

Cambridge and Durham bring up the rear, each with a spinster, that is to say, a single specimen. "At the University of London," Mr. Southgate says, "lady graduates can become Members of Convocation, and therefore they can vote for Members of Parliament!" He adds: "I wonder if this is known to the Women Suffrage people?" Perhaps one of the lady musical graduates at London might be favoured with a Mus. Bac. seat in Convocation.

Her Majesty the Queen has commanded a performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" to be given at Windsor Castle, on the 20th inst. The chorus will consist of the Windsor and Eton Madrigal Society and the orchestra will be that of Her Majesty's private band. The performance is to take place in St. George's Hall, in order that the organ, which is so essential a feature of Mendelssohn's score, may be used on the occasion. Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the Queen's Music, will conduct.

The Philharmonic Society has now completed its arrangements for the approaching season, the following being amongst the chief features of an attractive scheme: Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony will be performed on May 18, when the chorus will consist of 150 members of the Leeds Festival Chorus, and this full-voiced choir will also sing in Sir Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens." Professor Stanford will conduct the first performance of his "Concert variations upon an English theme" for pianoforte (Mr. Leonard Borwick) and orchestra; M. Alexander Glazounow will discharge a similar duty for his new Symphony (No. 6) in C minor; likewise, Herr Richard Strauss his Tondichtung "Tod und Verklärung" and Mr. F. H. Cowen the first performance of his Concertstück in B flat, with M. Paderewski in the solo part. M. S. Rachmaninoff (his first appearance in England) will play his new Pianoforte Concerto and some solos, Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's Orchestral Ballade in A minor is also in the scheme, which still further includes Mr. German's Overture to "Much Ado about Nothing," Mr. B. Luard Selby's Idyll for small orchestra, and—last, but not least—Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Orchestral Ballad (composed for the Philharmonic Society), "La Belle Dame sans Merci." Various other orchestral works of acknowledged excellence will be duly presented, and the names of the soloists are a sufficient guarantee of the reputation of the Philharmonic Society in that respect. As seven pianists and only one violinist are announced to perform, it would seem as if the votaries of the keyboard instrument are the favourites. Sir Alexander Mackenzie will occupy his accustomed place as conductor.

The Feis Ceoil, or Irish Musical Festival—the third annual event of its kind—is announced to be held in Dublin from May 15 to May 20 inclusive. Many musical competitions, with substantial prizes, are to be held—e.g. vocal (choral, church choir, and solo voices) and instrumental, the latter including orchestras, wind bands, string quartets, and a variety of solo performers. A special competition of national music and instruments is also intimated. No less than sixteen prizes—ranging in amounts from £30 to £1—are offered to composers, of which full advantage should be taken. A new feature is a proposed exhibition of musical MSS., rare editions of Irish music, portraits, musical instruments, &c., which should be specially interesting. Judging by the success of the last Feis Ceoil held in Belfast, that which is soon to be held in the Irish capital should be full of promise. All particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, 19, Lincoln Place, Dublin.

At the New Year's Convention of the Tonic Sol-fa Association, Mr. Venables, conductor of the South London Choral Association, read a paper on "Present day concert tendencies." He stated that in his opinion and experience the long old-fashioned oratorio or cantata seemed no longer to attract, and the concert of part-songs and solos had become even less possible. Audiences seemed to be far more drawn to comic opera with its action and colour. Oratorio was being largely relegated to the church, where a fair performance satisfied the taste of the majority of listeners. At ordinary choral concerts it was almost absolutely necessary to face the cost of engaging a competent band, and the works chosen for performance must be short and dramatic—"The Revenge" and "The Flag of England" being instanced as types. The remarks of Mr. Venables seem to be hardly consistent with fact. Last month we recorded the extraordinary enthusiasm evoked by a performance of Gounod's "Redemption" at Belfast, when hundreds were unable to obtain admission. An exact parallel to this at Toronto will be found in our present issue. At Pilsen, in far away Bohemia, a performance of Gounod's "Mors et Vita" produced such an effect as to necessitate an immediate repetition. And to come nearer home, the experience at the People's Palace is that hardly anything is so certain to attract a crowded house as an oratorio.

Mr. E. Silas is the author of a little pamphlet entitled "Accidents on the staves and other matters" (to be obtained from him at 20, Stanwick Road, West Kensington). As it is in one chapter, it might very well be entitled a "Chapter of Accidents." Here is a specimen of Mr. Silas's racy style and critical acumen:—

> If prejudiced people should find the traces of an upset ink-bottle in one of Beethoven's scores, they would undoubtedly affirm that it was meant thus. In the autograph score of Handel's "Messiah" (at Buckingham Palace), I saw on one page a large circle, evidently caused by a pot or saucepan. Now, I respect greatly the score of the "Messiah," but I respect much less the saucepan, and do not think that the obvious circle was intended by the illustrious composer. No author is immaculate, and all mortals are liable to mistakes and carelessness. I heard for years in Paris the Pastoral Symphony (Beethoven) played with four important bars missing in the viola part; also the Fifth Symphony with a bar too much in the "Scherzo." For a half-century, or perhaps more, one of the same composer's quartets was continually performed with a horrible cacophony, owing to the second violin part being shifted two bars from its proper place during seventeen bars! The quartet, being one of the posthumous works, must have left thus the hands of a careless or ignorant corrector. The curious circumstance was that the best violinists played it in that state, and the hideous noises were ascribed to Beethoven's eccentricity! The above-named mistakes have since been rectified.

An article will be found in another column on Dr. Arne's "Caractacus." It may be noted in connection with that subject that Sir Henry Rowley Bishop wrote a "Grand Ballet of Caractacus," which was produced at Drury Lane on April 22, 1808, and, according to the title-page of the vocal score, with "Unbounded Applause." It winds up, by the way, with a "Grand Processional March." There is an account of it in The Times of the following day. It describes the drama as "by no means skilfully worked up: we see Britons conquered and innocence suffer." The critic advises curtailment, and adds: "At present, as the author's father said of Vortigern, 'it is long enough for two and a half.'" The author is supposed to have been Thomas Sheridan.

Mr. John Foster has recently resigned his appointment as a vicar-choral of Westminster Abbey, with the choir of which he has been connected for forty-two years. The Dean and Chapter have shown their appreciation of his long and efficient service by continuing to him his full salary as a well-deserved pension. Born in 1827, Mr. Foster began his career as a singer upwards of sixty years ago, when he became a chorister of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. From December, 1847, to 1856, he was organist of St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street. Mr. Foster is the composer of several excellent chants and a beautiful anthem, "Like as the hart desireth the waterbrooks," which is frequently sung. In former days he used to arrive at the Abbey dressed in a swallow-tail coat, a tall hat, and wearing a white tie. Just before his retirement the young veteran of seventy-two cycled down daily from South Hampstead to Westminster, clad in a short jacket and a bowler hat. May he be spared to enjoy his well-earned leisure for a cycle of years and live to wear out many bicycles.

Sir Hubert Parry has recently become a victim to the reporters, whose stenographic eccentricities would make a "sette of odd volumes." In some recent remarks anent the national instrument of Scotland, Sir Hubert is reputed, or reported to have referred to "the detestable sound of the bagpipe." Is it at all likely that the genial Director of the Royal College of Music could have spoken in strains deprecating so characteristic a music-producer? No; absolutely impossible. On the contrary, he dulcetly spoke of it as "that delectable instrument." We should not be surprised to learn that he likes the music of the bagpipe much better than most of the music the respectable and highly veneered classes delight in. Moreover, has it not the merit of genuineness? Sir Hubert Parry might compose a sonata for the bagpipe. With a hint or two from Sir Alexander Campbell Mackenzie he would have no difficulty in supplying a touch of the reel thing.

Goldmark's new opera, "Die Kriegsgefangene" ("The Prisoner of War"), was brought out at the Imperial Theatre, Vienna, on the 17th ult. The libretto is by one of the protestant priests of Vienna, Dr. Formey, and deals freely with some of the personages of Homer, including Achilles, Agamemnon, and Briseis (the prisoner of war), but without referring to any incident in the "Iliad." The score is melodious and in places highly effective, as, for instance, Achilles' appeal to his warriors, and an intermezzo in the first act; a love-song, with harp accompaniment, and a duet, in the second act, as well as the remarkably fine prelude to the latter. The performance, with Madame Renard and Herr Reichmann in the principal parts, and conducted by Herr Mahler, was a very good one, the work being enthusiastically received by the audience.

The note of this "occasional note" is  It (the "occasional note") showeth that the sense of absolute pitch hath its advantages and disadvantages, regarded from a purely domestic point of view and quite apart from its strictly musical significance. Once upon a time George Cooper told a pupil to call at a friend's house in a certain street. "I can't remember the number," said Cooper, "I think it is No. 5—but his door-scraper sounds G!"——The late Rev. Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., was not only a remarkably precocious child, but he was gifted with the sense of absolute pitch from his earliest years. One day, when his father Sir Gore Ouseley happened to be suffering from a very severe cold in his head, two ladies made an afternoon call at the family mansion. During a pause in the conversation—a pause necessitated by a familiar manipulation of Sir Gore's nasal organ—little four-year-old Freddie looked up to the ladies and said: "Only fancy, papa blows his nose in G!"

M. Siegfried Wagner's "Der Bärenhäuter" was produced at Munich on the 22nd ult., and, it is said, with great success. The son of Richard Wagner has the goodwill of his father's many admirers, while the general public naturally regard the magic family name as a guarantee for something good. M. Siegfried Wagner, who has written both the libretto and music of his opera, has based his plot chiefly on Grimm's story of the Idler "Bearskin." Whether his additions of the "everlasting bonfire" scene in the first Act, and the military Finale of the third and last Act are improvements may, however, well be questioned. The music of "Der Bärenhäuter" bears strong traces of the influence of Richard Wagner, and for this, of course, every allowance must be made. As in Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel," so in "Der Bärenhäuter" we find simple rhythmical melodies. So far as one can judge from the vocal score, the composer shows considerable skill, but his father's armour is, for the present, at any rate, too heavy for him, while his attempts at ordinary melody are not as characteristic and refined as one could wish. The music is interesting rather than strong; of real individuality we find but little, if any, trace. We shall doubtless have another opportunity of returning to the subject.

The prize competition for a ballet libretto, proposed some months ago by the elder Strauss, has brought forward no less than 718 manuscripts. After careful perusal of all of them, the prize of 4,000 crowns has at length been awarded to a Herr Kollmann, of Salzburg, a complete novice in the art of dramatic writing, the subject chosen by him being the familiar adventures of "Cinderella."

Mr. Robert Steele read a most interesting paper on the Bibliography of English printed works of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries which contain musical notation. Mr. Steele gave many interesting facts about early English printers of music, and produced a list of the works referred to, which is probably the most complete that has yet been made. The interest of the lecture, given on the 16th ult., at a meeting of the Bibliographical Society, was greatly enhanced by the performance of some sixteenth century English music by Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch and members of his family, on instruments belonging to the same period.

Mr. Walter Wesché, whose hobby is the microscope, contributed to our excellent contemporary, Knowledge, of the 2nd ult., an interesting paper on "The ovipositor of a beetle (Baptolinus alternans) and the teeth of the dung fly"!

Madame Albani will form the subject of the biographical sketch in our next issue.

HANDEL'S "WIND PARTS" TO "THE MESSIAH."

"Little boys may be seen but not heard," is an old-fashioned nursery dictum. Hautboys were seen but not heard at the recent New Year's performance of "The Messiah" at the Royal Albert Hall. In spite of all that has been said and written about Handel's wind parts (so-called) to his famous oratorio—we refer to those in manuscript at the Foundling brought to light some few years ago by Mr. H. Davan Wetton—it may not be without interest to further investigate the matter and draw therefrom a conclusion. A document in the possession of the Governors of the Foundling Hospital is entitled "A list of the Performers in the Oratorio call'd Messiah at the Foundling Hospital, May 3rd, 1759." This is in the handwriting of Christopher Smith, Handel's "man," and is documentary evidence of what may be accepted as a typical performance of the renowned oratorio in the chapel of the Foundling Hospital under Handel's personal direction. In fact, Handel was actually announced to appear at this performance, but he died three weeks before the event.

The band on the occasion referred to consisted of

Violins, 12,
Tenners (sic), 3,
Hautbois, 4,
Bassoons, 4,
Violoncelli, 3,
Contra Bassi, 2,
Trumpets, 2,

an instrumental force of thirty-three performers, exclusive of the organ and harpsichord. But what about the strength of the chorus? There were six boys and twelve men, or a total choral force of eighteen singers against a band of twenty strings, without reckoning the keyed instruments. What more natural, therefore, than that Handel should turn on, so to speak, some hautboys and bassoons in order to strengthen his weak chorus?

Moreover, it must be remembered that these parts for hautboys and bassoons are not parts in the general acceptance of the term—that is to say, they are not independent, as they merely double the voices. Their use by Handel was probably an expedient adopted by him owing to the force of circumstances. The hautboys practically play the same notes as those sung by the chorus sopranos throughout the work. At those Foundling performances the proportion of sopranos to hautboys was six to four: therefore, at the Albert Hall there ought to have been 160 hautboys—and these of ancient manufacture—to have obtained the proper Foundling tradition!

It is, therefore, obvious that the hautboy and bassoon parts of 1759 were a matter of expediency. Even if the proportions of the chorus and orchestra were adjusted, there would not now be the same necessity for strengthening or supporting the splendid vocal tone of our chorus singers of the present day. Therefore, under modern conditions, Handel's Foundling wind parts, having been tried, have been found wanting.

In regard to the ancient custom of supporting the chorus with instrumental doublings, the learned and distinguished musical critic of the Yorkshire Post has offered the following suggestive remarks as to the probable use by Handel of the trombones in his oratorio performances. He says—

> The use of trombones in Church music in Germany in Handel's time and down to a much later date, was of a character that vindicates their general employment in eighteenth century music, whether indicated in the score or not. This was the time when the modern orchestra, in its completeness and independence, was quite unknown. The organ was then the basis of the accompaniment.
> Next to the organ, as Marpurg tells us, came three trombones, essentially the support of the chorus, played in virtue of his office by the "Stadtthürmeister" and two assistants. These instruments were played in the tutti passages, in unison with the alto, tenor, and bass voices of the chorus, an arrangement which survives to this day in the common employment of alto, tenor, and bass trombones in the classical orchestra. So well understood was this tradition that "the trombones were generally left unindicated in the score, and only the places marked where they were to be silent."

While on this subject we may refer to the introduction of lady singers in the chorus so far as this country is concerned. Probably very few of the fair chorus singers of the present day, who charm with their presence as well as their voices, know that their benefactor was Dr. Thomas Augustine Arne, the composer of "Rule, Britannia." It was at a performance of that worthy composer's oratorio of "Judith" that—so it is recorded—ladies first sang in oratorio choruses. Here is the evidence from the Public Advertiser of February 27, 1773, contained in a notice of the aforesaid performance:—

"The striking Appearance of the Band and Chorus, which were much more numerous than they have usually been, received a most pleasing Addition from the Female Singers, then first introduced."

The innovation seems to have been regarded in a spirit typical of English conservatism. Even at the great Handel Commemoration of 1784, held in Westminster Abbey, of the fifty-three soprano chorus singers, there were only six ladies, the remainder were boys. The altos, who numbered forty-eight singers, were all men. At the second Birmingham Musical Festival, held in the year 1778, one of the chief advertised attractions was the appearance of "the celebrated Women Chorus Singers from Lancashire." It would be interesting to know something more about these ladies and from what particular town or part of that musical county they came.

In regard to the alto part, it was not until the year 1848 that ladies began to sing contralto in the chorus. The part had been previously sung by men only—"bearded altos," as Mendelssohn hirsuteably designated them.

THE MACCABÆAN HYMN.

A Jewish military service was held at the Central Synagogue, Great Portland Street, on December 11, at which the Maccabæan Hymn was sung. Having been asked by a correspondent for information upon the subject of the hymn, we are glad to give the following particulars which have been kindly contributed by the Rev. Francis L. Cohen, of the Borough New Synagogue, who officiated on and arranged the music for the above interesting occasion. Mr. Cohen writes:

"The Maccabæan Hymn is a Hebrew poem of five verses, written in the early mediæval period by one Mordecai, who has signed his name acrostically in the initial letters M. R. D. C. I. of the Hebrew verses. It is the hymn sung after the kindling of the lights commemorative of Maccabæan fidelity and valour, on Hanucah, the Feast of Dedication (I. Macc. iv., 52-59; John x., 22; Josephus, Antiq. xii., 7). These verses deal with the successive deliverances of Israel from oppression.

"The tune is one of the very few traditional melodies of the Synagogue which are rhythmically regular (its origin accounts for this). There have been other tunes for the hymn, including one employed by Marcello for Psalm xv., but this is now the only one in general use. Jews resident in German lands have known and loved it since, at least, the fifteenth century, and they have at times associated it with some four other hymns for the same feast of Lights. It is not originally a Hebrew melody, being clearly traceable to the old German folk-song—

> So weiss ich eins, das mich erfrewt,
> Das Pluemlein auff preyter Heyde.*

The mediæval Jews often 'lifted' a folk-song for use as a hymn-tune, but so did the Gentiles, their neighbours. This very tune was the first which Luther adapted for sacred use, setting it to his well-known

> Nun freut euch lieben christen mein.

Thus the tune came to be handled by Bach, and, in later sequence, the melody has become familiar to the congregations in English churches under the name of 'Erk,' to the verses commencing 'Sing praise to God who reigns above' (Hymns Ancient and Modern, No. 293).

"It may be possible that the tradition enshrined in 'Erk' has deviated less from the mediæval original than the melody used for the Maccabæan Hymn, for this synagogal form was first written down only in 1815 for Nathan's 'Hebrew Melodies,' the collection of Jewish worship-music (nearly all modern) for which Lord Byron wrote his famous verses. In this collection it is set with the song 'On Jordan's banks' (p. 29). English Jews of the last generation further varied the tradition by introducing a modulation to the dominant in the second section, which is not yet known on the Continent. The Synagogue version of it affords an interesting contrast with 'Erk,' the Church form."

Mr. Cohen has promised to contribute an article to these columns descriptive of the music in the Synagogue service of the present day.

CHURCH MUSIC.

At the conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, Mr. W. H. Cummings, in his inaugural address, referred at length to the present broad selection of music from secular sources for Church use. It is entirely within the scope of such an important body as the Incorporated Society of Musicians to discuss a question affecting the music of the Church; and the general spirit of Mr. Cummings's words, based upon the proposition that it is undesirable to introduce into public worship art strongly impregnated with worldly associations, was accepted in a sympathetic manner. Of course all questions rest upon degree as well as upon principle. The clergyman who quotes Shakespeare and Tennyson in the pulpit and objects to the musical presentation of the more serious portions of Wagner's "Parsifal," is evidently in an inconsistent position. Probably no very hard and fast line can be drawn in this connection, though the sound principle embodied in the wise assertion that there is a time and place for everything should be duly borne in mind. The matter is one calling for no hasty action, but rather for sound judgment, tempered by that patience and charity whereby all things may be set right.

The appointment of Mr. W. H. Bellamy as conductor of the Choral Association in the Archdeaconry of Coventry gives evidence of the vitality of one of those important forces, the Diocesan Choir Associations, which have done good service to the cause of Church music and represent a movement which has spread beyond the boundary lines of the Anglican Church, seeing that the Nonconformist Churches have a very extensive organisation of the kind, reared in a healthy spirit of unity and maintained by the exercise of marked energy and a large measure of artistic judgment.

Recitals with organ and orchestra, with vocal music interspersed, seem to be quite the rule at All Souls' Church, Halifax. The pieces given at one such performance not so long ago included Overture "Son and Stranger" (Mendelssohn), Reverie (A. Somervell), and Mendelssohn's "Athalie" March. The vocal movements very properly had the advantage of accompaniment by the orchestra. This type of combined recital is daily finding increased favour in many directions.

The Church Orchestral Society continues its good work under the guidance of its founder and hon. secretary, the Hon. Richard Strutt, and its conductor, Dr. Huntley. This excellent Society has its own special difficulties to face. One is the unaccountable neglect by amateurs of such useful instruments as the viola and contra-bass, not to mention sundry members of the wood-wind family. Here is matter which presses for prompt attention, and players upon the instruments named would do well to make their qualifications known to Mr. R. Strutt, in view of aiding a most desirable movement. Then Church authorities, often pressed by urgent claims and unfamiliar with details of orchestral wants, are frequently unprepared to meet the most reasonable expenses. In this and in other directions the musical public should aid the Church Orchestral Society with a much larger measure of sympathy and liberality.

The Christmas music, dearer by association to all of us than, perhaps, any other section of the "Sacred Oratorio," was given twice at Chiswick Parish Church during the proper season, together with a brief selection of modern carols, under the direction of the organist, Mr. T. King Holtham. Needless to add, the number of similar renderings of "The Messiah" Christmas selection may be described as legion.

One stirring and annual feature of the past month was the performance of the large selection from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" in our Metropolitan Cathedral, on St. Paul's Day, under Sir George Martin's able direction.

Gounod's "Gallia" and "De Profundis" will be sung at Hampstead Parish Church, on March 3, and Schütts's "Passion" and "Seven Last Words" on the 24th inst.

The services at Grahamstown Cathedral on Christmas Day included Te Deum (Lowe in C), Holy Communion (Woodward in E flat), Offertorium, "Rejoice greatly" ("Messiah"), Ave Verum (Gounod), and anthem, "Bethlehem" (Gounod). At the conclusion of Evensong a short recital was given by the organist of the Cathedral, Mr. W. Deane.

ORGAN MUSIC.

As in every other department of life, the world of organ-players has its "vexed questions," accompanied, necessarily perhaps, by the conflict of differing opinions. To name only one point which is exercising the minds of those who love the organ, there is the by no means new but still "burning question," the use of arranged music.

It seems to be too much forgotten that the faculty of adaptation is ever one of the most influential powers of all the arts and sciences, and of Nature herself. So long as books are translated, pictures transferred by the engraver's skill—so long, indeed, as all the arts mutually serve each other by imitation, an art in itself—so long will music, the most pliable of the arts, continue to be presented by the medium of adaptation.

* Boehme, Altdeutsches Liederbuch, No. 635.

It may be, however, that there is at first sight an almost too pronounced employment on the organ keyboard of arranged music; but perhaps this is only a seeming excess, to be attributed to a still marked paucity of original organ music which adequately employs the wonderful store of tone-colour impulses of the modern organ. To bring this needed advance about, not only will our writers of organ music have to turn their attention more and more to an extended but still judicious use of organ tone effects and mechanisms, but some more extended means of stating such music clearly on paper will have to be developed.

It may be well to record a recital given as far back as December 26 by Mr. W. Hoyle, at St. Michael's, Coventry, as a very desirable Bank Holiday pleasure for the people; who by a very large attendance proved their appreciation of the good spirit which must have prompted the institution of so admirable a provision for the public good. This was the fifth Bank Holiday recital given in the stately old church.

Mr. Maughan Barnett has been continuing his recitals in the various churches of Wellington, New Zealand. His recent programmes have included specimens of English organ music from Wesley to sundry rising young composers of the present day. Dr. S. Corbett, a gifted blind organist, gave two recitals in the Mechanics' Hall, Nottingham, on the 7th ult. His selections were admirably varied, including, as they did, pieces by Bach, Mendelssohn, Wély, Freyer, and A. Hesse. The music of the last-named composer would appear to be again claiming the general recognition of organ players. At Hawarden Parish Church, on the 3rd ult., Mr. R. W. Pringle gave a good selection of organ music, including "Variations" by A. Hesse and Tours's excellent "Fantasia." Mr. Cardinal Taylor's programme for a recital given at St. Saviour's, Leicester, on the 15th ult., comprised, among other things of interest, Scherzo in C minor, Widor; "Marche Solennelle," Mailly; and "Alla Marcia," Petrali.

The announcement that Mr. A. H. Griffin is appointed organist at the Alexandra Palace, and will give numerous recitals there, is a matter of satisfaction. Lovers of organ music will again be able to hear Mr. Henry Willis's gigantic and magnificent organ, one of the finest—some good judges have declared it to be the finest—of the many noble instruments he has built. In this connection, however, the effect of the enlarged and renovated organ in St. Paul's Cathedral will be regarded with marked interest.

Quite models in their way are Mr. E. H. Thorne's Bach recital programmes. Two of the present series of four have been given on the 21st and 28th ult. The schemes included some of the well-known Preludes and Fugues and Toccata and Fugue in C. The Sonatas in G and C minor, works which Mr. Thorne has done so much to bring into more general use, and sundry of the choral Preludes, were also interesting pieces of these well arranged performances.

Miss Edroff performed an excellent selection at her recital in St. Michael's Church, Stone, on the 19th ult., when her programme included Mendelssohn's Third Sonata, Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, and Lemare's Pastorale.

A series of organ recitals have been given recently at St. Luke's, Kentish Town, by Mr. George Aitken, Mr. Walter Alcock, and Mr. Herbert Cooke (organist of the church), in aid of the organ fund.

Mr. Roger Ascham continues his series of organ recitals at Feather Market Hall, Port Elizabeth; the recital on the evening of Christmas Day included Garrett's Postlude, "Christmas," and Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, the pianoforte part being taken by Miss Biden.

SIR HUBERT PARRY ON THE DUTIES OF AN ORGANIST.

Sir Hubert Parry, the President of the Royal College of Organists, distributed the Fellowship Diplomas on the 7th ult., when he gave an exceedingly interesting and instructive address, of which the following is a digest.

The attainment of the Fellowship diploma was an important point of departure in the life of many an organist. But it was as well to remember that an examination was not an end in itself, but merely a proof of attainment of a certain kind of knowledge. The object of education was not knowledge, but action. Knowledge is of no use until it is applied to some definite end. All life is a kind of examination, and happy the men who have their life's examination ready marked out for them. Organists are happy in this respect, for they have their distinct spheres and great powers for good and evil. The state of the branch of music which they are especially responsible for does not tend to show that they have used their power exclusively for good. No doubt they have great difficulties to face; such, for instance, as influential people with no taste whatever, and well-meaning persons with mistaken ideas of coddling, instead of bracing the suffering and downhearted. Organists should be the pillars of what is good and dignified, though not necessarily only supporters of what is merely called classical. Music ought rather to be divided into what is good and what is bad than into classical and popular. Every kind of music, from symphony to folk-song, can be good, though what is called popular is generally that which is merely vulgar, blatant, and obvious. But to be able to judge between good and bad, an organist specially needs to keep in touch with everything which is outside his mere organist's routine. He should hear orchestral music, quartets, and any kind of art that keeps his sensibilities alive and prevents him becoming stodgy and mechanical. Moreover, he should keep in touch with the progress of the art and know the really best music of his time, and not judge things too much by their technical qualities. Dexterity is an inevitable part of art, but fine thoughts that are expressed without much dexterity are often of infinitely greater value, though the peculiar training of organists often leads them to think otherwise.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

It is not too much to say that the performance of Handel's "Messiah," given by the Royal Choral Society on the 2nd ult., at the Royal Albert Hall, was, with the exception of the rendering under Dr. Mann's direction, June 13, 1894, at King's College, Cambridge, the most interesting that has been heard by the present generation; and although the attempt to secure an approach to Handel in effects of tone colour can only be regarded in the light of an experiment, Sir Frederick Bridge deserves the warmest praise for his endeavour. Much time and care had manifestly been spent upon the project. The omission of Mozart's "additional accompaniments" necessitated a revision of the string parts. This was entrusted to Mr. T. W. Bourne, whose special study of the music of the last century, and particularly of "The Messiah," well fitted him for the task. In this edition (which is based entirely upon original authorities, and which we hope will be published by Messrs. Novello) many wrong readings have been corrected, and Handel's bowing and marks of expression have, where they varied from those already in use, been restored. The oboe and bassoon parts were prepared from those used by Handel in 1759 at the Foundling Hospital, where, it may be remembered, they were found by Mr. H. Davan Wetton in 1894, in a cupboard behind the organ loft; and finally, the organ part, which had to replace that of the harpsichord in the accompaniments, had been jointly written by Mr. J. E. Borland and Mr. T. W. Bourne. The orchestra consisted of thirty-eight violins, twelve violas, twelve violoncellos, twelve double-basses, twelve oboes, six bassoons, two horns, two trumpets, and one pair of kettle-drums. Now the instruments used at the performance at the Foundling Hospital on May 3, 1759, were twelve violins, three violas, three violoncellos, two double-basses, four hautboys, four bassoons, two trumpets, two horns, kettle-drums and organ. The orchestra on that occasion supported a chorus of eighteen, according to the account of the expenses, or at most of twenty-six, if, as suggested by Professor Prout, two choristers sang from each of the voice parts discovered, but on the 2nd ult. the orchestra of (in round figures) 100 players accompanied a choir of about 800! Moreover, when the vast difference in the character and power of tone which exists between the organ at the Foundling Hospital in the eighteenth century and that at the Royal Albert Hall to-day is remembered, it becomes plain that it was only in a very measurable degree that it was possible to reproduce Handel's balance of tone. The twelve oboists and six bassoonists blew their hardest, the former with valiant independence of pitch; but it was as though they were not when the choir approached a forte and any stops louder than the small diapasons were used by Mr. H. L. Balfour at the organ. In the orchestral pieces and accompaniments to the songs, however, Handel spoke in his own tongue. The overture and "Pastoral" Symphony were invested with genuine old world distinctiveness, but the omission of Mozart's added wind parts seemed to deprive the symphony of much of its pastoral character. The exclusion of trumpets and drums in the chorus "For unto us a Child is born" was a gain, as more in accordance with the character of the "Prince of Peace," and the omission of Mozart's clarinet and bassoon parts in the air "He was despised" was welcome; but, taken in its entirety, there was a sense of monotony and want of solidity in the instrumental effects that left the impression that, unless all the conditions of Handel's time are observed, the restoration of certain effects are not desirable. What would seem to be wanted is a revision of Mozart's "additional accompaniments," and the preparation of an edition of "The Messiah" to meet the requirements of large choral bodies undreamed of by Handel. For such an edition no better foundation could be found than that prepared with so much care for the performance at the Albert Hall. Sir Frederick Bridge's choristers showed great interest in their task and sang superbly, but, apparently, habit proved too strong in the chorus "Glory to God," which they began forte as usual, Handel's direction, Da lontano un poco piano (from a distance, rather softly), being once more ignored. The soloists, with the exception of Mr. Watkin Mills, who sang the bass songs with true Handelian vigour and distinctness of phrasing, were not so happy in their efforts. Madame Albani sang with her wonted fervour. Her rendering of "I know that my Redeemer liveth" causing an unusual impression, even for so distinguished an artist. Madame Himing, who replaced Miss Clara Butt, has not sufficient vocal power to do justice to the alto solos in so large a hall, and Mr. Lloyd Chandos adopted a style of expression too suggestive of a sentimental and forsaken lover. It should be added, as a matter of record, that the performance attracted a larger audience than even the Albert Hall could accommodate, a fact which testifies with remarkable emphasis to the continued popularity of Handel's masterpiece.

ROYAL CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company began a six weeks' season of opera in English, at the Lyceum Theatre, on the 2nd ult., and down to the time of going to press had given performances of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin," Bizet's "Carmen," Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," Gounod's "Faust," and Wallace's "Maritana." The most notable of the principal vocalists in these works were Miss Pauline Jordan, Miss Kirkby Lunn—who in the title-rôle of "Carmen" and as Siebel in "Faust" showed that she had greatly profited by her recent stage experience—Miss Emma d'Egremont, the possessor of a fine voice, who made her first appearance in the last-named character on the 19th ult., and with decided success; Miss Lucile Hill, and Miss Lily Heenan; and Messrs. Brozel, Umberto Salvi, Charles Tilbury, Homer Lind, Arthur Winckworth, and G. A. Fox. Owing to dissensions, which seem inevitable in operatic enterprises, the ensemble at the commencement of the season suffered from a rapid change of conductors. Mr. MacCunn, who was understood to be the conductor-in-chief, resigned, and the opening night's performance of "Tannhäuser" was directed by M. Georges Jacobi. He was announced to conduct on the second night, but in his place appeared Mr. T. H. Frewin. The following evening Mr. Harold Vicars occupied the conductor's seat, but on the 7th ult. Mr. MacCunn was persuaded to return, and was appointed "Director of the music," and since that date the performances have improved and have attained a fair standard of completeness and artistic value.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

Rabl's Quartet in E flat (Op. 1).

The Saturday afternoon Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall were resumed on the 7th ult., when the concerted works were Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1) and Brahms's Quintet in F minor (Op. 34). The executants were Lady Hallé, Messrs. H. Inwards, Gibson, and P. Ludwig, with Mr. Leonard Borwick as pianist and Mr. Kennerley Rumford as vocalist.

Distinction was given to the concert in the following week by the addition to the repertory of Walter Rabl's Quartet in E flat (Op. 1) for pianoforte, violin, clarinet (or viola), and violoncello. This work was first heard in London at Mr. G. A. Clinton's chamber concert on April 1 last, at Queen's (Small) Hall. It is of great merit, although the sources which have inspired the themes are not difficult to trace. As, however, Herr Rabl is only about five-and-twenty, and as the models are the great masters, his indebtedness is rather a promising sign than otherwise. The work gained the prize in a competition arranged by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Vienna, Brahms being one of the judges, and is eminently of a pleasing nature; so pleasing, indeed, did the audience on the 14th ult. think the third movement to be, that its repetition was demanded and granted. No little of the charm of the work is owing to the clearness of design and spontaneous flow of the music, which, moreover, is never pretentious. It was admirably interpreted by Mr. Leonard Borwick, Lady Hallé, Herr Mühlfeld, and Mr. Paul Ludwig. The famous clarinettist was subsequently heard in Brahms's Quintet in B minor (Op. 115) and in Weber's Duo Concertante in E flat (Op. 48), in which he was associated with Mr. Borwick. The last-named also gave a fine performance of Mozart's rarely-heard Sonata in D (Op. 21). Miss Lucia Fydell was the vocalist.

On the 21st ult. advantage was taken of Herr Mühlfeld's presence to perform Brahms's Trio in A minor (Op. 114) and repeat the beautiful Quintet in B minor (Op. 115). Herr Mühlfeld also played the clarinet obbligato in three charming songs by Spohr, severally named "Zwiegesang," "Wiegenlied," and "Wach' auf," which were sung in a sympathetic manner by Miss Agnes Witting.

SUNDAY CONCERT SOCIETY.

Glazounoff's Sixth Symphony.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's Fantasia on Servian Themes.

The Concert Society recently formed to carry on the orchestral and vocal concerts at the Queen's Hall, which the London County Council prohibited Mr. Robert Newman from doing as a private speculation, is now firmly established. The Duke of Portland has become its president, its vice-presidents are the Duke of Newcastle, Viscount Valentia, Lord Farrer, the Right Hon. G. J. Shaw-Lefevre, Sir Frederick Pollock, and Sir Lepel Griffin, and with Mr. E. F. Jacques as secretary and Mr. Newman as manager the performances have been carried on during the past month with renewed vigour, Mr. Henry J. Wood conducting in the afternoon and Mr. George Riseley in the evening.

On New Year's day the first performance in England was given of M. Alexander Glazounoff's Sixth Symphony in C minor (Op. 58), which was completed in 1896 and published the following year. Of all the modern Russian composers Mr. Glazounoff is the most Western in his style and methods, and for this reason his music possesses additional artistic value. His Sixth Symphony has no avowed programme, but it possesses a poetic nature that excites the imagination of the listener in a pleasurable manner. It opens with a dignified Adagio, which contains in modified form the two principal themes of the succeeding Allegro. This is a vivacious movement, earnest in expression and lofty in sentiment. The next movement consists of a theme and seven variations, the theme being a charming melody of folk-song nature and the variations being remarkable for piquant scoring and finished part-writing. These are followed by an Intermezzo, which might pass for a dainty minuet of olden days, so full of grace and courtesy is it. The Finale opens in a pompous manner, and in the development there is a humorous element suggestive of that in the worthy burger's music in Wagner's "Meistersinger." From the above it will be gathered that the work possesses more than ordinary attractiveness and that its second performance will be anticipated with interest.

Very different is Rimsky-Korsakoff's Fantasia on Servian Themes (Op. 6), which was played for the first time in this country on the 15th ult. This is based on three melodies which are treated in the manner of a Liszt rhapsody. The music progresses by repetitions of melodic phrases rather than by development, and the scoring for the most part is of a sensational and blatant character.

SAVOY THEATRE.—"THE LUCKY STAR."

It is not pleasant to think that there is no one who can maintain the high standard attained by Sir Arthur Sullivan and Mr. W. S. Gilbert in comic opera, yet this would seem the only conclusion to be drawn from the production, on the 7th ult., of "The Lucky Star" at the Savoy Theatre. Mr. D'Oyly Carte could scarcely have gone farther or employed more librettists than he has done in this instance, but the result is only a good example of what has been produced at many theatres for years past. How many counsellors have been sought will be seen by the following extract from the title-page:—

"Founded on and adapted from the French original of Leterrier and Vanloo, and an American version thereof by Cheever Goodwin and Woolston Morse. Some new dialogue by Charles H. G. Brookfield. New lyrics by Adrian Ross and by Aubrey Hopwood. The whole revised and put together by H. L. The music by Ivan Caryll."

Although strength can scarcely be said to have resulted from this unity, the work possesses an ingenious and humorous story which supplies a series of diverting incidents. King Ouf is wont to give his subjects an annual fête, a special feature of which is an execution. It is the day of the fête, but no one has committed an offence which merits death. The King, however, comes across a travelling painter named Lazuli, whom he so enrages that Lazuli assaults the royal person. This constitutes high treason; but just as the execution is about to take place Siroco, the royal astrologer, declares that the King will die twenty-four hours after Lazuli. Henceforth the King's solicitude for the continuance of the painter's life is greater than the former anxiety to encompass his death. Lazuli is taken to the palace and treated as a prince, and even when he declares he has fallen in love with the Princess Laoula the King consents to the union, although she has been brought by the Ambassador of King Mataquin with a view to becoming his queen. Lazuli's escape from the palace and the consequent nervous anxiety for his safety provide the humorous element of the second act; and in the third act Lazuli's supposed death, and the endeavours of the King and astrologer to extend the twenty-four hours left them, provide diverting episodes.

One listens in vain, however, for the subtle humour and witticisms common to Mr. Gilbert's books and for the echoing chuckle from the orchestra. Mr. Ivan Caryll's music is good of its class, but it is on a distinctly lower level than is expected at the Savoy Theatre. Apart from the traditions of the house, however, there is much in the score that is worthy of praise. It is nearly always tuneful, if seldom fresh or unconventional. It is vocal and flowing, and always well orchestrated, although it cannot be said that it ever becomes distinctive. In the first act the best numbers are the quartet "Incognito," the trio "Of our disguise advantage take," in which an approach to Sullivanesque effects are secured. In the opening of the Finale Mr. E. Chabrier's music to the original French version has been retained, scarcely with wisdom, for it excites regret that more has not been suffered to remain. The opening chorus of girls in the second act is extremely graceful, and the quintet, "It's the husband, harsh and hated," is one of the best numbers of the work. There is also a pretty barcarolle, "Over the lake I went sailing." The last act contains a ballad, entitled "The Ivory Gate," a merry "coon" song, and a well-written "Wedding Chorus." The Indian scenery and dresses presented a series of pictures that would delight the eye of the most fastidious artist, and the entire company worked with an intelligence and zeal that merit the warmest recognition.

In the part of the King, Mr. Walter Passmore had abundant opportunity for the display of his style of humour, and Mr. Henry Lytton gave a reading of the character of the Ambassador in accordance with the best traditions of the Savoy. Mr. Sydney Paxton as Siroco and Mr. Frank Manning as Kedas were not sufficiently in earnest. Better work was done by Mr. Robert Evett as Tapioca. Miss Emmie Owen was seen at her best as Lazuli, Miss Ruth Vincent was a charming Princess, and Miss Isabel Jay was a sympathetic and scarcely less fascinating Lady-in-Waiting. The composer conducted the opening performance, and, in answer to the usual calls at the fall of the curtain, three of the nonet of collaborators bowed their acknowledgments.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

Annual Conference at Plymouth.

Plymouth was the rendezvous of the fourteenth annual Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, where about 300 of the members foregathered from Tuesday, the 3rd, till Friday, the 6th ult. Mr. W. H. Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, the President, occupied the chair at the opening meeting, which took place at the Corn Exchange, when the Mayor of Plymouth, Mr. Alderman John Pethick, attended and gave a cordial welcome to the assembled musicians.

Annual Report.

The annual report—read by Mr. Edward Chadfield, the secretary—set forth that there had been a steady increase in the membership, 100 members having joined during the year. The Society had been enabled to offer two prizes of £25 each, one for the composition of a trio or quartet, the other for the composition of a sonata, in order to promote the culture of the higher class of instrumental music. Nineteen works were sent in, and Mr. F. W. Austin, of Birkenhead, and Signor Esposito, of Dublin, were the prize-winners. Assistance had been given to the Orphanage and to unfortunate members of the profession. Last year Sir John Stainer warned them if they wished to secure a voice in the management of their own profession of the necessity of taking active measures with respect to the coming legislation relating to secondary education and the registration of teachers. The principle of direct representation of those to whom registration was of vital importance upon the Council which had to deal with the subject was the principle for which the Society had contended since its establishment in 1882. In addition to legislative action, the powers likely to be conferred upon the proposed teaching of the University of London would have an important bearing upon professional musical education and Degrees in music.

"Our responsibilities as Professors of Music."

The Chairman said their responsibilities had a threefold aspect—past, present, and future. With regard to the past, there was ample proof that this country led the van in many departments of the art of music. In reference to the present, he complained that there was a tendency to shelve the music of the past in pursuit of highly-coloured orchestral programme music. He also deprecated the use of secular music in churches when there was a wealth of orchestral music available for the service of praise. There were people who argued that all music was sacred, and that there was no such distinction as secular and sacred. He did not agree with that statement. Association might so stamp any music as to render it fit only for the locality for which it was originally intended. As to the future, they had now to consider how they could best exercise their influence in forming the taste and standard of the music culture of their pupils. On that branch of the subject he directed attention to public concerts and entertainments. What was much to be desired was the means of bringing to the working and lower classes a knowledge of and familiarity with good music combined with words of wholesome thoughts. In East London much was being done at the People's Palace, where large audiences were enabled frequently to hear admirable concerts, with occasional performances of oratorio. It was gratifying to know that these performances were attended by crowded and appreciative audiences. Perhaps it would be possible for professors and amateurs to combine, and to provide frequent entertainments of the nature suggested. Recognising the enormous value of music as an educator, and believing that, if its great powers were systematically and persistently brought to bear on the masses, a wondrous change in the manners, habits, and thoughts of the people would soon be brought about, he would hail with delight the advent of wealthy and benevolent persons who would provide the funds necessary for sustaining nightly concerts in suitable buildings. If that were done on a broad scale, with good music and wholesome poetry, it would contribute more to elevate the nation than any of the excellent efforts which had yet been made with that object.

Municipal support to Music.

Mr. S. S. Stratton (Birmingham) moved "That the time has arrived when the recognition and support accorded by the municipalities of this country to literature and painting should be extended to the art of music." Music was not recognised as it should be. It was looked upon rather as an amusement than a fine art. For the promotion of music they had to rely on private enterprise, and it had to depend upon the support of a somewhat fickle public. In every other civilised country but our own the State or the municipality recognised and supported music as an art. In our own country it was subject to the law of supply and demand, and was treated on purely commercial grounds. They did not want State aid. The municipalities could do all that was necessary, and he suggested that assistance might be given in the promotion of concerts and the formation of musical societies.—Mr. Page (of Nottingham) stated that in that city the Corporation was giving support to an orchestra. The discussion was continued by Mr. D. Hume, Dr. Vincent, Mr. A. T. Akeroyd, Dr. Shinn, Mr. W. Scott, Dr. Culwick, Dr. King (who seconded Mr. Stratton's resolution), and the chairman. The following resolution (moved by Mr. Roylands Smith and seconded by Dr. Harding) was ultimately adopted by the conference: "That it is desirable to bring before municipal and other bodies the advantage of subsidising high-class or orchestral performances."

"The Art of Music for its own sake."

The chairman of the second day's proceedings was Dr. J. Culwick, of Dublin, who delivered an address dealing with the love and pursuit of the art of music for its own sake, apart from mere social and pecuniary advantage. He invited them to consider whence came Art, and why it existed in music. Rightly regarded, they must see a means whereby earnest men and women gave thought a voice, and in its grand and universal tongue spoke to all humanity. But to keep their ordinary humdrum daily work fresh they must constantly bear in mind its spiritual meaning. In the tabernacle of Nature the artist held a high and noble calling. Let him beware lest he prostituted his gift of insight and utterance to ignoble purposes, or degraded his talent and became false to his exalted vocation. Music was part of God's economy of Nature. The fact of the gradual growth and formulation of a musical profession was really an accident and was no part of music's authority and influence. There were reasons for music's well-being that lay beyond and above their social and pecuniary advantage. True, the honest worker was worthy of his reward, but "all best effort is unpaid." Just as the Romans suffered loss because they were too busy to think of Art and its practices, so was England in danger of losing many an advantage, and there were fears that her sons might become dwarfed in their growth towards what Swift called "Sweetness and light." As Matthew Arnold put it, "Faith in machinery, mistaking the means for the end, is our besetting danger." So long as manly courage, truth, and purity were our national characteristics the nation's music would be strong and beautiful. If these should fail, then, undoubtedly, our music would become deteriorated.

The "Training of the ear."

Dr. F. G. Shinn, of London, followed with a thoughtful and suggestive address on the "Training of the Ear." Having insisted on the importance of a method in the training of the ear, and entered into some details as to the method, he asked them to consider the position and relative importance which the subject of direct ear training should occupy in any complete scheme of musical education, and whether the present system of education and examination took cognisance of the fact, and, if not, what steps should be taken to remedy the defects of the system. He would be a bold man who would challenge the statement that musical examinations in the present day practically controlled musical education, and, as far as one could see, there was no prospect of any radical change in that direction. If they practically reviewed the results of the establishment of responsibility of honourable Examining Boards, these seemed to be partly good and partly otherwise. The thoroughness of much of the present-day teaching was one of the good results. The tendency to idolise diplomas and certificates, and to make the possession of them the be-all and the end-all of musical education, was one of the evil results. But in the matter of direct ear training he felt that its vital importance as the foundation of all true musical education had been very much lost sight of. It was not for him to condemn, or even to criticise, schemes of education and examination which had been framed with consummate care after much discussion by the greatest musicians of the country. He would but put the plain issues before the musicians of that conference for them to give their verdict.

Professor Prout said he felt strongly the truth of what Dr. Shinn had stated. A large number of the students of harmony really had no idea of how the chords they were putting on paper sounded. As one who had had much experience as an examiner, he had found that in many cases there was an absolute want of actual ear knowledge, and he thought that to a great extent ear training had been neglected. Certificates were granted for paper work, but the examinations should be so arranged as to secure a practical test to ear training. Dr. F. J. Sawyer (Brighton) moved "That it is most essential to the progress of musical study that examinations in ear training, both in the elements and in harmony, should be far more extended in all grades." Dr. H. Hiles (Manchester) seconded the motion. He said he thoroughly endorsed almost everything that Dr. Shinn had said as to the importance of applying tests for ear training. The resolution was carried.

The proceedings of the third day were under the chairmanship of Dr. Alfred King (Brighton).

"The influence of prejudice upon the present state of Musical Art."

Mr. Frederic James (Leeds), in an interesting paper on the above important subject, referred to the prejudice which, he said, existed against the compositions of British musicians. This was not of recent growth. For two hundred years it had been observable. It seemed to be the fashion, in some quarters at least, to think and speak lightly of British music. This neglect of native music led to an undue prominence being given to foreign works. It must, indeed, appear strange to a foreign musician that audiences in this country usually gave preference to works bearing a foreign name. Such was the fact, but their object should be the removal of prejudice against native composers, and not the exclusion of foreign music. The latter course would not only be to their own disadvantage, but would show an intolerably mean spirit. Let them secure the best music possible, regardless of the nationality of composers. Were the managers and organisers of concerts really to blame for the lack of native compositions in their programmes? Was it not a fact that the indifference which English audiences, as a rule, manifested towards native music led promoters of concerts to keep almost entirely to works by foreign composers? Monetary considerations were bound to have considerable weight with concert managers, and from a business point of view it was the correct thing for such pieces to be selected as would give most general satisfaction. If the works of British composers could secure all the encouragement they deserved, better days would be in store for musical art generally, and certainly much would be done to remove the old standing stigma that we were not a musical nation. After alluding to the Sunday concert question and the prejudice which existed in favour of certain composers or schools of music, he asked whether the fondness for modern works had not caused a feeling to rise up against some of the older composers. Could that be the best for musical art? It was to be hoped that the day would come when prejudice would either disappear or be gradually reduced, and good sound judgment would rule in all that they had to do and say.

Mr. Baring-Gould on "Folk-Music."

In the afternoon the Rev. S. Baring-Gould gave an address on "The Folk-Music of the West of England," which was admirably illustrated by songs rendered by a number of ladies and gentlemen. In introducing his subject, the speaker said he agreed with what had been said at the morning sitting, that we did not do sufficient justice to our own home-grown music, and that we did not give a fair chance to our own home-grown musicians. People had been in the habit of thinking that everything that was good came from Germany, France, or Italy; but he believed that in music, as well as in everything else, Englishmen could do as well, if not better, than the foreigner. Let them avoid the danger of working down to the common, uninstructed musical public, and try to elevate the public taste. He desired to direct their attention to the music that welled up from the hearts of the poor people, and say a few words on the folk-music traditional to the West of England, limiting his observations to that of Devon and Cornwall. Mr. Baring-Gould then related how he had, with the assistance of collaborators, collected the folk airs of Devon and Cornwall—in cottages and taverns, and among miners, farmers, stone-breakers, hedgers, and others. The words to many of the songs were such balderdash that they had in some cases to re-write them; but as to the melodies, they took no liberties with them. Some of the airs he had were undoubtedly very old and of an archaic character, but others were comparatively modern. Some of the airs were certainly ancient minstrel melodies that were accompanied by the harp, others demanded the pipe and tabor as accompaniment. Some were unmistakably old hornpipes, many were old dance tunes; but, as an old fiddler had told him, formerly the young people always sang as they danced, and certain movements of the dance pertained to the burden of a ballad. Then, again, there were traditional songs and airs that belonged to popular festivals.

The annual business meeting of the conference was held on the last day of the gathering (Friday), Mr. A. Page (Nottingham), in the unavoidable absence of Mr. John Thomas, being in the chair. Scarborough was selected as the next place of meeting, and the voting for the four chairmen resulted in the election of Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. F. H. Cowen, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Dr. Weekes.

The Orphanage.

The secretary submitted the report of the Orphanage Committee, and said that the Institution had been conducted in a very satisfactory manner and the health of the children had been good. The subscriptions, which kept coming in, showed that the interest in the Orphanage was sustained. Half the number of the children admitted were those of parents entirely unconnected with the Society. The committee had in that respect acted on the principle laid down at the general meeting when the Orphanage was taken over, that only cases of the greatest need should be accepted, without any reference to any personal connection with the Society. It was hoped that before long efforts would be made to extend the benefits of the Orphanage to boys as well as girls. Mr. W. H. Cummings (treasurer) said that by-and-bye they hoped to get fresh premises and to have an Institution worthy of their great Society. Mr. J. A. Matthews (Cheltenham) suggested that they should make a special effort to raise sufficient money to place the Orphanage on a firm basis, so that it should be independent of voluntary contributions. If each member would undertake to raise five guineas during the year they might get a fund of £5,000, and the Institution would then be established on a firm basis.

The proceedings concluded with a banquet, attended by many local celebrities, at which Mr. W. H. Cummings presided. Amongst the various social functions connected with the conference, mention must be made of a reception by the Mayor and Mayoress of Plymouth, various excursions in the delightful neighbourhood of the town, and an excellent concert, which reflected much credit on local talent and upon those who so ably foster it. Last, but not least, Professor Ebenezer Prout—who is a veritable Samuel Wesley redivivus—treated the members of the Society to a highly instructive recital series of Bach's "48," playing and explaining them in instalments on each of the four mornings of the conference.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The following is a list of the successful candidates for Fellowship at the recent examination of the Royal College of Organists:—W. Bradley (Leeds), J. C. Bradshaw (Llangollen), G. F. Cawthorne (Sheffield), G. H. Coe (Albury), W. H. Harris (St. David's), N. R. Ingleby (London), H. C. Lake (Plymouth), P. Le Sueur (Newfoundland), O. H. Mead (Ealing), J. Ormesher (Ormskirk), J. Pullein (Lincoln), E. Turner (Beckenham), and G. C. Young (London).

The Associate diplomas were distributed, on the 14th ult., by Mr. James Higgs. The following is a list of the successful candidates: W. P. Aspinall (Reading), J. H. Baxter (Glasgow), J. Birch (Aston), Miss E. B. Blight (Falmouth), A. Brinckler (Ramsgate), J. Charlesworth (London), M. B. Chenhell (Hexham), H. C. Colles (London), S. L. Coveney (Dover), H. Crackel (Rotherham), T. J. Crawford (Eltham), W. Crawford (Ayton), T. J. Dennis (Neath), F. Diggle (Rochdale), G. Dyson (Halifax), D. J. Evans (Llanelly), W. H. Gabriel (Tredegar), H. W. Gates (Brighton), D. H. Gaunt (Bramley), A. T. Goodwin (Maidstone), W. Greatorex (Southwell), Miss M. C. Hall (Bath), J. W. Hartley (Heywood), T. Harvey (London), Miss E. M. Hobson (Tring), C. E. J. Hornsby (Tiverton), J. PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Mr. Leonard Borwick gave the first of three pianoforte recitals at St. James's Hall, on the 16th ult., when he availed himself of the presence in London of Herr Mühlfeld to include in the programme Brahms's Sonatas in F minor and E flat (Op. 120, Nos. 1 and 2). These works, since their first performance in England at Miss Fanny Davies's annual concert on June 24, 1895, have not been heard so often as their attractive qualities would have led one to suppose they would be, and their introduction on this occasion was very welcome, especially as they were interpreted with rare finish and perfect sympathy with their character. Mr. Borwick's solos were of minor importance, but they included an effective arrangement by himself of an Andante and five variations written by Mozart in 1786 for a toy clock or musical box.

At his second recital, on the 23rd ult., his programme also contained another arrangement by himself of a Fantasia in F minor, composed by Mozart in 1791 for a musical box, Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 81), and two of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte." It is scarcely necessary to add that Mr. Borwick's playing on both occasions was distinguished by exquisite finish.

Miss Madeline Payne, whose progress at the Guildhall School of Music has been watched with interest for some time past, gave her first pianoforte recital on the 19th ult., at the Salle Erard. Miss Payne, however, should have chosen a larger room, for although she is only seventeen, her touch and style are so powerful and brilliant that due appreciation of her readings of Chopin's Ballade in A flat (Op. 47) and Brahms's "Variations and Fugue on a theme by Handel" was impossible, as they resolved themselves into an aural assault of an aggressive nature. Miss Payne, however, showed much sympathy in Grieg's Sonata in G minor (Op. 13), in which she was assisted by M. Johannes Wolff, and rendered an Allemande and Gavotte by D'Albert with great delicacy.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie on Liszt.

The first of a series of three lectures on the life and work of Liszt, Tschaïkowsky, and Brahms, to be delivered by Sir Alexander Mackenzie at the Royal Institution, was given on the 21st ult., when the lecturer was assisted in the performance of excerpts from the first-named composer's works by Miss Margarita Elzy at the pianoforte, Mr. Maxwell who sang, and a female vocal quartet from the Royal Academy of Music, the last-named singing with delightful unanimity and finish.

The lecturer in his paper dwelt more upon the life of the great pianist than upon his influence on the development of music as an art. In regard to his visits to England, Sir Alexander said that Liszt made his first appearance in this country at Manchester, where he was announced as the great pianist who at the age of twelve years had already achieved a European reputation. But even at that youthful period he had proved himself something more than a pianoforte virtuoso—compositions, especially songs by German and French poets, having come from his pen in great profusion. During this engagement at Manchester all Liszt's boyish compositions were lost in a fire. The all-eventful Weimar period and his last and memorable visit to England in 1886 were duly commented upon.

In regard to Liszt's compositions, the lecturer said that the most striking were the German and Hungarian works—the former inspired by the poetry of Goethe and Schiller, and the latter by gipsy-like compositions of the Hungarians. The most characteristic of the works of German origin were the "Faust" Symphony and the "Mephisto Walzer," and of the Hungarian music the weird and fantastic rhapsodies, which might be said to have created Hungarian musical art.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE AND SIR HUBERT PARRY ON THE BAGPIPES AND NATIONAL MUSIC.

The New Year's gathering of the Sette of Odd Volumes—holden at Limmer's Hotel on the 3rd ult.—was, in view of the paper ("Nationality in Music"), made a musical function throughout. The summons to the dinner was in rhyme, with musical notes occasionally substituted for words, and the dishes on the menu were described by musical titles. The minutes of the last meeting were sung (with the minutest care) by the secretary, Brother H. C. Marillier, to the air of "The Leather Bottel." At the foot of the menu there appeared the following note—or, to be more accurate—notes, thereby giving an impression that the whole function would end in smoke:—

After dinner, the President of the Sette (Sir Ernest Clarke) called upon Brother Lidgey, the Gleeman of the Sette, to play his March of the Odd Volumes, and afterwards upon Brother William Nicholl, the Minstrel, to sing "The Lay of the Odd Volumes," which was accompanied by the composer, Brother Bevan.

Subsequently Brother Lidgey read an interesting paper on the subject of "Nationality in Music." He said that probably at no time had this subject been of such interest and importance as the present. Music was essentially a progressive art, and, although national music was of great antiquity, nationality in music as an art might, broadly speaking, be said to have only made its influence felt after Bach had shown in his immortal works the power of music to express emotion. The natural tendency of animate nature was to attempt to express emotion by sound, but there were many causes which had an influence on the style of musical architecture erected upon that foundation. Of these the chief were climatic influence, the form of scale in use in various countries, and sense of rhythm. He gave an account of various scales in use amongst Eastern and Western nations, varying from five to twenty-two notes in the octave, and played several examples illustrative of the characteristic effects obtained by the employment of such scales as the Pentatonic and some of the old Ecclesiastical modes. The varied rhythms of national dance tunes were commented upon, and reference made to the rhythmic peculiarities observable in the folk-songs of the Finns and nations of Magyar descent. Musical expression was also influenced by the special instruments affected by nations, such as the bagpipe and the Swiss alp-horn; and by environment, as was seen by the evident inspiration given to much Norwegian music by the grandeur and solitude of the mountains. It was to influences like these that the world was indebted for the striking individuality of such composers as Grieg, Dvorák, and Tschaïkowsky, and the growing development of music as an outlet for emotional expression. Brother Lidgey was assisted in his illustrations, vocal and instrumental, by Brothers W. Nicholl, F. A. W. Docker, and Frederick Keel. A vote of thanks was unanimously accorded for the paper, on the motion of Brother A. T. Hollingsworth, seconded by Brother Bevan, and a discussion, in which the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music and the Director of the Royal College of Music participated, subsequently took place.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie said this was a subject which had lately come into great prominence owing to the fact that so many modern composers had infused their national characteristics into their compositions. He thought with regard to our own country, though something had already been done in that direction, yet even now we hardly realised the treasures which were our own. He claimed to be the first who had attempted to idealise Scottish music and put it "on the orchestra." The Sassenach had a very hazy idea of what Scottish music really was. Undoubtedly the instrument of Scotland was the fiddle, and not the bagpipe. Scottish songs of Lowland origin had no connection whatever with the bagpipe, and many could not be played upon it. The "Cock o' the North" played by Mr. Lidgey was, he should say, a modern tune, and, like many others, was only adapted for the bagpipe after the regiments were furnished with that instrument.

Sir Hubert Parry suggested that the bagpipe came from East Anglia, and were, with native modesty, afterwards appropriated by the Scotch. It was evidently congenial to the Scotch nation, for whatever Sir Alexander might say about the fiddle being the national instrument, it was in Scotland and with Scotch people that we most frequently heard their delectable sound, and it was quite impossible not to regard the pipes as representative of our amiable neighbours up North. Indeed, music was the most subtle representative of innermost human characteristics of all kinds. The more so because people were so completely innocent of the fact. What they liked was in accordance with their natures, and must in the end show what they really are. The historian of the distant future would have to turn to the music of the various times and peoples to make sure of his estimate of their national characters. Even in early periods of artistic development national traits are perceptible. In national music it was a matter of course. But it extended to artistic music as well. In British music of the past, as well, perhaps, as the present to a certain extent, there was manifested a degree of caution and deliberation which prevented the music produced from having the warmth and passion of music of some other nations. The great gift of the nation was in the direction of organisation, which is the formal part of an art. We moved too cautiously and deliberately, seeking to try every step before going on to the next. Every branch of the human race was represented closely by its music, because it was not reason which governed men's actions, but their moods, and it was the moods of men which were represented by music.

Sir F. Lacy Robinson, K.C.B., in proposing the health of the chairman, said that as an East Anglian he absolutely declined to admit the responsibility of that region for the production of the bagpipe. He must leave Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Hubert Parry to settle between themselves as to whether the instrument was Scotch or Welsh.

MR. J. S. SHEDLOCK ON CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS AND POLONAISES.

At a meeting of the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, at 9, Conduit Street, on the 19th ult., Mr. J. S. Shedlock gave a thoughtful and instructive lecture-recital on the Mazurkas and Polonaises of Chopin. The lecturer began by pointing out the characteristic intervals suggestive of an Eastern origin which formed so distinctive a feature in Polish folk-songs, and showed how these had been used by Chopin, who, however, had reproduced the spirit rather than the letter of his countrymen's music in his glorified forms of their dance measures. Excerpts from the mazurkas were played containing the sharpened fourth and augmented second in the major scale, the progression of several seconds followed by a leap of a third, the use of the Church modes, the employment of triplets, which formed a feature of the old mazurkas, and the drone bass. The characteristic accentuation on the second or third beat was also pointed out, and Chopin's reproduction, by downward chromatic passages, of what Sir Hubert Parry in his "Art of Music" terms the "howling element" in Eastern music; the four bars preceding the last seven bars of the Mazurka in C sharp minor (Op. 30, No. 4) being quoted as an example of the last-named peculiarity. The mazurkas might be roughly divided into three categories, merry, humorous, and mournful; but most of them contained passages expressive of all these moods. The one in G sharp minor (Op. 33, No. 1) was perhaps the saddest in tone, and that in D (Op. 33, No. 2) the brightest. The origin of the mazurka was a dance, but that of the polonaise was apparently a pageant, the form being used at court festivities. The distinctive cadences and rhythmic figures of the polonaise were described, and the Polonaise-Mazurka in F sharp minor (Op. 44) was played as a remarkable blending of the two forms. Finally, attention was drawn to the chromatic element in Chopin's music and its influence on Wagner, whose music was declared to be full of the spirit of Chopin.

At the conclusion of the discourse Mr. E. F. Jacques, who occupied the chair, made some suggestive remarks on the restraining influence which Chopin's residence in Paris exercised on his genius. This was pointed out as specially noticeable in Chopin's treatment of the barbaric element, which was always controlled, and accounted for the difference between Chopin's music and that of other Slavonic composers. Mr. Jacques also commented upon the influence which Liszt and Chopin had exercised on each other, and called attention to the remarkable fact that, although Chopin had written no opera or great orchestral work, his music had exercised the widest influence, and this through the restricted medium of comparatively short pianoforte pieces.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

Palestrina.

At the meeting of the Musical Association on the 17th ult., held at the Royal College of Organists, Mr. Henry Davey read a paper on "Giovanni Pierluigi, da Palestrina."

After referring to the English and Flemish composers of music preceding and contemporary with Palestrina, and showing that the polyphonic schools of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries had reached their culminating point in the works of the great Italian church composer, Mr. Davey reviewed at some length the chief events of Palestrina's life, and contradicted many of the statements made by Agazzari and Baini, particularly with regard to the famous "Missa Papæ Marcelli." Mr. Davey favoured Haberl's opinion that Giovanni Pierluigi was born in 1526, or possibly 1525, at Palestrina, from whence he took the name by which he is commonly known, and that he lived for sixty-eight years. The lecturer contradicted the statements in Grove's Dictionary that Palestrina was a poor man, and dismissed as mythical Baini's story of the composer having specially written three masses for the preservation of music in the Roman Catholic Church. Palestrina was shown to have married twice, the second time, only seven months after the death of his first wife, to the widow of a large dealer in furs. Both his spouses, moreover, possessed property of appreciable value, and the emoluments he received from his various offices were also shown to have formed a comfortable income. The masses, including the "Missa Papæ Marcelli," which were submitted by Palestrina to the committee appointed by the Council of Trent to suppress the abuses which had crept into the music of the Church, were declared to have been written years before. Mr. Davey also insists that there was never any intention to dismiss music entirely from the Church services, but only to authorise a style or find a work which should furnish a model to serve as a guide to composers. In conclusion, Palestrina was described not only as the greatest composer of his time, but as worthy of being ranked with Handel, Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven.

In the subsequent discussion Mr. W. H. Cummings, who occupied the chair, said that the great glory of Palestrina was his having eliminated secular associations from Church music. Although in the Sistine Chapel Palestrina's music would be sung unaccompanied, he thought that in other places it was probable that the voice parts were supported by instruments; but with regard to an opinion expressed by Mr. Davey that accidentals should be introduced when they were acceptable to modern ears, Mr. Cummings strongly objected. In this he was supported by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, who referred to the first performance in London of the "Missa Papæ Marcelli" by the Bach Choir in 1881.

Some examples of the florid vocal accompaniments to the Gregorian tones used at Rome in Palestrina's time were admirably sung by Miss Maud Bond.

THE "GOLDEN LEGEND" AND "BLEST PAIR OF SIRENS" IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

The North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society, which for twenty-three years has been foremost in the district in artistic enterprise, having during that time been the means of introducing to local audiences upwards of thirty choral works, gave its first concert of the season at Hanley, on the 12th ult. The works performed were Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens." The excellence of North Staffordshire choral singing is proverbial, and Sir Arthur Sullivan's dramatic and difficult music is as child's play to them. But their best work was the singing of Sir Hubert Parry's masterly setting of Milton's Ode. Nothing more superbly excellent could possibly be wished. The soloists in the "Golden Legend" were Miss Ethel Holmes (Elsie), Miss Alice Lakin (Ursula), Mr. Charles Manners (Prince Henry), Mr. Dan Derry, a member of the Society (The Forester), and Mr. Watkin Mills (Lucifer). Between the two works the orchestra, consisting of players from Birmingham and the Potteries, played Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture. Dr. Swinnerton Heap, who has been connected with the Society since its commencement, conducted with all his well known ability and distinction.

WORCESTERSHIRE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The motto of this young Society is "Wach' auf," and the chorus from "Die Meistersinger" bearing this title opened the second concert of the present season given at the Public Hall, Worcester, on the 7th ult. Goetz's cantata "Nœnia" followed, and the second part of the programme included Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," three part-songs for ladies' voices by Brahms, daintily sung, and a carol, "The holly and the ivy," orchestrated by Mr. Edward Elgar—a most effective performance, both by choir and orchestra. The purely orchestral pieces were Mozart's Overture "Don Giovanni," Dvorák's Slavonic Dances, and Chabrier's Rhapsody "Espana." Throughout the evening the playing of the orchestra was spirited and deserving of high commendation, a result to which Mr. Edward Elgar's masterful conducting contributed in no small degree.

ORATORIO IN TORONTO.

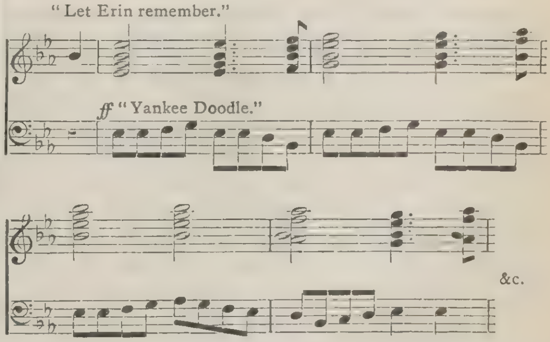
Oratorio seems to have been dormant in Toronto for some time past, but a recent event has demonstrated that it is by no means defunct; on the contrary, there is undoubted evidence to prove that so attractive a form of art is very much alive in that flourishing Canadian city. On December 15 last no less than 3,740 people were present in Massey Hall to listen to the strains of Handel's "Messiah"; moreover, hundreds more, eager to hear the oratorio, could not obtain an entrance into the building. The chorus consisted of 323 voices and the orchestra of sixty-one "pieces," to adopt the designation of a Toronto musical critic. The soloists were Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli (soprano), Miss Carrie Lash (contralto), Mr. J. M. Sherlock (tenor), Mr. W. F. Firth and Mr. W. J. R. Carnahan (baritones), and Mr. A. L. E. Davies and Mr. J. D. Richardson (basses)—all of whom discharged their duties in a manner calling for unstinted praise. Mr. Robert Marshall was the leader of the orchestra—its "head-piece," in fact—and Mr. H. C. Collins presided at the organ. The entire performance reflected the greatest credit upon Mr. F. H. Torrington, the conductor, for whom the rendering of Handel's immortal work was a veritable triumph. No man has done more for music in the city of his adoption than Mr. Torrington, who was born at Dudley, in the Black Country, and is now principal of the Toronto College of Music. Twenty-five years ago—on January 5 and 6, 1874, an event, by the way, duly recorded in The Musical Times—"Father" Torrington, as he is now called, conducted two performances of "The Messiah" in Toronto with distinct success. Advantage was therefore taken of the performance of December last to present him with a "solid silver soup set" in commemoration of his silver jubilee. This tangible recognition of his labours in the cause of music was the gift of the choir. Accompanying the gift was an address expressing the esteem in which Mr. Torrington is held by those who so efficiently sing under his baton. At the same time, Miss Symons, who has long acted as accompanist of the Philharmonic Society and of the Festival chorus, was presented with a handsome bracelet. In concluding a notice of "The Messiah" performance, the Globe (Toronto) observes: "Mr. Torrington announces Gounod's 'Redemption' for Good Friday. Last night's triumph disposes of the sneers of the commercialists who fatten off the city, and do nothing for it in an artistic sense."

REVIEWS.

Memoir of Sir Robert P. Stewart. By Olinthus J. Vignoles. [Simpkin, Marshall and Co., Limited.]

The late Sir Robert Stewart was a musician comparatively little known beyond the borders of his native Erin, yet his biographer records that he "was the most remarkable all-round musician Ireland has hitherto produced, although Balfe takes a higher place as a dramatic composer." Stewart's life was not a particularly eventful one. Born in 1825, he became a chorister of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, and, at the age of nineteen, organist, an appointment he retained till his death in 1894. Self-taught, the possessor of a remarkable gift for extemporizing and an extraordinary memory for music, Stewart lived the life of a busy teacher in the Irish capital. He received the accumulated degrees of Bachelor and Doctor in Music, Trinity College, Dublin, in 1851, and was appointed Professor of Music in the University of Dublin ten years later; he received his knighthood at the hands of the Lord Lieutenant in 1872. As a composer he is chiefly known by his organ works. The greater part of this "life" consists of letters written by Stewart, which, after all, furnish excellent biographical material if the letters are good and characteristic of the writer, as they are in this case. Mr. Vignoles has done his work con amore and produced a book of much interest, though here and there are some peculiarities. We never before heard that Sir Charles Hallé played on the organ in the Exhibition of 1862. He performed—"not very well," we are told—"Mendelssohn's First Sonata on Willis's new organ. The D flat soon began to cipher, which ended the show." An organ "recitation" (pp. 45 and 46) is a new term. One of the most curious things in this entertaining book (which has six illustrations but no index) is an amusing specimen of Stewart's ingenuity, taken from an orchestral fantasia on Irish airs which he wrote for Gilmore's band for performance in America. Here is the reference to the jeu d'esprit contained in a letter from Stewart to Wellington Guernsey, dated "Trinity College, Dublin, 24 April, 1872":—

"I sent you yesterday the two scores of our work. After they had gone to you, I got a telegram from Mr. Gilmore, which expressed high approval of my device of 'contrapuntifically,' so combining the two airs—'Let Erin' and 'Yankee Doodle.' You will see they go right well together when you get the score."



Makers of Music. By R. Farquharson Sharp.
Analysis of Mendelssohn's Organ Works. By Joseph W. G. Hathaway.
[William Reeves.]

The former of these two books consists of "biographical sketches of the great composers," Dr. Arne being included amongst the nineteen "makers of music" therein biographised. The sketches, though necessarily short, epitomise the life-work of those musicians whose names have become household words. A useful "chronological summary" of compositions is appended to each chapter, and a "general chronological summary" is given at the end of the volume. There are a few inaccuracies in the book which should be corrected in a future edition. The title of Purcell's well-known funeral anthem is given as "Thou knowest, Lord, our hearts." Haydn's two visits to England (in 1791 and 1795) were each of eighteen months' duration, a fact which hardly agrees with "the five years spent by Haydn in London." Beethoven's famous Septet is not "for strings" only, nor was Moscheles ever Secretary of the Philharmonic Society. Mendelssohn was married in the year 1837, not in 1836, and his "Elijah" was performed in London four times, not three only, during the spring of 1847. A novel and welcome feature of the book is comprised in the fac-similes of musical notation of the "makers of music," most of the originals being in the British Museum, in the library of which the author of this gift-book is one of the officers.

Mr. Hathaway has produced a somewhat severely analytical book on Mendelssohn's organ works. We venture to think, however, that its interest would not have been lessened had he said something about the history of these oft-played compositions for the King of Instruments. In regard to the chorales used by Mendelssohn in the sonatas, the author says (p. 79): "Two are well known and of considerable antiquity, and two are most probably written by Mendelssohn himself." As a matter of fact, three out of the four chorales can be traced; that in the fifth sonata may be original, though it is still uncertain. The chorale in Sonata No. 1 is "Was mein Gott will." Although Mendelssohn supplies the title in his manuscript, it has never found its way into the printed copies. Mr. Hathaway makes a curious statement in regard to a passage in Sonata 1, third movement, bars 22 and 23. He says: "It would scarcely be advisable to introduce this progression into an examination paper, for fault might be found with the position of the third chord." Why? we most respectfully ask. Is not this riding the pedagogic hobby-horse a little too far along the dreary and overmuch-traversed examination-road? Three fac-similes are given in the book—that of the D minor Prelude is from Mendelssohn's autograph in the British Museum, which, however, differs slightly from the published version. By the way, the three Preludes and Fugues (Op. 37) were dedicated by Mendelssohn to Thomas Attwood, "with reverence and gratitude," as the original German edition records. Unfortunately this tribute of respect from the young German musician to the old English organist has not hitherto been printed on the title-pages of the English editions; but it has now been added to that issued by Messrs. Novello, who were the original publishers of the work, now more than sixty years ago.

Novello's School Music. Puss-in-Boots. A humorous Operetta for Boys. Written by Louis B. Tisdale. Music composed by G. F. Huntley.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The enterprising manœuvres of "Puss-in-Boots" have been treated in this operetta in a most attractive style. The libretto is written in a pointed and humorous fashion, and the music is melodious and rhythmic. The action begins with the speculations of the Miller's men as to who will inherit the ownership of the mill. Rupert being the eldest son is expected to be the new master, but it is soon discovered that the late Miller has only left him his cat. This animal, however, soon proves its worth. It induces its master to bathe while the King is passing, and by informing his majesty that the Marquis of Carabas, while in the water, has had his clothes stolen, procures from the King a gorgeous suit for Rupert. Puss, who surely must have been a company promoter in embryo, next engages himself as Private Secretary to an Ogre, for whom the King, not unreasonably, seems to have an aversion. The Ogre being vain of his power to change himself into any animal he chooses, is persuaded by Puss to assume the form of a mouse, after which the end of the Ogre is speedy. Having thus obtained possession of the Ogre's castle, Puss announces Rupert as the successor. Rupert, however, seems to have some qualms of conscience as to the validity of his claim, and he tells the King the whole story. This seems rather mean. But Puss feigns penitence, and the King confirms Rupert's title of Marquis of Carabas. Where the moral comes in is not quite clear, unless it be to never despise a legacy or to never tell the truth too soon. There are eleven principal characters, seven of whom are provided with songs as well as speaking parts. The songs make little demand upon vocal ability, and are of a kind that are easily committed to memory. There are three duets—that between the Private Secretary and Puss-in-Boots being genuinely humorous, and being followed by a grotesque dance which might be made very diverting. The first chorus is in unison, but the others are written in two parts, which, although extremely simple, contain some effective imitative passages. The operetta is preceded by a bright instrumental introduction, and includes a march in the action of the piece and a graceful interlude, the latter to be played between the two scenes in which the story is unfolded. The scenes required are the exterior of the old mill and the interior of the Ogre's castle, but these, of course, might be dispensed with. The dresses will give little trouble, and full instructions for these, as well as hints concerning the kind of boys most suitable to personate the respective chief characters, are given in the preface to the work.

Catalogue de la Bibliothèque du Conservatoire Royal de Musique de Bruxelles. Dressé par ordre de Matières, Chronologique et Critique. Par Alfred Wotquenne. Vol. I.
[Brussels: J. J. Coosemans.]

M. Wotquenne, the librarian of the Brussels Conservatoire, is discharging a duty to the books committed to his care similar to that so ably rendered by M. Victor Mahillon to the splendid collection of instruments preserved in the Museum of that Institution. This well printed and admirably arranged book of upwards of 500 pages is the first instalment of a catalogue which will prove to be a very useful and valuable work of reference. The present section, giving 2,507 entries, consists entirely of vocal music, printed and in manuscript, with and without accompaniment. The remaining volumes are to include the rest of the vocal music, the instrumental music, and the books on musical literature. In regard to the latter there will be no less than eight main sections, divided into twenty-four sub-sections. The learned compiler has discharged his task with conspicuous ability. He has not been content to give the mere title of a work, but he has, in addition, supplied copious notes giving references to the first performances, descriptions, &c., of the works catalogued; thus information is furnished of a most valuable and not easily-discovered kind. The book is enriched with fourteen plates of fac-similes of special interest to musical bibliographers. Two entries of more or less interest to English people may be referred to: one (1058), a proof copy of Costa's "Naaman," from Rossini's library; the other, the autograph manuscript, in three volumes, of Vincent Wallace's opera "Lurline," which, though dated "1847," was not performed till 1860. We shall look forward to the completion of this interesting catalogue. When will a similar service be rendered to the fine library of our Royal College of Music?

The Orpheus. New Series. Nos. 308-312.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This series continues to add to the rich store of English glees and part-songs for male voices, and recent additions are of no less merit than those that have gone before. The words of No. 308 are derived from an Elizabethan source and have been set for alto, first and second tenors, and a bass, by Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd. The nature of the text is indicated by the first line, which runs, "Beauty was lying by a Spring," which causes the poet to moralize and indulge many times in "Hey, nonny, nonny." The composer has caught the spirit of the period to which the words refer and the number is decidedly bright and pleasing. No. 309, entitled "In Absence," has words by Phœbe Cary and music by Dudley Buck. In this the stars and skies and a few other things are asked to watch over the sleep of a beloved one, and the request is made in most agreeable fashion, especially by the bass voice, who sings a melody which mingles pleasantly with the harmonies given forth by the other voices. A loftier strain is heard in No. 310, which is Sir Henry Bishop's setting of some lines from Young's "Night thoughts" beginning "Majestic night." The music will be found an excellent example of this composer's style, and may be warmly recommended to male-voice choirs. The unfortunate poet Kirke White provides the text for

Also published in Novello's Tonic Sol-fa Series, No. 1081, price 1½*d.*

No. 311, "Music, all powerful," set by T. F. Walmisley to music of solid and legitimate style. It will be found easy and pleasant to sing, and is an excellent specimen of the English glee. No. 312 has Longfellow's poem "Stay at home, my heart," for its text and music by John B. Lott. The tranquil joys of domestic bliss are echoed in a pleasant fashion in the music, and the opportunity for contrast by the poet's reference to "the winds of the wilderness of doubt" has been deftly seized by the composer.

Lenten Music. Lead, kindly Light. Arranged as an Anthem for soprano solo and chorus, by John E. West, from the song composed by D. Pughe-Evans.

Lead, kindly Light. The music composed by C. H. Purday.

Paraphrase of the Anima Christi. By William H. Stocks.
Benedicite, omnia Opera. By Alfred J. Eyre.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. West has converted Mr. Pughe-Evans's setting for solo voice of Cardinal Newman's favourite hymn into an effective anthem. In the opening the voices answer each other in an interesting manner, which is increased by some short passages for soprano solo. The last verse is set in solid four-part harmony, and the concluding bars, which differ from those of the song, if sung as directed, would be very impressive.

Mr. Purday's music is in hymn tune form and of simple character, and is eminently fitted for congregational use. The setting forms No. 366 of Novello's Parish Choir Book.

"The Paraphrase of the Anima Christi" (Prayer of St. Ignatius) is No. 368 of Novello's Parish Choir Book, and may be said to be based upon two plain-song inflections, and their employment imparts to the music a style in perfect accord with the character of the hymn. The music is written in four vocal parts of simple and direct nature, and is admirably adapted for church use during Lent.

Mr. Eyre has provided a set of three double chants, with a quadruple chant for the Gloria, for the Benedicite, which are well suited to this Canticle. The first half of each of the double chants being in unison for the voices will enable the organist to vary the harmonies of his accompaniments if he feels so disposed. The setting comprises No. 371 of Novello's Parish Choir Book.

Musical Memory and its Cultivation. By Frederick G. Shinn. [Charles Vincent.]

The sub-title of this interesting and thoughtfully-written book is "An investigation into the forms of memory employed in pianoforte playing, and a theory as to the relative extent of the employment of such forms." In the course of his seventy pages Dr. Shinn very ably treats of the problems connected with the acquirement of memorizing music. He not merely theorizes on a subject about which no literature seems to exist, but by copious musical examples gives practical proof of the truth that is in him. It would be quite impossible, in the limited space at our disposal, to discuss the pros and cons of so important a feature of musical education as the committing of music to memory. The subject is here set forth fully and clearly, and we unhesitatingly commend this excellent treatise. Not the least attractive section is the final chapter, entitled "The Memories of Musicians," wherein is recorded several remarkable—indeed, seemingly impossible—feats of memory of Mozart, Mendelssohn, Hans von Bülow, Richter, Ouseley, and others, concluding with a characteristic tour de force recorded of Sir Walter Parratt, to whom the book is dedicated.

Novello's Parish Choir Book. Nos. 370-373.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

It is difficult to keep pace with this ever-growing series. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's fine hymn tune "Esther," composed for the hymn "Forward be our watchword," forms No. 370. The tune may be allied to any hymn written in 6 5, twelve lines, is specially suitable to "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "On our way rejoicing," and "Brightly gleams our Banner," and, being printed on a card, will be found convenient for use in processionals. Those Parish Choirs which have not arrived at the capability of singing in parts may be warmly recommended No. 372, which consists of a melodious setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E flat, by F. Reginald Statham. The unison vocal part is effectively supported by the organ accompaniment, and variety and contrast are obtained by some of the verses being given to the tenors and basses and others to the sopranos; but this arrangement is not obligatory, as the highest note is E flat on the fourth space of the treble clef. No. 373, a setting in A of the Benedictus, by Sir George C. Martin, calls for a well-trained and fairly numerous choir to do it justice. It opens in a strikingly dignified manner, and the musical interest increases as the work is proceeded with. Some of the effects are novel; as the contrast obtained by the soprano and basses singing in the octave, followed by the altos and tenors in unison. A dramatic point is made at the words "And thou, Child," which are delivered fortissimo in unison by the full choir, and a beautiful effect is secured by a change from common to triple time at the words "To give knowledge." The organ accompaniment is no less excellent, and in its entirety the setting is a masterlike example of the genius and musicianship of the organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Symphonies and their meaning. By Philip H. Goepp.
[J. B. Lippincott Company.]

Our American kinsfolk cannot be accused of neglecting the literary side of music, if we may judge from the various books that are issued from time to time in "Jonathan's continent," to use Bülow's designation. The author of this thoughtful book claims it to be "really the reverse of the traditional. Little is told of the lives of the masters. . . . . Concrete events have, in themselves, no place. And yet, it is believed, instead of a loss, there is in this very omission a great gain of personal interest, of insight into the essence of a master's individual quality, of his poetic character." Thus, the reader of these four hundred pages will miss the characteristic charm that invests the writings of Sir George Grove, as exampled in his "Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies," with so much that is interesting of a non-technical character. As to the signification of the word "meaning" in the title, Mr. Goepp says it has "a negative intent, quite as strong as the positive. The book is meant to restrain the wrong interpretation, as to urge the right." This is excellent, and the author's efforts to put listeners of symphonic music on the right road toward the goal of its full intellectual enjoyment deserve every encouragement and appreciation. It may be interesting to give a list of the symphonies that are herein analysed: Haydn, D and E flat; Mozart, G minor and the "Jupiter"; Beethoven, "Eroica," Nos. 5 and 7; Schubert, B minor and C major; Schumann, C major and "Rhenish"; Mendelssohn, "Italian"; and Brahms, No. 2.

The Order for the Burial of the Dead, as set to music by Merbecke, harmonised by Sir John Stainer, together with a selection of suitable hymns.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The clergy and organists of churches will find this neatly got up little book very useful, especially as music is becoming more and more a feature in the solemn service known as the Order for the Burial of the Dead. The name of the Oxford professor of music is a sufficient guarantee that the harmonies to Merbecke's melody are in keeping with its characteristic old-time melody. In addition to the complete form of the service, there are alternative settings of Psalms xxxix. and xc. to Anglican (composed by T. Purcell and Rev. W. Felton) and Gregorian chants, as well as the editor's seven-fold Amen. The supplement includes nine favourite hymns with appropriate tunes, thus giving to this service-book a completeness which is obvious.

Duo for Violin and Viola. With pianoforte accompaniment. Dedicated to Professor Hermann Ritter. Op. 105. Ph. Scharwenka. [Breitkopf and Härtel].

A piece in two connected movements, Andante Sostenuto and Allegretto con spirito. The composition is undoubtedly the work of a clever musician, admirable workmanship is shown throughout, but it is uninteresting. The themes are poor. How gladly one would welcome pieces in which the viola receives generous treatment at the hands of the composer, but, alas! in this case the composition will be interesting only to the players.

Original Melodies for the Violin. With pianoforte accompaniment. By H. S. Irons.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Twelve numbers of these melodies are announced to appear. No. 1 of the set is before us. It will appeal to players of moderate ability who have the happy knack of making their violin sing. The melody is unpretentious, sweet, and pure, and quite free from difficulty. It will prove a useful solo to many.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

Before giving a résumé of the principal musical events at the close of last year and during the month just ended, I have to make a slight correction in reference to the St. James's Choral Society's concert recorded in my last notes. It should be stated that the concert was given under the conductorship of Mr. Richard Richards, and that Mr. B. Nock presided at the organ.

An important concert was given in the Town Hall, on December 17, by the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducting. The work presented was the first concert performance in this country of Boïto's opera "Mephistopheles." It was an ambitious effort on the part of an amateur society to have ventured upon a representation of so difficult a work, but the results warranted such a proceeding, although the absence of scenic effects was naturally a drawback. The chorus sang admirably, and the augmented orchestra thoroughly entered into the spirit of the work. The principals, who acquitted themselves in a praiseworthy manner, were Madame Gwen Cosslett, Miss Gertrude Booth, Mr. Edward Arthur, Mr. Thomas Hampson, and Mr. John Ridding.

Mr. A. R. Gaul's twenty-first invitation concert in connection with the Midland Institute Ladies' Singing Class, assisted by a number of gentlemen, was given in the large Lecture Theatre of that Institution on December 19. Mr. Gaul was unfortunately unable to discharge the duties of conductor on account of illness, Dr. Rowland Winn officiating in his place. The first part of the programme consisted of Cowen's "The Rose Maiden." The solos in the cantata were assigned to Miss Aimée Wathen, Madame Miriam Daniel, Mr. J. T. Birch, and Mr. T. Horrex. The accompaniments were given by a small orchestra, with Mr. George Halliley at the pianoforte.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society gave in the Town Hall, on Boxing night, its forty-third annual Christmas performance of Handel's "Messiah," before a packed and deeply interested assembly. Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, who had so far recovered from his recent illness that he was able to occupy his customary place at the conductor's desk, received quite an ovation from the audience and performers as he made his appearance on the orchestra. The principals were Miss L. Coomber, Miss L. Hovey, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Watkin Mills, vocalists; Mr. C. W. Perkins, organ; and Mr. John Solomon, solo trumpet. The performance, as a whole, was one of the finest given by this association for many years, the singing of the chorus being quite remarkable for tone and attack.

Mr. J. H. Humphries' choir chose the last night in December for its annual concert. The choir gave some pleasing part-songs, choruses, and madrigals under Mr. Humphries' conductorship. The following members of the choir were heard to advantage in a number of songs: Miss Clarice Booth, Miss Lilian Millward, Mr. W. J. Ottey, and Mr. C. Shum. Mr. John Dunn delighted the audience by his brilliant performances on the violin.

A musical matinée was given in the Edgbaston Assembly Rooms on the 14th ult., by Mrs. Montague Fordham, vocalist, and Madame Marie Fromm (pupil of Madame Schumann), pianist. The programme was an artistic one and served to introduce some novelties, the principal of which was a cycle of five songs entitled "Rosenlieder," by Count Philipp zu Eulenburg, the present German Ambassador at the Court of Vienna, and a new song, "A song of singing," by Mr. H. Emery, accompanied by the composer. The most interesting feature of the concert was the refined and artistic violoncello playing of Mr. Carl Fuchs.

At a meeting of the members of the Walsall Philharmonic Union, held on the 16th ult., Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, the conductor of that Society, was presented with a handsome baton as a token of their appreciation of his past services.

Mr. George Halford submitted an attractive and interesting programme at his fifth orchestral concert, given in the Town Hall on the 17th ult., when Beethoven's Fourth Symphony received a masterly interpretation. The novelties consisted of Tschaïkowsky's overture, "Der Woiwode," Moszkowski's ballet music, "Laurin," and Glazounow's picturesque overture, "Carnaval." Miss Louise Phillips was the vocalist.

A recital of sonatas for pianoforte and violin was given in the Masonic Hall, on the 19th ult., by Dr. Rowland Winn and Mr. William Henley, when the following were performed: Bach in E; Mozart in B flat; Beethoven, "The Kreutzer"; Brahms in D minor; and Saint-Saëns, also in D minor.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

Two Christmas concerts have to be recorded. At the Grammar School a very good performance was given of Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" by the school choir, aided by old boys and some friends. The soloists were R. T. Stephens, S. M. Turner, W. G. Heal, H. P. Willis, B. C. Gardner, Mr. J. Boddy, and Mr. W. Follett. Mr. C. W. Stear was the pianist, Mr. Fulford the organist, and Mr. Holland-Smith conducted. At the breaking up concert at Clifton College the school choir sang well in several glees and part-songs, under the guidance of Mr. A. H. Peppin, and individual students and the orchestra contributed instrumental pieces.

On St. Stephen's Day members of the Bristol Choral Society joined the choir of the Church of St. Stephen (city) in the interpretation of St. Stephen's music from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul." The choral numbers from the oratorio were well sung by the combined forces, and the solos were praiseworthily interpreted by Mrs. Harrison, Mr. Brierly, Mr. Price, and Mr. J. Thomas. With the organ, at which Mr. P. R. Barclay presided, was united a small orchestra. The Rev. E. Houghton, the rector, conducted.

St. Bartholomew's Choral Society gave a performance of Romberg's cantata "The Lay of the Bell," on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. A. Brookes. The principals were Miss Marion Harris, Mr. W. Fancourt, Mr. J. W. Davey, and Mr. J. York.

The famous Madrigal Society gave its annual concert on the 12th ult. The excellent programme embraced madrigals and part-songs of all periods and various countries, from the sixteenth century to the present day. Among the compositions was Monteverde's "Thine am I, dearest," the solo portions of which were clearly sung by two boys from the Temple choir, who were trained by Dr. Walford Davies. All the pieces in the scheme were rendered almost to perfection under the skilful guidance of Mr. D. W. Rootham, and were heartily enjoyed by the audience that filled the Victoria Rooms.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

The Dublin Glee and Madrigal Union gave a most attractive concert at the Antient Concert Rooms on the 12th ult. The excellent selection of glees, &c., rendered by the members of the Union (Messrs. J. R. Morgan, Melfort d'Alton, T. F. Marchant, and T. H. Watson), was interspersed with solos, vocal and instrumental, by Madame Schelderup (vocalist and pianist); Herr Adolph Wilhelmj, the new professor of violin at the Royal Irish Academy of Music; and Mr. Melfort d'Alton, tenor.

Farmer's "Christ and His Soldiers" was repeated on the 18th ult., at the United Presbyterian Church, Lower Abbey Street, with organ and orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Mr. Wm. McCausland Sherwood and Mr. A. C. Aykroyd, organist.

Two concerts were given by Mr. N. Vert in the large hall of the Rotunda, on the 16th and 21st ult. The names of Madame Norcrosse, Madame Alice Gomez, the Meister Glee Singers, Mons. Hollman (violoncello), Miss Edith Martin (harp), and Madame Frickenhaus (pianoforte) were sufficient guarantee of the merit of the performances.

Mr. Robert Cunningham's new operatic enterprise, under the title of "The National Grand Opera Company," inaugurated its work by a season at the Gaiety Theatre, commencing on the 9th ult.

Mr. Arthur McConnell's annual concert took place on the 20th ult., at the Antient Concert Rooms. The Ben Edar Glee Choir and the Bohemian Quartet rendered their selections with good effect, and solos were contributed by Miss Agnes Treacy, Misses Frances and Ruby McConnell, Mr. Dan Jones, Mr. Ivor Foster, and Miss Victoria Delaney (violinist). The conductors were Mr. McConnell, Mr. C. Wilson, and Dr. Joseph Smith.

The Dublin Glee Singers (first prize-winners at the Belfast "Feis Ceoil"), under the direction of Mr. Joseph Seymour, announced their first concert for the 30th ult., too late for detailed notice in the present issue.

The prizes for composers in connection with the "Feis Ceoil," 1899, have been awarded as follows: Irish Cantata, Rev. W. H. Collisson (Penzance); Concert Overture, F. McClintock (London); String Quartet and Oberthur Memorial Prize for Harp Concerto, M. Esposito (Dublin); Song and Part-song, Harold White (Dublin); Anthem, violin solo, and arrangement of an Irish air as Part-song, C. Hardebeck (Belfast); pianoforte solo, Leopold Dix (Dublin); Irish Song and Song with Irish words, Mrs. Alicia A. Needham (London); Hymn tune, Rev. E. Whelan (Bray).

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

The only event which calls for detailed notice is the performance (December 28) of Berlioz's "Faust" by the Edinburgh Choral Union, in conjunction with the Scottish Orchestra, under Messrs. Paterson's scheme of orchestral concerts. The first appearance of a chorus in the McEwan Hall was an experiment to which the public looked forward with much interest. Many circumstances interfered with the complete success of the performance, in spite of a great deal of praiseworthy work. In the first place, the chorus was forced into a most ineffective disposition by the exigencies of the platform. In some parts of the hall only the altos could be heard, in others the basses were quite inaudible; but everyone could hear that the tenors were not rising to the pitch expected of them in the first chorus. Whether it was the fault of the acoustics or of the uncomfortable position of the choir, or of other matters, the fact remains to be chronicled that the Choral Union did not approach the highest level of performance. Mr. Collinson, who conducted as usual, showed a marked improvement in his grasp of the choral and orchestral forces at his command, and well deserved his enthusiastic reception. The orchestra gave a fine interpretation of the complicated score, falling short only in the numbers for orchestra alone. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, whose sweet and sympathetic voice was heard to advantage in the lovely solos, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Daniel Price.

At the orchestral concert, on the 9th ult., Lady Hallé delighted her admirers with a truly noble and moving interpretation of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. The symphony was Brahms's in C minor.

On the 11th ult. Mr. Denhof gave the second of his chamber concerts, with the assistance of Mr. Elkan Kosman and Dr. Pudor. Trios by Gernsheim (Op. 28), Cesar Franck (Op. 1, No. 1), for the first time here, and Chopin (Op. 8) were well played and equally well received. Miss Annie Tweedie took Miss Clara Butt's place on very short notice, and her singing of songs by Lassen, Brahms, and others was much appreciated by a good audience.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

The customary overflowing audience was drawn to St. Andrew's Hall, on the morning of the 2nd ult., when the Glasgow Choral Union gave its annual performance of "The Messiah." The choristers gave on the whole a singularly good account of themselves, the band (that of the Scottish Orchestra Company) was unusually fine, and the soloists, Miss Mabel Berrey, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Braxton Smith, and Mr. Andrew Black, were in each case fully equal to their duties. Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted with his well known care and ability.

At the seventh classical concert, on the 5th ult., Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's new Orchestral Ballade in A minor (Op. 33) attracted special attention. Much has been heard concerning its merits, and if the Glasgow verdict did not endorse with enthusiasm that of last September's Gloucester audience, there can be no two opinions as to Mr. Taylor's grasp of the musical art in its most attractive phases. Dvorák's "New World" Symphony also formed part of the programme. Both the ballad and the symphony were splendidly rendered by the band, under the baton of Mr. Bruch, whose popularity as a conductor is steadily rising. Mr. Hugo Heinz, a German baritone, who made his first appearance here, achieved a marked success, Miss Mabel Berrey sang with much acceptance at the popular concert on the 7th ult., and at the eighth classical concert Lady Hallé returned once more to the scene of many memorable triumphs. Needless to say, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto was played in a manner that fully revealed its surpassing beauties. Brahms's First Symphony was a welcome feature in the programme. The orchestra was at its best, Mr. Bruch showed full artistic sympathy with his text, and this is equivalent to saying that the work, a favourite in Glasgow, had a superb performance. Miss Jenny Taggart, who is singing this season with an increased knowledge of her art, appeared at the "Pop" on the 14th ult., when the programme included Beethoven's Second Symphony and a couple of Brahms's Hungarian Dances. At the ninth concert of the classical series two novelties found places in the programmes: Mr. Bruch's Prelude to his own opera "Hirlanda," a simple and melodious bit of writing, and Mr. Walter Petzet's symphonic poem "Appeal to happiness," which failed to make any impression whatever. Mr. Busoni, who made his début in Glasgow, essayed Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto, No. 2, in A major, and attained in many respects a genuine success, though with all the new-comer's cleverness he could not invest the work with any degree of interest. The feature of the evening was, undoubtedly, the very fine performance accorded Schubert's great Symphony, No. 10, in C major, a veritable triumph, indeed, for both the orchestra and its conductor.

The third of the series of students' concerts in connection with the Glasgow Athenæum School of Music took place on the 14th ult., when Cowen's cantata "The Fairies' Spring" was repeated, owing to its marked success at a recent local concert. Mr. Allan MacBeth, the esteemed principal of the school, conducted, and the programme devised for the occasion was again the subject of favourable comment.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

The second half-session of the Philharmonic Society opened on the 10th ult. The Symphony was Beethoven's No. 2, in D, and the Overtures Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" and Auber's "Zanetta," which familiar works, it is almost needless to say, were as toys in the hands of this orchestra. In strong contrast stood out the rendering of Brahms's colossal Concerto in D minor, the pianoforte part of which was magnificently played by Mr. Busoni. The chorus only justified its appearance by singing a couple of part-songs, and this was also the case on the 24th ult., when the programme was again mainly instrumental, with Liszt's "Tasso" Suite in the place of honour. A selection from Massenet's ballet music to "Le Cid," Tschaïkowsky's "Fest" March, and Mozart's "Magic Flute" Overture, together with Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in E minor, were also played, Lady Hallé being allotted the solo part in the last-named composition. Mr. Cowen conducted.

On the 21st ult. the always welcome Schiever Quartet gave the second concert of the present season, when the regular members of the organisation were joined by Miss Maggie Bennett, late a Lancashire Technical Scholarship holder at Berlin and formerly a student at the Liverpool College of Music, where the performance took place. In the same hall, on the 26th ult., a number of local Corporation Exhibitioners gave evidence of the good work done by Mr. Courvoisier at the same Institution, where Mr. Welsing is also giving a series of Bach recitals.

The Società Armonica, under Mr. Akeroyd, gave, on the 17th ult., very good rendering of Goetz's Symphony in F (No. 9), and a unique feature of the programme was a Romance, by Mr. C. W. Black, for oboe and cor anglais, played by Mr. F. N. Black and Mr. C. Reynolds. A third "smoker" concert was announced for the 28th ult. under Mr. Rodewald, at the City Hall.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

The Hallé concerts were resumed on the 12th ult. after a break of a fortnight. Apparently the Christmas interval established by Mr. Cowen had quickened the musical appetite of the public, and, combined with the announcement that Lady Hallé would, in consequence of her approaching tour in America, be unable to appear again this season, sufficed to attract an immense audience, in spite of the extreme violence of the weather. The programme included Beethoven's Second Symphony (faultlessly rendered), Brahms's Violin Concerto (also in D), Dvorák's "Otello" Overture—originally designed as the Finale of a symphony — Mendelssohn's "Hebrides," with its charming second theme, and some vocal music by Madame Ruth Lamb and Mr. MacInnes. Lady Hallé played with that exquisite refinement and unfailing accuracy which always characterise her performances, and was received with the enthusiasm which must ever greet her in this city; but we cannot help feeling that Tartini's "Trillo del Diavolo" is too old-fashioned, formal, and hackneyed to be worthy of so great an executant. On the 19th ult. the "Eroica" was superbly played. When again may we expect to have an equally unimpeachable rendering? Mr. Ben Davies, with great taste and discretion, gave the "Salve! dimora," from Gounod's "Faust," and three of Brahms's Lieder; but the remainder of the programme seemed to take one, in fancy, back to the music of our earlier days. Miss Margaret Pierrepont selected Mozart's Fifth Pianoforte Concerto, the now stale Prelude of Rachmaninoff, and a Scarlatti study; and the concert commenced with Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings; so that Beethoven's great Symphony stood out well from its surroundings.

Of the performance and reception of Mr. Cowen's "Ruth," on the 26th ult., notice must necessarily be deferred; but there could not be a doubt of the success of two scenes in which the composer has been especially happy—that of the Reapers and Gleaners ("For the pastures of the wilderness") and the song and dance of the harvest feast, which was given some years ago at the Athenæum concerts in this city. As might be expected, the strength of the work lies in the purely pastoral music and not in the contrapuntal writing.

It is most gratifying to note the regularly increasing attendance at the chamber recitals of the Brodsky, Rawdon Briggs, Speelman, and Carl Fuchs Quartet Party. On the 18th ult. the Association Hall was filled by an audience as enthusiastic as it was well qualified to judge the merits of both programme and performance. The opening String Quartet of Professor Stanford in D minor fairly justified its selection and was cordially received, although the form of some of the movements (especially the first and third) was somewhat difficult to follow at a first hearing. In no works does the principal of our College of Music delight more than in the chamber compositions of Brahms, for which the great variety and the wonderful delicacy of his tone are particularly suited; and in the Sonata for the violin and pianoforte (Op. 78) he was so ably backed by Mr. Dayas that the assembled students would not rest satisfied without a repetition of the last, but by no means the best, movement. The rendering of the great Quartet (Op. 130) of Beethoven was a veritable triumph for all concerned. Throughout the work the greatest demands are made upon the executants, who seemed animated by absolute unity of purpose. The Presto was loudly redemanded, but nowhere was attention more concentrated than by the intense pathos and the sobbing tone of broken utterance with which Mr. Brodsky wailed the few recitante measures immediately preceding the Da capo in the Cavatina. Would that we had singers who could so move an audience.

Probably in no city is there such a constant love of serious organ music as in Manchester. Mr. Pyne's Saturday evening recitals are always well attended and occasionally crowded. His programmes are moderately well diversified, generally containing a Bach fugue, some modern French or Italian sonata or offertoire, and perhaps, occasionally, a specimen of English workmanship.

Mr. G. W. Lane showed excellent discrimination in selecting "Jephtha" for revival, for it is difficult to imagine why, after the immense effect produced some dozen years ago—when it was repeatedly performed—this last of the mighty series of Handel's oratorios should have been so neglected. Doubtless, for the next performance, the choir will be more fully prepared and be able to show more of the boldness of attack which comes of familiarity and to infuse into the great choral movements more spirit and colouring.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

Christmas in Nottingham would scarcely seem complete without the performance of "The Messiah" on Boxing Day, which was given by the Sacred Harmonic Society to a full house. The brilliant rendering of the choruses was the chief feature of the evening and reflected the greatest credit upon Mr. Henry J. Wood. The solos were in the excellent hands of Mesdames Medora Henson and Marian McKenzie, Mr. Lloyd Chandos (vice Mr. Gwilym Richards, absent through illness), and Mr. Dan. Price. Mr. George Essex gave valuable aid at the organ.

The performance by the band of the Coldstream Guards attracted a good audience on the 12th ult., when the programme included the "Tannhäuser" Overture, the "Casse-Noisette" Suite, the first movement from the "Scotch" Symphony, the "Ride of the Walküren," "Leonore" Overture, No. 3, the "Unfinished" Symphony, and a Liszt Rhapsodie. The vocal pieces were contributed by Madame Duma and Madame Belle Cole. Miss Hilda Gee, a native of this city, created enthusiasm by the brilliant rendering of her violin solos. The performance of the orchestra was throughout of a high order, and the audience gave Mr. Rogan, the conductor, evident tokens of their keen appreciation of his efforts.

Lovers of organ music had an opportunity of hearing a masterly rendering of two exhaustive programmes given by Dr. Corbett, at the Mechanics' Institution, on the 7th ult.; and Mr. Stanley Hawley gave a recital, at St. George's Church, on the 13th ult., assisted by Madame Jennie Bentley and Mr. Will. Downing.

At Miss Cantelo's Subscription Concert at the Albert Hall, on the 19th ult., an interesting programme was presented, including Brahms's Trio in C minor (Op. 101), Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in F minor (Op. 57), Tartini's Violin Sonata in G minor, and Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 9). Miss Cantelo played throughout with remarkable sympathy and refinement, and was ably seconded by Mr. Johann Kruse and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse.

At Derby "The Messiah" was performed on Boxing Day by the Derby Choral Union. The solos were entrusted to Miss Percival Allen, Madame Marie Hooton, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. S. Neville Cox presided at the organ, and the band and chorus of 250 performers were conducted by Mr. Charles Hancock.

The Heanor Choral Union gave a performance of "The Messiah" on December 27. The soloists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Jessie Marshall-Ward, Mr. Joseph Sikes, and Mr. Harrison. Mr. J. Ward presided at the organ and Mr. W. G. Taylor conducted.

The Eastwood Choral Society also gave "The Messiah" on December 29. The solos were taken by Miss Maggie Jaques, Madame Bertha Parkinson, Mr. Turner, and Mr. Henry Dobson. Miss Plumtree rendered valuable service at the organ and Mr. W. G. Taylor conducted Handel's familiar work.

Referring to the Snetzler organ at St. Andrew's Church, mentioned in the December issue of The Musical Times, it may be of more than local interest to know that in the Nottingham Review for September 29, 1809, writing of the approaching musical festival to be held in St. Mary's Church for the benefit of the General Hospital, the following statement occurs: "Our excellent organ, the last that old Snetzler built, is to be cleaned and the keys brought forward, as at the Handel Commemoration."

An organ recital was given at Derby Road Baptist Church, on the 19th ult., by Mr. A. T. Robinson, and included Smart's Grand March in E flat, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G, Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant, and Handel's Concerto in B flat.

A lecture on "The Art of Richard Wagner" was given on the 20th ult., with musical illustrations on an American organ and a pianoforte.—Shades of Wagner!

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

"Messiahtide."

Though "The Messiah" performances that are the distinguishing feature of music at Christmastide—especially in Yorkshire—cannot be said to present any novelty, it may be of more than local interest to take a few typical performances to illustrate the treatment of this great oratorio in the provinces. This should be especially so just now, when the recent experiment at the Albert Hall has called particular attention to the treatment of Handel's masterpiece. For a robust reading after the common traditions, with Mozart and the many accretions passing under his name, the Huddersfield Choral Society's performance, on December 23, under Mr. J. Bowling, is pre-eminent. Nothing, even in the West Riding, approaches the grandeur of tone and force of attack of this chorus, which is heard to the greatest advantage in Handel's music—and only in Handel's music, it might be said. Another rendering distinguished by the freshness of the choir and the well-crusted traditions was that of the Bradford Old Choral Society, under Mr. Hartwell Robertshaw, on December 20. Both societies observed also a local tradition of doubtful value in prefacing the oratorio by the Christmas hymn, "Christians, awake." It might certainly have been imagined that "The Messiah" was long enough, and seasonable enough, without such an "additional accompaniment." The venerable Halifax Society has for some time been famous for the refinement of its chorus-singing, and this quality was noticeable on December 15, though on this occasion it showed some tendency to degenerate into tameness. Mr. Cowen is the conductor of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, and, with so eminent a conductor, it might have been expected that some of the traditional corruptions in the text would be disestablished. While conducting admirably, however, and making the very utmost of the experienced chorus, his reading presented no very novel features, and even included the practice, which should be almost exploded by now, of singing the earlier portions of "For unto us" pianissimo, with the very obvious intent of producing a sensational effect at the "Wonderful; Counsellor." A short time ago this custom was general in the West Riding; this year, by a rather strange coincidence, it was confined to the two Bradford societies. None of the societies was bold enough to dispense with Mozart, but two of them, the Dewsbury Choral Society and the Leeds Choral Union, adopted Franz's version, which fills up the gaps left by Mozart and removes some of the excrescences for which Mozart is not responsible. Franz was adopted some years ago by the Dewsbury Society's former conductor, Mr. Hirst, and has been continued by his successor, Mr. Chadwick. Mr. Benton, the conductor of the Leeds Choral Union, used Franz's version, but employed the trombones in the louder choruses, according to a tradition which is not altogether a modern Philistine invention, but has in its favour a recognised practice of the eighteenth century in church music. Of all the performances we are considering, the most finished and artistic in points of detail and in general artistic feeling was the reading given by the Leeds Philharmonic Society, under Dr. Stanford, who brought out the vocal character of the music and took very special pains with the orchestral phrasing. All round, however, the instrumental part of "The Messiah" is receiving more attention, and the old-fashioned method, which was slovenly when it was not mechanical, is giving way to something better. So much depends on the principal trumpet that it is worthy of record that the obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound" was played on each occasion but one by Mr. A. Tomlinson, who enjoys a well-deserved monopoly in the West Riding, and need not fear comparison in this part with the most famous English players of the day. Among some minor points in which West Riding conductors are showing a disposition to set aside corrupt traditions, may be mentioned the choruses "Since by man" and "For as in Adam," which are now seldom sung as quartets. There is even an inclination to hurry the recitative "And suddenly" into the authentic Allegro, and still more remarkable, some of the principal tenors have been cajoled into foregoing their interpolated top-note in "Thou shalt break them."

Since the beginning of the New Year there is but little to chronicle. Quite the most important event has been the Subscription Concert at Bradford, on the 13th ult., when Brahms's First Symphony was played (for the first time in Yorkshire!) by the Hallé band, under Mr. Cowen, and Mr. Busoni made his first appearance in this county in Beethoven's Fifth Concerto. He made a very deep impression by the beautifully vocal character of his phrasing and the fine quality of his tone, whether in fortes or pianissimos. Madame Ella Russell was the vocalist. The Bingley Choral Society gave, on the 10th ult., Mr. Brewer's 98th Psalm for the first time in Yorkshire, Miss Annie Jackson and Mr. Browning being the soloists and Mr. Pearson the conductor. Yet another première was at the Leeds Parish Church choir's concert, on the 5th ult., when they introduced to Yorkshire Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." On both these occasions, however, the orchestra was misrepresented by either organ or pianoforte and strings, so that in neither case was full justice done to an important side of the composition.

The popular attraction at Messrs. Haddock's Leeds Musical Evening, on the 17th ult., was the re-appearance of Mr. Santley, who quite renewed his youth in some of his well-known songs, his voice being fresher and his intonation more uniformly accurate than has been the case for some time past. A creditable performance of Mendelssohn's String Quintet in B flat was a pleasant feature of the programme. On the same evening Mr. Grossmith supplied the programme of a Huddersfield Subscription concert, but his entertainment, excellent as it is, hardly comes within the purview of a notice of "Music" in Yorkshire. On the 21st ult. Mr. Frederick Dawson returned to his native county to give a spirited and brilliant reading of Liszt's Second Pianoforte Concerto, in A, at one of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra's concerts. Mr. Dawson's extraordinary facility of execution is displayed to particular advantage in Liszt's music, and the concerto proved no exception to the rule. The orchestra, under Mr. Bartle, played the "Euryanthe," "Ruy Blas," and "Lohengrin" Overtures very creditably, and Madame Emily Squire was the vocalist.

The concerts given by the Grocers' Company's School at Hackney Downs are always exceptionally noteworthy. At the winter performances this season "Iolanthe" was given three times to very large audiences of parents and friends. As usual, an ample and well furnished stage was erected in the large gymnasium attached to the school. The scenery was excellent and the dresses were all that could be desired, even at a professional performance. The spectacle of some sixty or seventy boys arrayed as Fairies or Peers in the Finale of the first act was surprisingly attractive. The drill of the stage movements and evolutions was simply admirable, and called forth enthusiastic encores.

The acting of the leading characters revealed much natural talent. P. R. Friswell as the Lord Chancellor was very funny and clever. E. T. Macdermott, as Iolanthe, was another distinct success. His make-up and actions were excellent, but the most striking thing was that this boy of twelve was able to sing Iolanthe's beautiful and touching song in the second act with a depth of expression that thrilled the audience. Some of the solo boys had a tendency to sing sharp, but otherwise the quality of their voices was pleasing and their attack excellent. Of course, when all is said in favour of the performance of such a work as "Iolanthe" by boys with unbroken voices, it must be admitted that the music, written as it is for adults, often suffered from lack of weight and fulness. This shortcoming was much felt in the Peers' chorus and in other ensemble sections. A fairly full band plus a pianoforte helped to fill in the part-writing, and generally accompanied without being too obtrusive. Mr. Ernest Newton conducted, and to him the credit of the musical side of the performance is due. The Rev. W. Gull, the head master, takes an active interest in the coaching of the boys.

The Lombard Amateur Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. A. H. D. Prendergast, gave a concert of male-voice part-music, at St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 18th ult. The gems of the evening were, no doubt, S. S. Wesley's "I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre" and Mr. Prendergast's dainty part-song "Light, wandering, murmuring wind," the latter being re-demanded. Arcadelt's madrigal "Now Spring in all her glory" and Henry Leslie's part-song "The rejected lover" were also obliged to be repeated. Other pieces were R. J. S. Stevens's glee "It was a lover and his lass" (arranged for male voices by Mr. Prendergast), Blumenthal's part-song "What care I," Hatton's "Hemlock Tree," and W. A. Barrett's "Slowly sinks the sun to rest." For precision of attack, attention to light and shade, and excellence of tone, this small, but compact choir fully sustained the prestige it has borne since its formation in 1872. Songs were contributed by Messrs. Jeffery Puzey and Walter F. Broad; and instrumental pieces by Dr. Robert T. White and Mr. Imhof (pianoforte) and Mr. Gilderoy Scott (violoncello).

The enjoyable Wednesday evenings given at the Princes' Galleries by the Curtius Concert Club were resumed on the 11th ult., when M. de Pachmann gave a pianoforte recital the chief feature of which was the exquisite delicacy and beauty of tone in his rendering of a Chopin selection. The concert on the following Wednesday opened with the first performance in England of a String Quartet in E flat (Op. 10) by a young Bohemian named Ottokar Novacek, a pupil of Dvorák. The work, of which the first movement is the best, is promising, but there are many quartets by Englishmen waiting to be heard that are decidedly better. The executants were Messrs. Gompertz, Haydn Inwards, Emil Kreuz, and Charles Ould, who subsequently performed Schumann's Quartet in A (Op. 41, No. 3). Madame Sobrino, an attractive vocalist, is to be commended for singing as many songs in English as in German and Italian.

The prospectus of the Spring series of the Crystal Palace Saturday concerts is now issued. Nine concerts will be given, commencing on the 25th inst., and the novelties included in the programmes will be Miss Liza Lehmann's choral and orchestral ballad "Young Lochinvar," Mr. W. Wallace's symphonic poem "Sister Helen," Mr. W. H. Bell's symphonic poem "The Pardoner's Tale" (from Chaucer), Scharwenka's Pianoforte Concerto in C sharp minor, M. Jean Renard's Violoncello Concertino, J. Klengel's Violoncello Concerto in A minor, Reginald Steggall's Suite in E, and Otto Manns's Scherzo Capriccioso. Mr. Manns's Benefit will take place on May 6, when Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony will be performed for the twenty-seventh time under his direction.

The difficulties that threatened the opera season of the present year have at last been successfully overcome and the Grand Opera Syndicate has, for the sum of £110,000, purchased the remainder of the lease of Covent Garden Theatre (granted originally to the late Frederick Gye) and the exclusive performing rights in a large number of indispensable operas. To make this purchase the Syndicate has increased its capital by the issue of Preference and Debenture shares, all of which have been subscribed. Mr. Maurice Grau will resume his position as managing director and Mr. Neil Forsyth will undertake the general business management. Arrangements have already been made to instal the electric light throughout the stage and to erect a smoking-room over the portico.

At the annual meeting of the Union of Graduates in Music, held on the 10th ult., a very flourishing condition of the Association was disclosed. About 600 members (nearly the whole of the graduates in music of Great Britain) have been enrolled, and during the past year the Union has been incorporated. The banquet which followed, in the Caledonian Hall of the Holborn Restaurant, was very largely attended. The retiring president (Dr. Henry Hiles, of the Victoria University) was supported by Sir Frederick Bridge and Professor Armes, and warmly congratulated upon the tact with which some difficult questions have been met during his term of office. Professor Niecks (Edinburgh University) was elected president for the current year.

Sir Frederick Bridge has selected the perennial topic of "The Messiah" for his Gresham Lectures on the 13th, 14th, 16th, and 17th inst., which promise to be unusually interesting. His four discourses are entitled: (1) "The Messiah as Handel wrote it," (2) "as Handel performed it," (3) "as Mozart, J. Smithies, and others improved (?) it," and (4) "as it should be performed." At the last lecture selections from the oratorio will be performed, according to the Handelian tradition, by a band and chorus of students from the Guildhall School of Music. The first lecture will be delivered in the Theatre of Gresham College and the remaining three at the City of London School, commencing each evening at 6 p.m.

The Bach Choir Committee announces two concerts to be given at the Queen's Hall, on the 7th inst. and March 25, under the direction of Professor Villiers Stanford. The first is to consist entirely of works by the great Leipzig Cantor and will include the Magnificat in D, Orchestral Suite in B minor, the Concerto in D for two pianofortes (Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Borwick), and the cantata "A Stronghold sure." At the second concert Verdi's "Stabat Mater," Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat (Mr. Borwick), and Sir Hubert Parry's Scenes from Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound" will be performed.

The Saturday concerts given at St. James's Hall every Saturday evening in connection with the West London Mission are decidedly worthy of commendation and encouragement. The chief feature is an excellent orchestra of seventy-five performers, led by Mr. Edward O'Brien and most ably conducted by Mr. Heath Mills, and the price of admission is modestly fixed at sixpence, with "reserved seats, one shilling." The programmes, which are naturally of the popular and "variety" order, have recently contained the Overture to "William Tell" and German's "Henry VIII." Dances.

At the Royal Academy of Music, the George Mence Smith Scholarship has been awarded to Mary Isabel Reaney, a native of Huntingdon. The examiners were Madame Agnes Larkcom, Mr. Frederic King, and Mr. Arthur Thompson (chairman). The Macfarren Scholarship has been awarded to Adam von Ahn Carse, of London. The examiners were Mr. Edward German, Mr. Alberto Randegger, and Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie. The Robert Burns Club Prize has been awarded equally to R. Neville Flux and Harry Farjeon. Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie was the examiner.

The Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "The Messiah" on the 11th ult., in the New Tabernacle, Old Street. The soloists were Miss A. Wilmot-Briggs, Miss Kitty Longland, Mr. Herbert Clinch, and Mr. Edwin Webster. The same oratorio was performed by the Choir on the 18th ult., at St. George the Martyr's, Borough. The solos were sustained by Madame Edwards, Madame Rina Robinson, Mr. Henry Holyoake, and Mr. Robert Greir. Dr. E. H. Turpin accompanied on the organ.

Messrs. Josef and Paul Ludwig's third chamber concert, which took place on the 20th ult. at the Salle Erard, included admirable performances of Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in A (Op. 26), Beethoven's Trio in D (Op. 8), and solos on their respective instruments by the concert-givers and Madame Haas. Miss Louise Phillips, the vocalist, is to be commended for bringing into notice four attractive and daintily written songs, severally named "Desdemona's Song," "Hark, the lark," "The Primrose," and "I call," by Joseph Moorat.

The Willesden Green Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the High School Hall, Churchill Road, on the 18th ult., under the direction of Mr. Louis Robbins. The programme included Beethoven's Symphony (No. 1, in C), two Elegiac melodies of Grieg, Gounod's Overture to "Mirella," Moszkowsky's Spanish Dances, and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March. Mr. Louis Robbins, the conductor, played two violin solos, and the vocalists were Madame Carrie Dulcken and Mr. Maurice Aubrey.

The New Year convention and annual meeting of the Tonic Sol-fa Association was held in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, Aldersgate Street, on the 14th ult., when one of the chief features was a lecture delivered by Mr. L. C. Venables on "Present day tendencies in concerts and their lessons." A discussion was also held on "Music in Evening Continuation Schools," Mr. C. G. Lewis introducing the subject in an able paper.

The Highbury Philharmonic Society gave its second concert of the present season on the 13th ult., when the programme comprised Beethoven's Second Symphony, Tschaïkowsky's "Casse-Noisette" Suite, Spohr's Dramatic Concerto (the solo part being admirably played by Mr. G. H. Betjemann), and Cowen's successful Leeds cantata, "Ode to the Passions." Miss Clara Butt was the solo vocalist.

Miss Emmie Tatham, a pupil of Madame Blanche Marchesi, made her début at a concert given by the Hof-Pianist, Herr Lutter, at Hanover, in December. The Hanover Daily News, in a notice of the concert, says: "Miss Tatham showed herself to be a singer gifted with a sympathetic voice, especially rich in its lower tones, and by her artistic performance she contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the evening."

The Clapham Choral Society gave its first concert of the present season on the 24th ult., under the direction of Mr. Walter Mackway, when the chief feature in the programme was the late Henry Leslie's cantata "Holyrood." At the second concert, to be given on April 18, the programme will comprise Verdi's "Stabat Mater," Mackenzie's cantata "The Bride," and the "Spring" section of Haydn's "Seasons."

The "Beethoven Haus" Society, in Bonn, offers two prizes, of £100 and £50 respectively, for a chamber composition for wind instruments only, or in combination with either pianoforte or stringed instruments, competitors being requested to send in their scores (and parts) not later than June 30, in the present year, to the honorary president of the Society, Professor Joachim, in Berlin.

Mr. George MacHutchin gave a concert at Steinway Hall on the 7th ult., the programme of which included four songs, a duet, and a violin piece composed by the concert-giver. The artists who assisted were Madame Mabel Ward, Madame Minnie Shatel, Miss Kathleen Purcell, Miss Alice Elieson, Messrs, Penderel Price, Montague Borwell, Percy Woodgate, and Mrs. MacHutchin.

The weekly lectures on Wednesday afternoons at the Royal Academy of Music, during February and March, will consist of two discourses (chiefly biographical) on Brahms and Tschaïkowsky, by Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, to be delivered on the 8th and 15th inst., followed by a course of six lectures on "Some Pianoforte Composers subsequent to Beethoven," by Mr. Walter Macfarren.

At Mr. Penna's lecture on "The Tempest," at Holy Trinity Rooms, Kilburn, on the 10th ult., Miss Elsa Brettingham (a pupil of Mr. Penna) sang Ariel's three songs so much to the satisfaction of the large audience that the second and third were enthusiastically re-demanded.

The Royal Society of Musicians has arranged with the directors of the Crystal Palace for a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," to take place on the Handel Festival Orchestra, on Saturday, June 24. The London contingent of the Handel Festival Choir will take part and the orchestra will number 500 performers. Mr. August Manns will conduct.

The following concerts have been given:—

St. James's Hall.—Mr. Sims Reeves, 24th ult.

Queen's (Small) Hall.—Miss Ethel Bauer and Madame Ritta von Reichburg, 25th ult.

Salle Erard.—Mdlle. Aurelia Révy, 25th ult.

Steinway Hall.—Miss Daisy Heron and Miss Edith Williams, 24th ult.

University of London.—The following have recently satisfied the examiners for degrees in music: D.Mus.—Henry William Jones; B.Mus.—Alfred Henry Barley, Paula Rodriguez Garcia, and Bruce Kingsley Gillon. The examiners were Sir Walter Parratt and Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd.

Mr. Frank Grant has been appointed accompanist and organist to the Alexandra Palace Choral Society. Mr. A. H. Griffin has been re-appointed organist of the Palace for the ensuing season, and will give three recitals daily on Willis's grand organ.

Mr. A. T. Lash, organist and choirmaster of St. Matthias', Poplar, delivered a lecture on "Handel, his Life and Works," at Poplar, on the 3rd ult. Musical illustrations were played on the pianoforte by the lecturer.

At St. Mark's, Kennington, Gounod's "Mors et Vita" will be sung, with orchestral accompaniment, on the evenings of the 24th inst. and four following Fridays, under the direction of Mr. Warren Tear.

A centenary performance of Haydn's "Creation" will be given at the Crystal Palace on March 18.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Bayreuth.—Some excerpts from Siegfried Wagner's long-expected comic opera "Der Bärenhäuter" were produced at the villa "Wahnfried" by the Carl Orchestra, of Nuremburg, during the Christmas holidays, in connection with the birthday celebrations of Frau Cosima. They are said to have impressed the audience greatly in its favour. The work, the pianoforte score of which has just been published at Leipzig, was brought out on the 22nd ult. at the Munich Hof-Theater.

Berlin.—The new Beethoven Saal, a fine concert hall, excellent in its acoustic properties and accommodating some 1,100 persons, was inaugurated by two performances on the 2nd and 3rd ult. On the former occasion the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Herr Rebizek's direction, played Beethoven's Overture "Zur Weihe des Hauses" and the "Leonora" Overture (No. 3). At the second concert the Joachim Quartet, Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg, and other artists, as well as the Philharmonic Choir, under Herr Siegfried Ochs, took part. At the Philharmonic concert of the 9th ult., under the direction of Herr Nikisch, a new symphonic poem, "Fata Morgana," by Carl Gleitz, was produced for the first time and considered by musicians present to be a very interesting and remarkable work. Mr. Eugene d'Albert was the pianist on the occasion.——Fräulein Anna Hegner, aged seventeen, a sister of Otto Hegner, gave two violin recitals at the Bechstein Hall, last month, when she played, amongst other pieces, Beethoven's Violin Concerto with marked success.——Emmanuel Chabrier's posthumous opera, "Briséis" was brought out for the first time on any stage on the 12th ult., at the Royal Opera, but coldly received. According to the statistical report just published, the number of different works produced in 1898, at the Royal Opera, was fifty-five. Amongst these the greatest number of performances was accorded to Lortzing's "Czar und Zimmermann"—viz., twenty-eight, "Tannhaüser" coming next with nineteen, while in the total of performances of works by the same composer, Wagner heads the list with seventy-five performances.

Bologna.—The Bologna Wagner Society, founded in 1870, under the zealous direction of the Maëstro Franchetti, has decided upon its dissolution, on the ground of there being no longer any need for it and similar societies in Italy, where the Bayreuth master's admirers now far outnumber his opponents. It was under the auspices of this Society that the first Italian performance of "Lohengrin" took place in 1872.

Breslau.—"Cleopatra," the new opera by the Danish composer, August Enna, was brought out at the Stadt-Theater, on December 25, under Dr. Loewe's direction, and, to judge from the highly favourable reception accorded it, is likely to maintain itself on the repertory for some time to come.

Brussels.—Under the title of "La Princesse d'Auberge," M. Jan Blockx's three-act opera "De Herbergprinses" was produced, with a French version of the libretto, on December 19, at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, and received with the greatest enthusiasm.

Budapest.—The new three-act opera, "Meister Roland," by Count Geza Zichy, the well-known one-armed pianoforte virtuoso, was successfully brought out on the 10th ult., at the Royal Opera, the composer being recalled several times. ——At the invitation of the directors of the Musik Akademie, Herr Ernst von Dohnányi gave an interesting recital last month, in the presence of professors and pupils of the Institution, the majority of whom were his own compatriots. Needless to add that the reception of the gifted young pianist was most flattering.

Carlsruhe.—Liszt's "Mountain" Symphony ("Ce qu'on entend sur la Montagne") was produced, for the first time, at one of the Subscription concerts, under Herr Mottl's direction, last month, with sensational success. On the same occasion M. Geloso, the solo violinist of the Paris Lamoureux concerts, made his first appearance in Germany and was received with much favour.

Cassel.—An excellent performance was given on December 20 of Edgar Tinel's "Franciscus," by the Oratorio Society, under the direction of Dr. Franz Beier, with Frau Herzog, of Berlin, and Herr Cronberger in the solo parts. The oratorio, which was a novelty here, met with a most enthusiastic reception.

Darmstadt.—A new choral work by the Cologne composer, Arnold Mendelssohn, entitled "Frühlingsfeier," for two solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, was produced for the first time on December 21, by the Musik Verein, under Capellmeister De Haan's direction, with considerable success. At a concert given by the Wagner Society, Herr Mendelssohn was also highly appreciated as a composer of songs, which were finely interpreted by Dr. L. Wüllner, the gifted son of the well-known Cologne musician.

Dresden.—A new one-act opera, "Der Schelm von Bergen," by the Berlin composer Eduard Behm, the libretto founded on a poem by Heine, was brought out with great success, on the 1st ult., at the Royal Theatre. A charming minuet and gavotte are amongst the numbers which are likely to obtain considerable popularity.——At the Royal Theatre will be celebrated next month the bi-centenary of the birth of one of its famous Capellmeisters, Johann Adolph Hasse, under whose direction Italian opera attained a high degree of popularity in the Saxon capital. Hasse, the husband of the equally celebrated operatic singer, Faustina Hasse, was born at Bergedorf, near Hamburg, on March 25, 1699.

Frankfort-on-Main.—A very fine performance was given at one of the Museum concerts last month by the select choir, conducted by the veteran Julius Stockhausen, of Bach's cantata "Wachet, auf," and the "Ave Maria" and "Laudi alla Vergine," from the "Quattro pezzi sacri," by Verdi.

Heidelberg.—An event of some interest was the performance, in Christmas week, by members of the Bach Verein, of a new work entitled "Weihnachts Mysterium," and intended as a revival of the mediæval mystery plays, with the musical element predominating. The work, which is from the pen of Dr. Wolfrum, the director of the Bach Verein, although given in concert form only on this occasion, produced a highly favourable impression.

Leipzig.—Dr. Herman Kretzschmar has been appointed the successor of the late Dr. Oscar Paul in the professorship of musical history and æsthetics at the University.

Michigan (U.S.)—A wealthy amateur, Mr. F. Stearm, has presented a very interesting collection of musical instruments to the Museum of the University. It consists of over one thousand specimens, valued at about £5,000.

Milan.—In accordance with old-established custom, the Theatre della Scala, and with it the other lyric stages of Italy, opened their doors on December 26 (San Stefano) for the carnival season, with a brilliant performance of "Die Meistersinger." The occasion was rendered special on account of the leading Italian opera house having been closed for several seasons past, and there was a very numerous and distinguished audience. Signor Toscanini, the newly appointed orchestral director, conducted with consummate ability, and the leading parts, with Signor Scotti as the Hans Sachs, were in very efficient hands. On the 19th ult. the first Milan performance took place of Mascagni's new opera "Iris," the house being crowded, notwithstanding the greatly enhanced prices. The reception accorded to the new work was, on the whole, a favourable one. Mdlle. d'Arclée was an excellent representative of the heroine.

Munich.—Siegfried Wagner's comic opera "Der Bärenhäuter" was produced for the first time at the Royal Theatre, on the 22nd ult., and received with high favour by an audience which crowded every part of the house.

Paris.—The long-expected first performance of M. Paul Vidal's new four-act opera, "La Burgonde," took place, on December 23, at the Opéra, with Mesdames Bréval and Héglon, MM. Delmas and Alvarez in the principal parts, and met with a very favourable reception. The libretto, by MM. Emile Bergerat and Camille de Sainte-Croix, is an adaptation of some episodes from the German "Waltari-Lied," the action taking place in the camp of Attila, and ending with the death of the latter at the hands of his bride, la Burgonde. M. Vidal's score, though picturesque and effective, is somewhat wanting in originality.——The revival, on December 30, at the Opéra Comique, of "Fidelio," merits a record, on account chiefly of Beethoven's only opera not having been given here for a number of years. M. Gevaert's recitatives were used, the work was well mounted and finely rendered in its orchestral portions, but some of the solo interpreters were scarcely equal to their, it must be admitted, not altogether easy task.——At the Conservatoire concert, on the 8th ult., Bach's cantata "Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss" was given for the first time, and produced a most profound impression. The programme also included Beethoven's Symphony in A and Berlioz's "Roi Lear" Overture. Interesting novelties at the Lamoureux concerts were, on December 25, a symphonic poem, "La Naissance de Venus," by M. Alexandre Georges, a melodious and skilfully instrumented work, and, on the 8th ult., a series of songs entitled "Chaine d'Amour," for solo voice and orchestra, by M. Bonval, both works being extremely well received. At the Colonne concert of the 8th ult. a new symphonic poem, entitled "Procession Nocturne," by the young composer M. Henri Rabaud, was produced for the first time, and generally considered a work of some originality and power. MM. Ysaye and Raoul Pugno were the solo instrumentalists.

Pesaro.—Mascagni is already engaged upon a new operatic score, for which Signor Illica has supplied the libretto. The title of the new work is "Le Maschere." In an audience he recently had with Queen Marguerite, the composer is said to have promised that it should be first produced at Rome.

Pilsen.—Gounod's sacred trilogy "Mors et Vita" was performed here for the first time, recently, by the Choral Society "Hlahol," with the co-operation of the town orchestra. The performance, under the direction of Herr Kubat, was a very satisfactory one, the solo parts were in efficient hands, and the impression produced by the noble work was most marked upon an audience which included all the more earnest music-lovers in the town. A second performance was subsequently given. "The Hlahol Society," says the Pilsner Reform, "may be congratulated upon a distinct achievement in so worthily introducing Gounod's sublime masterpiece to our musical public."

PRAGUE.—Kienzl's new opera, "Don Quixote," was produced at the German Theatre on December 26, with Herr Davison in the titular part, when it was received with even greater favour than on its recent first performance at Berlin.

ROME.—The prize offered by the Academia Filarmonica for a Mass to be performed on the anniversary of the death of King Victor Emanuel, has been awarded to Signor Luigi Mapelli, professor of counterpoint at the Milan Conservatorio.——Goldmark's opera "Die Königin von Saba" was brought out with great success last month at the Argentina Theatre, in the presence of the Queen of Italy and others of the Royal Family.——A series of highly successful concerts was recently given by the young Hungarian violoncellist, Arnold Földesy, whose perfect technique and sympathetic artistic qualities are generally acknowledged.

ST. PETERSBURG.—Herr Felix Weingartner made his début here, as conductor of one of the Philharmonic Society's concerts, on the 7th ult., with great success. The programme included the conductor's own symphonic poem "Gefilde der Seligen."

SOFIA.—One of the virtuosos whom princes delight to honour is certainly Herr Emil Sauer. The eminent pianist, after being recently decorated with the gold medal for arts and sciences by the Prince Regent of Bavaria, has just had the high Order of Merit conferred upon him by the Prince of Bulgaria, whose "chamber virtuoso" he is, together with the permission to wear the brilliant Court uniform of the Principality.

STOCKHOLM.—A new opera, "Tirfing," by the Swedish composer, W. Stenhammar, was brought out, with great success, at the Royal Theatre, on December 19. M. Stenhammar has already become favourably known on the Continent as a composer of choral works.

VIENNA.—An excellent and highly appreciated performance of Handel's oratorio "Deborah" (for the first time according to Dr. Chrysander's version) was given on the 11th ult., by the choir of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, before a numerous audience. The principal solo parts were well rendered by Mesdames Katzmayr and Osborne and Dr. Felix Kraus, Herr von Perger being the conductor. ——Miss Fanny Davies won golden opinions from her very select audience at a pianoforte recital given by her at the Bösendorfer Hall, on the 7th ult.——Reznicek's comic opera "Donna Diana" was recently produced at the Imperial Opera for the first time, under Herr Mahler's direction, with considerable success.——A nephew of Johann Strauss, likewise bearing the name of Johann, made his début as a dramatic composer, on December 30, at the Theater-an-der-Wien, with an operetta, "Cat and Mouse," which proved both amusing and well-written musically, and was received with favour.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to record the death of COLLET DOBSON COLLET, who died on December 28, at the age of eighty-six, less three days. In his early days Mr. Collet was a student at the Royal Academy of Music. He contributed to musical journalism and sang in the chorus at Drury Lane under Macready's management, and subsequently at the Royal Italian Opera at Covent Garden. Fifty years ago Mr. Collet was a prominent Chartist, being secretary of the People's Charter Union. His chief claim for notice in these columns is the active interest he, with the late Mr. J. Alfred Novello, took in the Society for repealing the taxes upon knowledge, an agitation in which THE MUSICAL TIMES played a conspicuous part. The tax upon paper, advertisements, and the stamp tax upon newspapers were ultimately abolished, but not without a stiff fight with the Government, in which Collet and Novello were sturdy and victorious combatants. Mr. Collet edited Locke's music to "Macbeth," published by Messrs. Novello.

FRANCO NOVARA, formerly well known on the lyric stage, died, after an illness extending over eighteen months, on the 7th ult., at his residence in Upper Gloucester Place. He was a native of Wiltshire, his real name being Nash, or Naish, and it was while a chorister at Salisbury Cathedral that the excellent quality of his voice first attracted attention. He went to Italy, and, having gained stage experience, was subsequently engaged at Her Majesty's Theatre, where he made a successful début in May, 1881, under the name of Novara, as Mephistopheles in "Faust." Subsequently he was for some time with the Carl Rosa Company, where he distinguished himself as Savelli in Mackenzie's first opera, "Colomba." He was a great favourite under Mapleson's régime in America, and was a member of Madame Patti's concert party on both sides of the Atlantic. During later years he was a professor of singing at the Royal Academy of Music. Some popular songs from his pen have been published.

R. MACHILL GARTH, organist to Sir Michael Robert Shaw Stewart, Ardgowan, near Greenock, died on the 10th ult. Mr. Garth went to Ardgowan about fifteen years ago. One of his last compositions was a Wedding March written for the marriage of Miss Shaw Stewart.

With Professor ALBERT BECKER, whose death, on the 10th ult., at the age of sixty-four, is announced at Berlin, one of the most distinguished modern representatives of sacred musical art in Germany has passed away. He was born at Quedlinburg, on June 13, 1834, and studied principally under Dehn, in Berlin. His first important composition, a Symphony in G minor, obtained a prize at the Vienna Academy, but it was not until, upon the recommendation of Liszt, his great Mass in B flat major was produced by the Leipzig Riedel Verein, on the occasion of its twenty-fifth anniversary, that his name became at once generally known and, indeed, famous throughout Germany. Amongst his numerous other compositions, chiefly appertaining to Protestant Church music, are a "Reformation-Cantata," written for the Luther Festival of 1883; an oratorio, "Selig aus Gnade," and a number of motets and sacred songs, all of them bearing witness to his rare gifts as a composer and his earnest musicianship. In 1884 Becker was elected a member of the Berlin Royal Academy of Arts, and since 1889 has been the director of the celebrated Dom Chor in that capital.

GEORG EDUARD GOLTERMANN, a violoncellist of considerable reputation and composer for his instrument, died at Frankfort-on-Main, where he had resided for many years past, at the age of seventy-four. He was a native of Hanover, where his father was organist, and made his studies under Menter and Franz Lachner, in Munich. From 1874 to 1893 he occupied the post of conductor at the Frankfort Stadt-Theater. His compositions, which are effectively written for his instrument, have been played at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere in London.

The distinguished Spanish pianist, JUAN B. PUJOL, died at Barcelona, on December 28, at the age of sixty-three. During his tours in France and Germany, in the earlier part of his career, he established a high reputation as a performer on his instrument, more especially as an interpreter of Beethoven and Chopin, and also met with much appreciation on his two or three visits to this country. He was looked upon in his native country as the head of the school of modern Spanish pianists, nearly all the more noted ones of whom have been his pupils.

GEORGE F. BRISTOW, a composer of some repute in the United States, died at New York on December 21, aged sixty-eight.

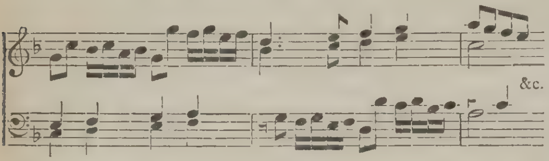
CORRESPONDENCE.

BACH THEME SOURCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—As any information in regard to the source from which a great composer draws his themes is likely to be of interest to your readers, will you pardon my trespassing on your space by mentioning two facts which have lately come under my notice, and which, as far as I have seen, have not hitherto been made public?

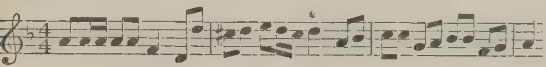
The first is in connection with Sebastian Bach's well-known G minor Fugue for the organ, the subject of which must have been suggested by the following passage in Frescobaldi's "Toccata Sexti Toni":—



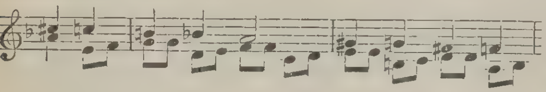
The most accessible form in which this can be consulted is probably in Commer's "Musica Sacra," Vol. I., where it stands on page 60. Frescobaldi, it is to be noted, uses the figure incidentally, and does not develop it in any way.

My second allusion is to Bach's great Canzona for organ in D minor. The title of this work points to an Italian source, and the subjects of the second section in 3-2 time were apparently suggested by passages in two Canzone by Giovanni Paolo Colonna, which are printed in a collection of organ pieces published early in the last century by Walsh, and entitled "Volentarys and Fugues made on purpose for the Organ or Harpsichord by Ziani, Pollaroli, Bassani, and other Famous Authors."

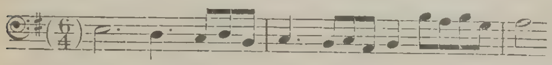
The first of these passages is in D minor and the subject is as follows:—



From the asterisk onward is the passage which interested Bach, and the following specimen of Colonna's treatment is so close to Bach's as to preclude the idea of accidental resemblance—



Colonna's second contribution to Bach's Canzona is not of so definite a nature; but it is hard to believe that the later master was not influenced by this passage in the work of the earlier, which occurs three pages later in the same volume near the end of the Canzona in G major:—



I refrain in both cases from quoting Bach, because the works referred to, if not familiar, ought to be so.

While writing on this subject, it may be worth while calling attention to another fact which has apparently escaped notice. The third of the sixteen concertos published by Peters, as having been constructed by Bach from the violin concertos of Vivaldi, was not really by that composer, but by Alessandro Marcello, brother of the better known Benedetto. This concerto was originally written for a hautboy, two violins, viola, violoncello, and continuo, was published in parts by Jeanne Roger, of Amsterdam, and bears the number 432. It does not appear in the catalogue which this publisher issued in 1703, and consequently was probably brought out later.

Yours very faithfully,
T. W. Bourne.

DR. E. J. HOPKINS AND MENDELSSOHN'S "WEDDING MARCH."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—In the current issue of The Musical Times (p. 19), the question is raised as to when Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was first performed at a nuptial ceremony. It may, perhaps, be of interest to some of your readers to know when it was first played as an organ piece in this country. The "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, it may be mentioned, was performed for the first time in England at the Philharmonic concert given on May 27, 1844, when Mendelssohn himself conducted. The reception of both music and composer was simply tumultuous.

I was not only present at the ovation, but at the time I was under promise to Mr. Joseph Walker, the organ-builder, to give a recital on the following Saturday on a new instrument just then finished by him and standing in his factory. Being so much struck by the effect of the "Wedding March," as of course was everyone else, I put it down on my programme with which to conclude Part I. The full score was not then available, but I carried in my memory some of the main orchestral effects, which the organ enabled me to mimic in the course of my performance. The piece was received with great enthusiasm and was vociferously encored. Mr. Turle, organist of Westminster Abbey, I remember, was one of the audience. Such was the first occasion of the use of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" as an organ piece in England.—Yours, &c.,

January 22, 1899. Edward J. Hopkins.

MUSICAL SERVICES IN WORKHOUSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—The notice in your January number of the singing by the choir of St. Alphage, at a service held in the Hackney Union, reminded me that when a chorister at Swinton Church, Lancashire, in the time of the late Canon Heywood, I have more than once assisted at a musical service at the neighbouring Workhouse at Patricroft. It was the vicar's custom to ask half the choir to go to the Workhouse about twice a year to render a full service. The choir was a mixed one of about sixty voices altogether, and the necessity of only taking half arose from considerations of accommodation. The appreciation shown by the congregation (for we usually heard some of their criticisms in course of time) amply repaid the slight trouble involved in the visit. I would truly like to see the plan more widely adopted, and, as you say, "a fine opportunity is presented to church choirs to follow the example set by that of St. Alphage."—Yours faithfully,

Manchester, Choir.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Abbotsham (Bideford).—The children attending the Abbotsham school gave two performances of Roeckel's "The Silver Penny," on the 5th ult., one in the afternoon, before a fashionable audience, and one in the evening, before the general public. The orchestra consisted of the Vicar (violoncello) and Master and Miss Sealy (violins). Miss Ireland presided at the pianoforte (kindly lent by the Vicar) and Mr. Ireland was the conductor. Both orchestra and children did full justice to the exceptionally beautiful music. The fairies were all that fairies should be—pretty, bright, and musical. The whole was set off by special scenery representing an idea of one of the many beautiful local seascapes. The solos, duets, dance, and "Good-night" chorus met with the heartiest appreciation. The teachers were warmly congratulated on their success, the audience giving three lusty cheers. The proceeds were devoted to the Teachers' Orphanage Fund.

Abingdon.—The Abingdon Musical Union, whose president is Sir John Stainer, gave its annual Christmas concert in the Corn Exchange, on December 22, when Mendelssohn's first oratorio, "St. Paul," received a highly meritorious rendering by a band and chorus numbering seventy performers. The soloists were Miss Alice Crawley, Mrs. H. M. Turner, Mr. Humphrey Jones, and Mr. Walter J. Belgrave. Mr. T. Kennett-Hayes was the leader of the orchestra, Miss M. Hughes presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. H. B. Wilsdon was a very capable conductor.

Andover.—Mr. Arthur C. Bennett's eighth annual concert took place in the Town Hall on the 10th ult. Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Edythe Gammon, and Mr. Whitworth Mitton contributed various songs, and a string orchestra, formed from Mr. Bennett's pupils, played several pieces with excellent precision.

Belbroughton.—Two concerts having the same programmes were given on successive evenings—the 3rd and 4th ult.—in the boys' schoolroom, by the children attending the Belbroughton schools. The chief feature of the concerts was a capital performance on each evening of Mr. Shapcott Wensley and Mr. Jacobi's operetta "Cinderella," performances which reflected the greatest credit on both teachers and children. The principal performers were Cinderella, Minnie Moore; Charity and Patience (her cruel sisters), Francis Lacy and Clifford Reynolds; Fairy Godmother, Mary Nash; Lady Guy, Violet Baylis; Prince, John Best; and Papa, Frederick Moore. A committee of ladies prepared the dresses, Mr. A. Price was responsible for the scenery, and Miss Hough, Mr. Sims, and Mr. A. Price very kindly formed the orchestra. The success of the dual representation of this attractive and tuneful work was of the most gratifying and enjoyable nature.

Bethesda.—Mr. E. D. Lloyd, organist of the Congregational Chapel, gave his annual concert on the 4th ult., before a crowded audience. He was assisted by Mrs. E. D. Lloyd and Mr. Emlyn Davies, who contributed songs with excellent taste, the latter singing Pughe-Evans's "Lead, kindly Light." The instrumentalists were Miss Lily Eames, Mr. J. O. Roberts, Mr. W. R. Watson, Mr. R. R. Morris, and Mr. E. D. Lloyd, the concert-giver, who ably presided at the organ. The Penrhyn Male-Voice Choir gave very fine renderings of Henry's "Nos Ystorom," Schaffer's "Polka Serenade," Pughe-Evans's "Y delyn aur," and Herpin's "Serenade at Seville," under Mr. Lloyd's conductorship.

Boscombe.—The sixth quarterly choir service, at the church of St. John the Evangelist, was held on December 22, when Stainer's cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" formed the anthem. A capital orchestra, under the leadership of Signor Bertoncini, rendered most efficient aid. The solos were sung by Mr. Gerald Lee (tenor), Mr. G. E. Bridge (bass), and Master Bertie Follett, of the church choir. Miss Ethel Eales presided at the organ, and Mr. Arthur T. George, organist and director of the music, conducted.

Bournemouth.—The twenty-eighth of Mr. Dan Godfrey's symphony concerts took place on the 9th ult., when the programme was devoted entirely to Wagner. It included the "Huldigungsmarsch," Overture "Flying Dutchman," Prelude to Acts 1 and 3 of "Lohengrin," final scene from "Das Rheingold," the Valkyries' Ride, Prelude and final scene from "Tristan und Isolde," and the Good Friday music from "Parsifal." The audience exceeded any that has yet attended the Symphony concerts, and the performance, which was throughout of a very high order, reflected the greatest credit on Mr. Dan Godfrey and his excellent orchestra.

Carlisle.—The annual entertainment given by the scholars of Fawcett Schools took place on the 19th ult. The chief feature was a capital performance of Jacobi's popular operetta "Cinderella," in which the chorus work was well done and some of the principals displayed remarkable talent. Miss E. Meek as Patience and Miss M. Thompson as Charity were admirable, and Mr. A. Haddow as Papa put a good deal of life into the part. Miss G. Bulman was the Fairy Godmother, Miss E. Bushby took the title-role, Master H. Finmore was the Prince, and Master F. Richmond was the Courtier. There was an admirable orchestra, and the audience, who filled the hall to the doors, were highly pleased with the performance. Mr. Reid conducted and the accompaniments were played by Miss Jackson.

Cefn Coed (Merthyr Tydfil).—An Eisteddfod was held in the Drill Hall on December 26, under the presidency of Captain H. V. Jones and Councillor Thomas Morris. The adjudicators were Mrs. Bond, Mr. J. Cledan Williams, and the Rev. J. E. Jenkins (Creidiol). Miss Mann was the accompanist, Mr. Evan Jones acted as secretary, and the Rev. J. Hathren Davies conducted the proceedings during the day. The following were the prize-winners: The Hen-dy-Cwrdd juvenile choir, for rendering "Pan gilia'r niwl"; tenor solo, T. M. Jones (Cefn); soprano solo, Miss Mary Turner (Cefn); bass solo, John Edwards (Penrhiwfer); male-voice part-song, "The Crusaders," won by the Cefn party, under the leadership of Mr. T. M. Jones.

Chesterfield.—At Holy Trinity Church a very creditable performance of selections from "The Messiah" was given after evening service on Christmas night, with full orchestra and organ accompaniment, under the direction of Mr. G. H. Sadler, organist and choirmaster of the church. The solos were sung by Mrs. Short, Miss Lowe, Master Leonard Willis, Mr. G. T. Short, Mr. Beastall, and Mr. Turner, and the choruses were excellently rendered by an augmented choir.

Darlington.—Handel's "Messiah" was performed in the Greenbanks Primitive Methodist Church on Christmas Day. The principals were Miss Nellie Buckley, Miss Heslop, Mr. R. Davison, and Mr. W. H. Rycroft, the two last-named being members of the choir. The church choir was augmented to about seventy voices, and a string band rendered great assistance. Mr. W. Heslop, Junr., presided at the organ and Mr. W. Heslop conducted. The performance reflected great credit upon the conductor and all taking part. Miss Buckley's excellent singing gave special satisfaction.

Goulburn (N.S.W.).—A vocal and violin recital was given at the Town Hall, on December 9, by Messrs. Percy Ibbs and T. A. Daniel. The former gentleman, who is organist of Goulburn Cathedral, made his appearance as a vocalist with considerable success, his singing of Robaudi's "Alla Stella confidente" (with Mr. Daniel's violin obbligato) being heartily encored. Other artists who assisted were Mrs. D. C. S. Bruce, Mrs. A. J. Sach, Miss Florrie Taylor, and Mr. G. McConnell.

Hoxne (Suffolk).—An interesting outcome of the Henniker choral competition recently held at Ipswich (see The Musical Times of December) took place at Hoxne, on December 20, when the choir of that place combined with those of two contiguous parishes, Brome and Oakley, in a performance of Mendelssohn's "Christus." This event had no official connection with Miss Henniker's scheme; but unless that competition had led the members of the choir to practise the work the chances are that the neighbouring villages would never have had the opportunity of listening to the music, therefore an educational feat of importance may be traced to its initiative. The Hon. the Rev. A. Parker, rector of Brome and Oakley, conducted an intelligent performance, and Madame Serruys was responsible for the compressed pianoforte score.

Lutterworth.—The Musical Society gave a very creditable rendering of Anderton's cantata "Yule-Tide," in the Town Hall, on the 17th ult. The solos were sustained by Mrs. James, Miss Florence Adcock, Rev. W. M. Mitchell, and the Rev. H. S. Biggs. The work was ably performed under the direction of Mr. W. Adkins, the conductor of the Society, and the hall was well filled with an attentive and appreciative audience. Mr. F. Hall was the leader of the band.

Maidstone.—The Maidstone Operatic Society gave three performances of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera "The Gondoliers," in the Corn Exchange, on the 3rd and 4th ult. The principal performers were Miss A. Louise Burns, Mrs. F. W. Dutnall, Miss Mabel Gascoigne, Mrs. E. Stockens, Mr. Walter George, Mr. George Lander, Mr. Henry Leffler, Mr. A. Swanson, and Mr. C. Malpass. The opera was handsomely mounted, and the orchestra of thirty-six performers was ably conducted by Mr. F. W. Dutnall.

Melbourne (Derbyshire).—The Glee and Madrigal Society gave a most successful concert in the Public Hall, on the 10th ult., when Mr. J. F. Barnett's popular "Ancient Mariner" was performed in a most praiseworthy manner. The chorus singing was of a very high order of excellence, and the orchestral accompaniments were admirably rendered. The principals were Miss Wilson, Mr. Mather, and Mr. Pearson, who did full justice to Mr. Barnett's melodious music. Mr. Norman Hilbert conducted with judgment and skill.

Melksham.—Two performances, on the 10th and 12th ult., of Mr. Shapcott Wensley and Mr. Jacobi's humorous operetta "Cinderella" were given in the Town Hall with remarkable success. The chief characters were ably sustained by Miss Agnes Parker (Cinderella), Miss Norah Matravers and Miss E. Flooks (Patience and Charity), Mr. J. A. Coombe (Papa), Mr. R. A. Millard (Prince), Miss Flooks (Lady Guy), and Miss Alice White (Fairy Godmother). There was an excellent orchestra, led by Mr. C. H. Brooksby, while Mrs. A. Burgess presided at the pianoforte and Mr. E. H. Wade conducted. The mere fact that many people were turned away from the doors at the repetition performance is a sufficient tribute to the popularity of this attractive work.

Morecambe.—Mr. Whiteside gave his second annual chamber concert in the Albert Hall on the 2nd ult. The chief features of the programme were Spohr's Quintet in C minor and Mozart's Quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments. The performers were Mr. Redfern (flute), Mr. Norton (clarinet), Mr. Paersch (horn), and Mr. Lalande (bassoon). Mr. Whiteside presided at the pianoforte.

Newcastle.—The choir (which had been augmented for the occasion) of Elswick Road Wesleyan Church gave an excellent performance of Handel's "Messiah" on the 4th ult. The soloists were Mrs. Carruthers, Miss Ella Wilson, Miss Amy Stanners, Mr. Clavering Archer, and Mr. John Nutton. Mr. George Dodds conducted a very successful rendering of the familiar oratorio.

Newtown.—A meritorious performance of "The Messiah" was given by the Harmonic Society (comprising band and chorus of 150 performers), in the Victoria Hall, on the 12th ult., to a large and appreciative audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Jennie Pritchard, Madame Rina Robinson, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. L. R. Bowen. The band, led by Mr. W. S. Stephenson, was supplemented by pianoforte (Miss Lily Trew) and harmonium (Miss Edith Woolley). The obbligato to the air "The trumpet shall sound" was played by Mr. J. E. Morris. Mr. J. C. Gittins conducted.

Paignton.—The Juvenile Operetta Company brought its third season to a close, on the 18th ult., with two excellent performances of the comic opera "King Bulbous," the libretto and the music being respectively the work of Mr. P. H. Crib and Mr. H. Festing Jones. The favourite numbers were the duet for the Princesses (Misses A. Tatam and E. F. Goddard), Roberto and Burglar Bill's duet (Messrs. H. Higgs and H. D. Aplin), the "Echo" chorus, the Page's song (Miss W. Michelmore), and the Stately Dance in Act III., all of which were loudly re-demanded. Scenery, staging, and dressing were admirable. A capital string orchestra was led by Mr. R. Waycott, the whole performance being under the direction of Mr. Frank L. Harris.

Penrith.—The Penrith Musical Society gave a highly meritorious rendering of Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" on the 20th ult. The chorus lacked nothing in regard to efficiency and the band rendered the accompaniments in excellent style. The soloists were Madame Ruth Lamb, Madame Bertenshaw, Mr. Ben Davies (who specially distinguished himself), and Mr. Edmund Telfer. Mr. W. Gaggs led the band, Miss C. Varty and Miss M. Petrie presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively, and Mr. Crozier conducted a performance upon which he has every reason to be heartily congratulated.

Penzance.—The members of the Penzance Choral Society gave a very good performance of Somervell's "Power of Sound" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," in St. John's Hall, on the 11th ult. Miss Violet Nunn Miss Mason, Mr. J. K. White, and Mr. Beadsworth were the soloists. Miss L. M. Nunn was the leader of an excellent orchestra, and Mr. Richard White presided at the organ. Mr. J. H. Nunn, who has most ably presided over the Society for upwards of forty years, conducted with his usual efficiency.

Pietermaritzburg.—The Maritzburg Orchestral Society gave a concert in Scott's Theatre, on December 3, with great success. Its best achievement was Haydn's Symphony in D, which was rendered in an artistic manner, under the able conductorship of Mr. Campbell Rowland. The programme also included Mendelssohn's "Son and Stranger" Overture and German's Menuetto.

Snitterfield.—The thirty-ninth annual concert of the Snitterfield Choral Society took place in the Board Schools on the 4th ult., when a very creditable performance was given of Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," many of the choruses being rendered with quite the requisite crispness and verve. The principals were Mrs. Bell-Porter (the May Queen), Mr. Westlake (the Lover), and Mr. J. H. Maries (Robin Hood). The part of the Queen was effectively rendered by Miss Turvey, a member of the Society. The orchestra was under the leadership of Mr. A. H. Callaway, and Miss Elsie Garlick accompanied. The conductor, Mr. W. E. Bell-Porter, is to be congratulated on the success of his efforts and of those whom he so ably directed.

Stirling.—A highly meritorious performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt" was given in the Albert Hall, by the Stirling Choral Society, on the 11th ult. The oratorio having no overture was preluded by the "Occasional" Overture. The soloists were Miss Lena Pulvermacher, Miss Minnie Cullis, and Mr. Iver McKay, who all discharged their duties most satisfactorily. The high standard of the chorus-singing throughout was a most commendable feature of the performance, which reflected the greatest credit upon Dr. Allum, the painstaking conductor of the Society. The duet, "The Lord is a Man of war," was sung by all the tenors and basses of the choir, Mr. W. H. Cole's orchestra rendered valuable assistance in the accompaniments, and Mr. G. Scott Hunter presided at the organ with excellent effect.

Strabane (Co. Tyrone).—The Strabane Choral Society gave its first concert on the 12th ult., when a very successful performance of Gaul's "The Holy City" was given under the conductorship of Mr. C. J. Breman. Elgar's "The Banner of St. George" is to be the chief piece at the next concert. The Society numbers nearly ninety members.

Ventnor.—The Ventnor Musical Society performed Handel's "Jephtha" at its concert in the Assembly Rooms, on the 18th ult., in a manner calling for praiseworthy recognition. Thanks to the energy and ability of the conductor, Mr. Evan Jones (who also sang the tenor solos), the chorus sang with excellent precision and effect. The other soloists were Miss Edith Hensler, Miss Catherine Murray, and Mr. Henry Stanley. Miss Day presided at the pianoforte with marked ability, and Mr. A. Medley was an efficient organist. A small but efficient band, led by Mr. R. W. d'Anna, gave a good account of itself in the accompaniments to Handel's last oratorio.

Wellesbourne.—The Choral Society's first concert took place in the schoolroom on the 16th ult., when Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day" was capitally rendered by this young and enterprising Society. The solos were excellently rendered by Mrs. Bell-Porter, and the chorus gave a good account of themselves and the training they had received at the hands of their zealous conductor, Mr. Bell-Porter. The band, led by Mr. A. H. Callaway, with Mrs. Overbury at the pianoforte, rendered all needful help in the accompaniments. A crowded audience testified to the genuine pleasure the concert had afforded.

Wellington (New Zealand).—The Wellington Orchestral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Maughan Barnett, gave a concert in the Opera House on December 2. The programme consisted of Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture, Massenet's Suite "Scènes pittoresques," two movements from Rubinstein's "Feramors" ballet music, and works by Wagner, Berlioz, and Mascagni. The vocalists were Miss Maud Ross and Mrs. E. H. Mozar.

Widnes.—A successful performance of "The Messiah" was given on December 29, in St. Paul's Church, by an augmented choir, assisted by the Runcorn Orchestral Society (leader, Mr. W. B. Kay). Mr. E. Worrall (tenor) and Mr. W. E. Smith (bass) sang their respective solos with effect, whilst the soprano and contralto parts were most satisfactorily sustained by Masters Harold Dwerryhouse, John Hughes, John Marsh, and Horace Tebbutt. Mr. William Cooke, organist of St. Paul's, conducted, and Mr. A. H. Robinson, organist of St. Mary's Without-the-Walls, Chester, presided at the organ.

Wigan.—The Upholland Choral Society gave a creditable performance of Fox's "Jackdaw of Rheims" and Gaul's "Treasures of the Deep," on Wednesday, December 21, under the conductorship of Mr. C. H. Moody.——The Wigan and District Choral Society gave a very fine rendering of Handel's "Messiah" on December 26, also under the conductorship of Mr. C. H. Moody. Miss Teresa Blamy, Miss Jessie King, and Messrs. William Fell and David Hughes ably sustained the principal parts.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. H. N. Horton, to Holy Trinity, Maidstone.—Mr. Frank E. Bastick, to Parish Church, Yeovil.—Mr. Stanley Kirkness, Organist and Choirmaster to Poplar Wesleyan Church.—Mr. W. R. Morris, Organist and Choirmaster to Belmont Church, Hillhead, Glasgow.—Mr. P. Hermann Coscall, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Philip's, Battersea.—Mr. E. A. Abbott, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Andrew's College, Grahamstown, South Africa.—Mr. James S. Wellings, to St. Stephen's Presbyterian Church, Watford.—Mr. Walter S. Broome, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Leonard's Parish Church, Perth.

Choir Appointments.—Mr. Arthur M. Friedlander, Choirmaster to the Bayswater Synagogue.—Mr. A. Chanter (Bass), to the Presbyterian Church, Putney.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

M. E.—We have not heard of the immediate publication of a biography of Sir Sterndale Bennett. In addition to the notices in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians" and "The Dictionary of National Biography," there is a very interesting biographical paper on Bennett read by his friend and pupil, Mr. Arthur O'Leary, before the Musical Association, on April 3, 1882. It is published in the Proceedings of the eighth session of that Society, p. 123.

Amateur.—The mere repetition of one, two, three, &c., is not sufficient without the acquirement of rhythmic accuracy. The first thing is to feel the regular recurring accents, and then to master the niceties of the various sub-divisions of the beats. Your teacher will doubtless help you in this if you tell him of your difficulty. There is no reason why you should not attain to moderate proficiency by steady practice and perseverance.

M. B.—The only biography of M. Jacques Blumenthal that we know of is the notice contained in Fétis's "Biographie Universelle des Musiciens," which is epitomised in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians."

R. B. H.—We can only trace two of the six chant melodies you send us, probably the others are not correctly taken down. No. 2 is doubtless by Dr. G. M. Garrett and No. 6 by Sir G. J. Elvey.

A. D. (Auckland).—The full scores mentioned by Professor Prout in his "Instrumentation" Primer (p. 11) can be obtained at a very moderate price in the Peters' edition through Messrs. Novello.

R. Y.—It is quite impossible to say whether a musical prodigy will become a Mozart or a Beethoven. Time alone can tell as to the realisation of such a possibility.

H. J. St. B. C.—For a volume of carillon music, see "Les Carillons de Van den Ghyn," by H. van Elewyk, price about 10s. net.

Allegro.—Raff's "Polka de la Reine" may be played at about Allegro ($\frac{2}{4}$), ♪ = 184; Allegretto ($\frac{2}{4}$), ♪ = 160.

 Notices of Concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded to us immediately after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot possibly be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

HE SHALL SWALLOW UP DEATH IN VICTORY

BY

F. R. GREENISH, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Price Threepence.

(With charming, and perfectly easy, Solo for Soprano or Tenor.) Full of variety throughout, and presents no difficulty whatever to any average Parish Choir. Certain to rank in popularity with the Composer's previous successful Church Compositions.

"Our village choir of thirty voices sang your new anthem at our festival remarkably well. As you had stated, they found no difficulty in preparing it, and everyone was delighted with it."—Vicar of Country Church.

"The first and last choruses are bright and jubilant in character, the latter possessing considerable vigour, and these are effectively contrasted by intervening numbers having reference to the Redeemer's sacrifice. The voices are well written for, and the work shows the hand of an accomplished musician."—Musical Times.

"Another useful addition to the store of anthems for Easter and other festivals. Dr. Greenish writes music of the true Church type, though, as in the solos of this, he pays heed to the calls of modern feeling. The anthem is skilfully laid out for full chorus and semi-chorus, and has a pleasing soprano solo. It will be found acceptable to good choirs."—Musical News.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S

PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK
FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

The Chants contained in the above collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. 2 (No. 23, by Lord Mornington), which is included on account of its great popularity.

REVISED AND EDITED BY
SIR J. STAINER,
M.A., Mus.D., Oxford; Hon. D.C.L. and Mus. Doc., Durham.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

Verse by JAMES STRANG

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

CONTENTS.

Introduction and Chorus—"Toiling and toss'd on the restless sea."
Cradle Song—"Come, my baby, come away."
Chorus—"Oh, ho! for the winds that blow."
Ballad—"A mermaid dwelt in days of old."
Trio—"The twilight grey is falling."
Song—"O manly hearts that brave the sea."
Chorus—"Dark and darker grows the night."
Chorus—"A prayer for those at sea."
Intermezzo—"Break of day."
Duet—"Through golden mists of morn."
Cradle Song—No. 2.
Chorus—"Now let songs of gladness rise."

"This charming work bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. The libretto is of a high order of merit, and worth the music, which from first to last is attractive and without a dull page."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition. Taking the Cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

Price Two Shillings.

THE LAWLANDS O' HOLLAND. Old Ballad.

A SONG OF INNOCENCE. Poem by William Blake.

Price Two Shillings each.

"Dr. H. Walford Davies's settings of Rudyard Kipling's 'Our Lady of the Snows' and 'Hymn before Action' are stirring and spirited in no ordinary degree; not only are the melodies of entire originality and their treatment worthy in all respects of the composer's high position among the younger generation of English musicians, but the songs have the splendid swing and force that make for universal and permanent popularity. 'The Farewell' and 'Ye Jacobites by Name,' set by the same composer to Burns's words, are gloriously gallant and vigorous songs, and in Blake's 'Little lamb, who made thee?' Dr. Davies shows that he can represent the tender mood of the 'Songs of Innocence' no less successfully than the martial vein of the modern poet."—The Times.

SONGS by GRAHAM P. MOORE.

NO ANSWER. Poem by Robert Reinick.

WANDERER'S NIGHT SONG. Poem by Eichendorff.

TO THE ABSENT ONE. Poem by Goethe.

A RED, RED ROSE. Poem by Robert Burns.

THE DREAM OF YOUTH. Poem by Oelbermann.

HOW WONDROUS FAIR THOU ART. Poem by Strachwitz.

Price Two Shillings each.

"The songs are one and all the work of a sound musician, with something of his own to say, and a most graceful and effective way of saying it. 'No Answer!' and 'The Dream of Youth' will perhaps be the most successful, but cultivated amateurs will find in the version of 'An die ferne Geliebte' distinction and beauty of a rare kind."—The Times.

CONTAINING
600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS
BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,
Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A. E. A. D.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

A CANTATA

FOR TENOR SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 30.)

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
String Parts, 8s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 22s.; Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

. . . As clever, musicianly, and masterly in its way as anything its author has yet done. Moreover, it is full of a picturesqueness and a freshness that are rare even among much older composers. The part-writing is clear and eminently singable without ever being obvious, and the orchestration is vigorous and sometimes brilliant, though never too obtrusive. But it is even more in the invention of his themes than in his treatment of them, whether for voice or instruments, or both, that Mr. Coleridge-Taylor shines. Often and often again he happens upon a haunting theme or phrase, which clings to the ear because it is fresh and hitherto unheard. The first part of the tenor solo—the tenor being the only soloist employed—for example, is of exquisite beauty.

STANDARD.

Music which expresses with remarkable truth and force the wild environment of the poem. In its economic use of thematic material, reiteration of short and striking phrases, boldness of harmonic progressions and transitions, and picturesqueness of orchestration, the music has much in common with the style of Dvořák, but it also possesses a freshness and individuality which proclaim Mr. Coleridge-Taylor to be singularly gifted, and justify expectancy of works from his pen of great musical interest and value. "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" is set out for chorus and tenor solo, and the latter is the gem of the work. Tenor vocalists have rarely had a more beautiful and impassioned love-song written for them.

TELEGRAPH.

Reveals not only a remarkable gift of melody, but exhibits great variety and fertility of resource in handling his orchestra. . . . Let it suffice to note that a "motto" theme, heard both at the commencement and end of the work, is freely employed at various points on the journey. The narrative is carried forward by the chorus, one solo, for tenor, at "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" providing agreeable relief. The song is, indeed, charmingly melodious. . . . Just previously, the setting of the lines commencing "Then said they to Chibiabos" for chorus lightly accompanied, is quite pleasing, and a touch of humour illuminates the pages wherein is described the boastful character of Iagoo.

THE GUARDIAN.

We are free to express sincere admiration for his setting—by turns exhilarating and pathetic—of that portion of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" which describes the wedding feast of the hero. The composer has managed, with singular insight, to convey the impression of primitive gaiety natural to such an occasion and to such dramatis personæ. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a genuine tune-coiner; he also shows a remarkable command of the orchestra . . . while of the bulk of the work it would be true to say that no one but Mr. Coleridge-Taylor could have written it. The reception of the cantata was most enthusiastic. Indeed, the whole cantata has the quality, rare in modern music, of appealing immediately to the hearer. . . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is richly endowed with one sovereign antidote to satiety in his hearers—the capacity of indefinitely varying his themes; also that, while he excels in the musical delineation of primitive or even barbaric emotions, his melodies are always redeemed from triviality by some unexpected yet unstudied deviation from the obvious. Best of all, he shows a sensitive appreciation of romantic beauty. Nothing is finer in Longfellow's poem than the simple touch of the departure of the guests, leaving the hero alone "with the night and Minnehaha," a passage which is set to the most tender and haunting strain in the entire work.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It has the same strong vitality, the same youthful energy that characterised the Ballade. Here, where the composer has had more scope, he has shown even more convincingly his resources as a melodist. . . . The tunefulness that is manifested in every page of "Hiawatha" has the great charm of spontaneity, the melodies abound with life and energy, indeed, a large proportion of them have a distinctly dance-like rhythm. . . . There is, however, no want of variety in the music, which sweeps along with a force that carries all before it. . . . "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" proves, as might be expected, the most prominent feature of the work. It is, indeed, a remarkably beautiful tenor solo, melodious, sensuous, charmingly coloured, and thoroughly vocal and grateful to the singer. . . . Throughout the work the music is distinguished by unfailing resource, by a spring of melody that never runs dry, and by a picturesqueness that is in perfect keeping with the subject; in short, it is long since we have come upon a young composer whose work is not only so full of promise, but is in itself so fresh and well sustained.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

*UNA

Sixth and Seventh Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"'Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Ninth and Tenth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twentieth to Twenty-fifth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

Fifth and Sixth Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

*ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal Parts, each 1s. Words only, *7s. 6d.; †5s. per 100.

A NEW AND REVISED EDITION
(468 pp.)
OF
STAINER & BARRETT'S DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS

REVISED AND EDITED BY
SIR J. STAINER,
M.A., Mus.D., Oxford; Hon. D.C.L. and Mus. Doc., Durham.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

Cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

MISS CORDELIA GRYLLS
(SOPRANO)

First Vocal Recital, St. James's Hall, November 21, 1898.

Daily Telegraph, Nov. 24, says: "Miss Grylls has a soprano voice of decidedly agreeable quality. . . . Sings like an earnest student of her art—one in whose nature tact and true feeling have prominent places. Without doubt she will be heard of again."

Standard, Nov. 22, says: ". . . has a light soprano voice, very sweet in quality, and well cultivated. . . . She is certainly a charming singer."

The Times, Nov. 20, says: "Uses a fresh voice with discretion and skill. . . . Such unaffected singing will be always welcomed."

Referee, Nov. 27, says: "She has a delightful soprano voice, flexible and well produced, recalling that of Madame Melba. Her success was not for an instant in dispute."

Musical Standard, Nov. 26, says: "Her voice has a distinctive charm of its own . . . recalled the refined style of Madame Blanche Marchesi."

Address, 27, Adamson Road, Swiss Cottage, N.W.

MASTER ROLAND FORD

"CARACTACUS."—CHELTENHAM FESTIVAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Charles Knowles, the rising baritone who took a prominent part in the Leeds production, made an excellent impression in the title-part, his work throughout being characterised by keen musical and dramatic perception. In his first solo, 'Watchmen, alert, the king is here,' he was both forcible and dignified, while the more sympathetic qualities of his voice were displayed in the 'Lament,' in which he was efficiently supported by the chorus, and also in his pleading with Claudius in the final scene. His most successful effort, both from the artistic and popular standpoint, was in the stirring 'Leap to the light,' which was given with great spirit and superb effect, and stirred the audience more than any other number."—Gloucester Echo, Feb. 14, 1899.

"Mr. Charles Knowles greatly delighted his audience and showed himself equally at home in the tender and sympathetic as in dramatic outburst, as exemplified in 'Oh, my warriors, tell me truly,' which with the chorus had a very fine finish, and the applause broke forth before the final sustained note had died away; and in 'I have fought and I have striven' as well at the call to 'Leap to the light.'"—Gloucester Citizen, Feb. 14, 1899.

"Mr. Charles Knowles received such high encomiums from musical critics for his singing at the Leeds Musical Festival that his future success is assured. . . . Mr. Knowles, who was the soloist when the work was first produced at Leeds, sang with great force and point in the adjuration 'Watchmen, alert,' as the king and his host enter the camp; in the 'Lament' after the battle had gone against him, 'Oh, my warriors,' and in the intrepid bearing before the tribunal of the Roman Emperor. . . . As points of interest we may add that the Philharmonic pitch was used, whereas at Leeds and London—the only places previous to Cheltenham at which the cantata has been given—the low pitch was used."—Cheltenham Examiner, Feb. 15, 1899.

HULL VOCAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Charles Knowles, the baritone of the evening, is one of the most satisfactory singers we have met with for some time. He is fortunate alike as to style and method and he sings with feeling. This latter attribute seemed more highly exemplified in Maude Valérie White's passionate song 'Devout Lover,' which was given in response to the great applause which followed Mendelssohn's 'I'm a roamer.' Handel's grand old song 'Droop not, young lover,' was worthily rendered. It was the second item on the programme, by the way, and was encored, thus leading the way to Hatton's fine setting of Herrick's lines 'To Anthea.'"—Hull Daily Mail, Feb. 1, 1899.

ALEXANDER MUSGROVE

(BARITONE)
(Of St. James's Hall and Crystal Palace Concerts).
Address, 70, Berners Street, London, W.

MR. DANIEL PRICE

(BARITONE),
Westminster Abbey. Address, 5, Rutland Pk., Willesden Green, N.W.

MR. CHARLES TREE

BERLIOZ'S "FAUST."—"Mr. Tree has the histrionic instinct strongly developed. His dramatic delivery of the Mephisto music was startlingly realistic, and the effect was vivid in the extreme."—Ealing Guardian.

"GOLDEN LEGEND."—"The one member to break the bonds of austerity and give us humanity was Mr. Tree as Lucifer. He was very fine, vigorous, distinct, and correct. His heart was in his work."—Dover Telegraph.

GOUNOD'S "FAUST."—To the rôle of Mephisto Mr. Tree proved admirably suited. His delivery is highly dramatic, his voice of fine quality, and the sardonic and mocking nature of the part was excellently suggested."—Cheltenham Examiner.

"LIGHT OF THE WORLD" AND "ANCIENT MARINER."—Mr. Tree sang with fine effect. He has a wonderful voice and was altogether excellent."—Tunbridge Wells Courier.

"SAMSON."—His fine baritone was keenly admired. 'Honour and Arms' was magnificently rendered, and 'How willing' most sympathetic."—Wellingboro' News.

Address, 23, Clifton Road, Maida Vale, W.

MR. CHARLES WALTON

(BARITONE)
(Pupil of Andrew Black, Esq.)

"A very fine voice, splendidly developed. This, combined with great capacity, should give excellent results in the future."—Andrew Black.

"A splendid voice and already a skilful singer. I have great expectations for his future."—Adolph Brodsky.

Terms, Press notices, &c., 87, Werneth Hall Road, Oldham.

MR. EDGAR ARCHER

(PRINCIPAL BASS, City Temple).

"I have great pleasure in stating that Mr. Edgar Archer has a fine bass-baritone voice, sings well, and with admirable effect."—WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS, Principal, Guildhall School of Music.

MR. GRAHAM SMART

(SOLO BASS (Decani), St. Saviour's Collegiate Church).
For Oratorios, Concerts, &c.
N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork St., W.; or, 19, Lidfield Rd., Green Lanes, N.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

L.R.A.M. (BASS),
Of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

GAUL'S "UNA," BARNSTAPLE.—"Mr. H. Sunman, L.R.A.M., made his first appearance in North Devon. He possesses a robust bass voice of capital quality, and he sings with dramatic power. He won golden opinions on Tuesday."—North Devon Journal, Jan. 19, 1899.

"Mr. Sunman was a surprise to the audience. He proved to be what might be termed a 'bold' singer, his dramatic and artistic style and clearness of voice being much appreciated. . . . A duet, 'The Battle Eve,' by Mr. Collings and Mr. Sunman, was an exciting achievement, and the audience would not be content without a repetition."—Devon Gazette, Jan. 19, 1899.

ROSSINI'S "STABAT MATER," DUDLEY.—"Mr. Sunman paid his first visit to Dudley, and in every way was a great success. He has a sound, robust, and splendidly trained bass voice, whilst his articulation is clear and distinct. The difficult and extraordinary leaps the bass has to make in the stave were negotiated without apparent effort. 'Through the darkness' was very fine, as also was the inter-chorus recitative, 'Thou, Lord, hast tried our hearts.' Mr. Sunman had repeatedly to bow his acknowledgments to the audience."—Dudley Herald, Feb. 4, 1899.

ELGAR'S "CARACTACUS," CHELTENHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL SOCIETY.—"The bass soli (Arch-Druid, Bard, and Claudius) were in the able and experienced hands of Mr. Henry Sunman, an old favourite in the county, who, it is hardly necessary to say, did full justice to them. . . . The other vocal item was contributed by Mr. Henry Sunman, whose rendering of the recit. and air 'O ruddier than the cherry,' from Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' was just what was anticipated from a vocalist with a voice at once so powerful and so completely under artistic control."—Gloucestershire Echo, Feb. 14, 1899.

"Mr. Henry Sunman's fine rendering of the recit. and air 'O ruddier than the cherry' recalled memories of Santley on the same platform."—Gloucester Citizen, Feb. 14, 1899.

Address, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
MARCH 1, 1899.

MADAME ALBANI.

To have attained to the exalted position of a "Queen of Song" is an achievement of which the holder of that sceptre may justly be proud; but to have long held sway in the twin dominions of oratorio and opera betokens the possession of gifts as rich as they are rare. Such then is the undisputed heritage of the great singer who is known the world over as Madame Albani. It might naturally be assumed that an artist of her rank must be of foreign birth; but Canada can claim her as a favoured child of its Dominion. Therefore, Madame Albani is a British subject, and, to the honour of Greater Britain be it said, the fair songstress is a Colonial product.

Marie Louise Cécile Emma Lajeunesse (now known as Madame Albani) was born at Chambly, about fifteen miles South-east of Montreal. The village of Chambly stands on the River Richelieu, which connects the St. Lawrence with Lake Champlain. The magnificent scenery of the district makes it the most picturesque portion of old Canada. It is "a land of river and plain; of mountain, and tarn, and lake, and valley; but first and chiefly a river-land." Up to the beginning of the seventeenth century it was the happy hunting-ground of the Indians. But in 1609 Samuel de Champlain, a distinguished Frenchman, made his way from Mont Royal (Montreal) up the Richelieu river to the lake which now bears his name. Chambly derived its present designation from a Captain Chambly, an officer, under Champlain, of Louis the Fourteenth's batallions who "chased the Iroquois up the Richelieu and down the Mohawk valley." A view of the old fort of Chambly and its rapids—a very characteristic feature of that river-mountain district—will be found on p. 155.

The year of Madame Albani's birth is wrongly stated in the various books of reference; the actual date is November 1, 1852. She is the eldest daughter of Mr. Joseph Lajeunesse, a skilful musician, organist, and harpist, who still survives to enjoy his distinguished daughter's triumphs. Mr. Lajeunesse and his father were both natives of Canada, but his grandfather, like many others of his countrymen, emigrated from Brittany. On her mother's side, Miss Lajeunesse is of Scottish descent, her grandmother having been one Rachel McCutcheon.

A CHILD MUSICIAN.

To the question, "When did you begin music?" Madame Albani replies: "At the age of four years; and from that time till I was eight, I studied classical music as thoroughly as it was possible for any child to do. At eight I played Beethoven's sonatas and the principal works of Mozart, Haydn, and Handel. I could read them with ease, and every other description of pianoforte music came to me without the least difficulty. I was reared in an atmosphere of music and I used to practise five hours a day. I always had a voice as far back as I can remember, and I sang naturally as a child and long before I was taught singing. I used to improvise a great deal, and I played the violin, harp, and organ in addition to the pianoforte." Madame Albani dwells upon the importance of a thorough grounding in music during the earliest years of a really musical child. The study of all that is best in the most receptive period of a child's life widens its perceptions and is of incalculable benefit in the after life of an artist. Little Miss Lajeunesse was so busily occupied with her studies that she had no time for childish interests. Asked in later years by the writer of a magazine article about her "favourite doll," Madame Albani was obliged to reply: "I never had a doll!"

CHURCH CHOIR EXPERIENCES.

Upon the removal of the family to Montreal, the little singer went to the Convent of the Sacred Heart at Sault au Recollet to be educated. The Superior of the Convent, having discovered the great qualities of her pupil, persuaded her to abandon any intention she had of adopting a religious life. Emma Lajeunesse made her first appearance in public when she was eight years old. A Scotchman gave a concert at the Mechanics' Hall, Montreal, and, with that enterprise so eminently characteristic of his race, he persuaded Mr. Lajeunesse to allow his daughter to sing. The success was so complete that the little eight-year-old lassie had to give three concerts, and on each night the stage was strewn with flowers thrown at the feet of the blossoming vocalist. Just after she had entered her teens, Miss Lajeunesse and her sister "starred" in the Canadian provinces. But the first great event in the life of the gifted songstress happened in the year 1864, when her family removed to Albany, the capital of the State of New York. While still pursuing her studies, Emma Lajeunesse sang in the choir of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Cathedral, Albany. "I was engaged for three years there as first soprano," recalls Madame Albani, "although I was then but fourteen. The training I had already gone through stood me in good stead. Even at that early age I was able to sing all Mozart's and Cherubini's masses, and also Beethoven's great Mass in D. I am quite sure that to the singing and study of sacred music in those days I am greatly indebted for whatever success I may have since attained in oratorio singing. I have often heard the remark made, that singing such music when one is so very young must, or rather ought, to have hurt my voice; but this distinctly was not the case, and, indeed, if a voice be properly used it is never spoiled. And this is a truism I would earnestly impress upon all young singers, for it is the use and not the abuse of it which they should unceasingly bear in mind."

ORGANIST AT A CATHEDRAL.

An incident of those Albany days is interesting if only by reason of its prophetic nature. One Saturday the organist of St. Joseph's handed his soprano soloist a piece of music, at the same time saying to her: "I want you to learn this and sing it in church to-morrow. She had never before seen it. But when she began to study the music she became enraptured with it. The next day she sang the air with a fervour that ensured the success of her efforts and revealed its true beauties. It was "Hear ye, Israel," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." But she was not only a singer. The organist of the Cathedral at that time was "a little mad," and one Saturday he "ran away." As this gentleman had chosen the most inconvenient day of the week for his flight, there remained no alternative but to ask the solo soprano singer to discharge the duties of organist. This Miss Lajeunesse promptly did; and for six months she proved a very efficient stopgap. Moreover, she not only played the organ, but trained the choir in the various masses—no light task for a girl of her tender years. She was succeeded in her organist and choir-training duties by Mr. George Elbridge Whiting, the distinguished American musician and organist, now of Boston.

TO EUROPE FOR STUDY.

The fame of Miss Lajeunesse as a singer soon attracted the attention of the public, and especially of Bishop Conroy, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Albany, who strongly advised Mr. Lajeunesse to take his daughter to Europe for the purpose of having her remarkable talents developed under the care of proper masters. By the aid of her own savings and those of her father, and the proceeds of a concert given in Albany, plus a gift of £60 from the churchwardens, the necessary funds were raised.

DUPREZ AND LAMPERTI.

Miss Lajeunesse went to Paris, where she studied singing for a year under the celebrated tenor, Gilbert Louis Duprez, who was at the head of the French dramatic singers of his day. Upon his retirement from his professorship of singing at the Conservatoire, Duprez founded an "Ecole spéciale de chant" in Paris. One of his strong points as a singer was his "excellent declamation." This attribute he naturally instilled into his pupil, for which Madame Albani feels deeply grateful to him. Duprez had a little theatre in his atelier, and there his gifted young Canadian pupil sang the garden scene from "Faust." He said of her, "Elle est faite du bois dont on fait les grandes flutes." During her sojourn in the French capital Miss Lajeunesse did not neglect her theoretical studies, as she took lessons in harmony from Benoist, then professor of the organ at the Conservatoire.

Italy, "the land of song," is the Mecca of most aspiring vocalists, and from Paris Miss Lajeunesse, on the advice of Prince Poniatowski, went to Milan, where she became a pupil of the renowned teacher, Francesco Lamperti, "the very first master in the world"—who was, in fact, a prince of singing-teachers. Miss Lajeunesse remained with Lamperti a year. She justly pays a high tribute to her distinguished teacher. She says: "His is the pure Italian method. It is the only one by which an artist can sing properly; the only one which teaches the right and true production of the voice, and the right way of breathing—in fact, the only 'method' I am able to recognise. His care of his pupils was remarkable. He never allowed me to sing for more than twenty minutes at a time, and after that he insisted upon a rest of an hour. Indeed, this is a necessity with young artists, and a regulation about which Signor Lamperti was most severe."

Lamperti's method was thoroughness to a degree. He would even occupy an entire lesson with the mastery of one phrase of four bars. He kept his Canadian pupil for six months to the study of one opera, and that was "La Sonnambula." He used to say: "Once you can sing 'Sonnambula' properly, you'll be able to sing anything." Madame Albani says she has proved that he was quite right in his statement, and especially was it the proper training for Wagnerian opera. She says: "With regard to Wagner's music being supposed to injure the vocal organs, I can only say that if the method be good, nothing can hurt the voice. When the interpretation of Wagner's music has wrought havoc with the voice, it is because a young artist has attempted it without having first learnt to sing properly, and without having acquired the true method. To bear out my view, when Hans von Bülow heard me in 'Lohengrin' the first time I ever sang it, he said: 'If ever Mlle. Albani go to Germany, she will prove to the Germans that Wagner can be sung.'"

It was to his gifted pupil, Madame Albani, that Lamperti dedicated his treatise on the shake. "To say that I appreciated the work," she wrote in 1873, "it is sufficient for me to state that I am a pupil of the Maëstro Lamperti, and that I owe to him and to his method the true art of singing, so little known in these days." There was a time, however, when Madame Albani's shake seems to have been rather shaky. Once, during her student days with Lamperti, she sang a song in the presence of Prince Poniatowski, who said she had "no shake." "Never mind," said Lamperti, "she'll do it. She's like a bottle of soda-water; I have only to let go the cork, and out it comes!"

THE NAME "ALBANI."

"They are all wrong," was the verdict of a high official in the British Museum Library on books of reference. Whether such an assertion is too sweeping or otherwise need not be discussed here, but in the case of Madame Albani the information usually given in regard to the origin of her professional name is decidedly "all wrong." It seems a pity to put to death a pretty story, but the truth must prevail. The name "Albani" was not assumed by Miss Lajeunesse as a memento of the appreciation and kindness she had experienced in Albany. It happened thus. When the young diva was about to sign her first opera contract, her Italian master at Milan said that she could not possibly appear on the Italian stage under the name of Lajeunesse. He therefore selected for her the name of Albani, that being the patronymic of an old Italian family then defunct. "But did you know that I lived at Albany?" she asked. "No, I never heard of it," the Signor replied. An unusually curious coincidence, but it is absolutely true. The assumption of the name has not, however, been free from some strange results. When, in 1894, the great singer Madame Alboni died, the telegraphic wires bore the news to the good Canadians that their own Albani had departed this life! At one of the English musical festivals a farmer, who supplied the leading soprano with one of the necessities of life made out his little bill thus:

Madam L. Barny,
To Mr. Cross, Esq.

	s.	d.
21 pints of milk, at 1½d. per pint	2	8½

In making out his little bill, "Mr. Cross, Esq.," not only mis-spelled his customer's name, but charged her a penny too much!

FIRST APPEARANCE IN OPERA.

Mdlle. Albani—as she was then—made her first appearance in opera at the Opera House, Messina, in 1870. The work was Bellini's

CHAMBLY.—The Old Fort and the Rapids.

"La Sonnambula," and the character was, of course, Amina. Her success was acknowledged both before and behind the curtain. At the finish of the first act her brother and sister artists lifted up the young débutante and almost carried her to her room. At the close of the opera the public recalled her no less than fifteen times.

The success of the young Canadian singer reached London; but it is probably due to the similarity of her name to that of Alboni that her triumphs were at once recorded in a musical paper. Mr. J. W. Davison, the editor of the Musical World and the distinguished musical critic of The Times, was not above making a pun when he had the chance, even upon a name. This is how he punned upon a certain singer. (Musical World, March 12, 1870):—

> Messina.—A new diva, a star of the first magnitude, is said to have made her appearance here. The lady's name is Signora Albani. If she only resembles her great predecessor, Madame Alboni, as nearly in her voice as in her name, the musical public will have good reason for being content. Recollecting, however, the very numerous occasions on which prime donne who were to surprise the world have falsified the favourable prophecies so recklessly promulgated about them, we have some slight misgivings that Signora Albani may turn out a second Alboni, with a difference.

FIRST APPEARANCE IN LONDON.

Soon after she had appeared at Messina Mdlle. Albani sang at Malta. Here her remarkable performances attracted the attention of Colonel McCrea, commanding the Royal Artillery in the island, who communicated with the late Mr. Frederick Gye, then the impresario of the Royal Italian Opera. The result was that Mdlle. Albani was engaged for the Royal Italian Opera season of 1872. She made her first appearance in England on the stage of Covent Garden Theatre, under Mr. Gye's management, on April 2, 1872, as Amina in "La Sonnambula." Some of the musical critics were rather cautious than otherwise in estimating the qualifications of the young prima donna in regard to this and her subsequent performances in other operas. At the end of the season one London newspaper of repute said:—

> The position of the Canadian songstress has yet to be determined: her most ardent admirers rely on her future. Qui vivra, verra.

The Musical Times of May, 1872, extended a friendly hand to the gifted new-comer in the following words:—

> The great event of the month has been the success of Mdlle. Albani, who made her début as Amina in "La Sonnambula." With a genuine soprano voice, a facile and unexaggerated execution, and a remarkable power of sostenuto in the higher part of her register, this young vocalist at once secured the good opinion of her audience, and gradually advanced her position throughout the opera until the final "Ah non giunge," her brilliant rendering of which produced a storm of applause which could only be appeased by her appearing three times before the curtain. As the heroine in "Lucia di Lammermoor," Mdlle. Albani again asserted her right to the highest place as a lyric artist; and there can be no doubt that future performances will fully justify the verdict so unanimously and unmistakably pronounced upon her first appearance.

OPERA.

To enlarge upon Madame Albani's operatic achievements at home and abroad would be to repeat an oft-told tale, in which the words "triumphant success" are interwoven throughout. Her répertoire includes

"La Sonnambula"	Bellini.
"Mefistofele"	Boïto.
"Lucia di Lammermoor"	Donizetti.
"Linda di Chamounix"	"
"Faust"	Gounod.
"Huguenots"	Meyerbeer.
"Mignon"	Ambroise Thomas.
"Hamlet"	" "
"La Traviata"	Verdi.
"Rigoletto"	"
"Ballo in Maschera"	"
"Otello"	"
"Flying Dutchman"	Wagner.
"Tannhäuser"	"
"Lohengrin"	"
"Tristan und Isolde"	"
"Die Meistersinger"	"

One or two incidents of her operatic career are of special interest to musicians. She appeared as Elsa and Elizabeth in Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser" respectively at the first performances of these operas by Wagner in London—"Lohengrin," May 8, 1875; "Tannhäuser," May 6, 1876, both operas in Italian at Covent Garden, under Mr. Frederick Gye's management. She had, however, sung in "Lohengrin" in America the winter before she sang in it in London. In 1887 she sang in "Lohengrin" in German at the Royal Opera, Berlin, at which the Emperor William I. was present. The performance was so successful that he called Madame Albani to his box and conferred upon her the title of "Hof-Kammer-sängerin" (Court singer).

Madame Albani spares no pains in preparing her work. The word "trouble" is unknown to her in this connection. She throws her whole being into everything she undertakes to do. When she was preparing "Mignon" and "Hamlet" she proceeded to Paris for the purpose of studying both operas under the personal influence of M. Ambroise Thomas, their composer. In order to acquire the true Wagnerian traditions for the part of Isolde in "Tristan," she went to Frankfort to study under Dr. Rottenberg, and with Wüllner at Munich for the traditions of "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," and "The Flying Dutchman." In regard to the all-important matter of preparation, Madame Albani observes:—

"I would say to a student: 'Study the notes, the words, the intention, and meaning of everything—think these thoroughly out, gather it all up into one consecutive whole, and then add to it any genius you may have of your own. And in so doing be not discouraged if you fail immediately to obtain the desired result; but the more earnestly persevere in your idea.' In studying a new work I have many times failed to reach the effect for which I was striving; but I have worked on, and perhaps at the rehearsal, or maybe at the first performance, it has come to me quite unexpectedly and as a great surprise, and, I may even say, like an inspiration. This I have looked upon as a reward for hard work, and only those who have experienced it can know what a sweet reward it is."

ORATORIO.

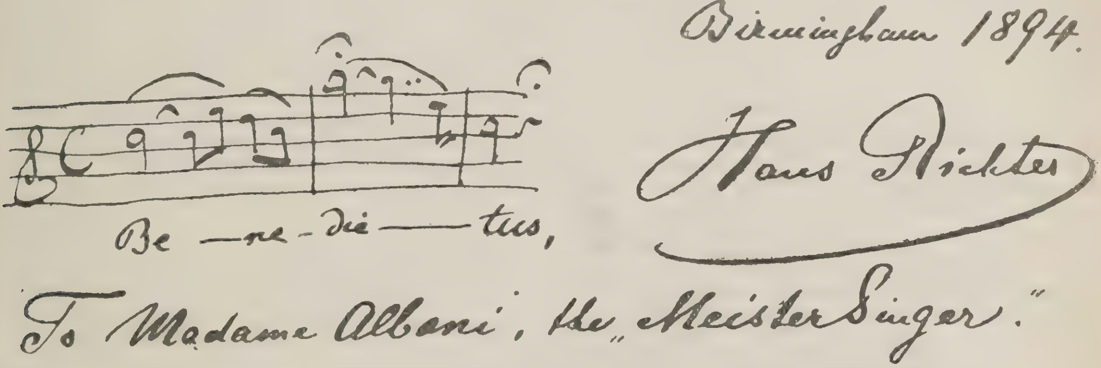
For more than a quarter of a century Madame Albani has been the bright particular star at the various English musical Festivals. In the year of her début in opera at Covent Garden (1872) she sang at the Norwich Festival. In the following year her name appears amongst the list of artists at Birmingham, where, with one exception, she has sung at every Festival since. At first she only sang detached sacred songs and operatic airs, and not in a complete work. Her entry into the region of oratorio was due to Costa. After she had sung the solo in Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," at one of the Birmingham Festivals, Costa said to her: "You must go in for oratorio." She did, with what result is too well known to be enlarged upon here. In addition to all the standard oratorios—e.g., "The Messiah," "Elijah," the "Creation" (a special favourite of hers), &c.—she has created the soprano part in the following amongst other works, the majority of which have been specially written for her :—

"Martyr of Antioch" (Sullivan), Leeds, 1880.
"Golden Legend" „ „ 1886.
"Redemption" (Gounod), Birmingham, 1882.
"Mors et Vita" „ „ 1885.
"The Spectre's Bride" (Dvorák), Birmingham, 1885.
"St. Ludmila" „ Leeds, 1886.
"The Story of Sayid" (Mackenzie), Leeds, 1886.
"Ruth" (Cowen), Worcester, 1887.
"Requiem" (Stanford), Birmingham, 1897.
"Te Deum" „ Leeds, 1898.

THE QUEEN.

Madame Albani has long been a favourite with Her Majesty the Queen, who in bygone years charmed Mendelssohn by her own excellent singing. At Old Mar Lodge, she was, for twelve years, a near neighbour of Her Majesty. The great singer was a frequent guest at Balmoral. On these occasions she would sing her solos from the new festival works she was at that time preparing. Thus the Queen, ever interested in all that is happening, heard the soprano solos in these oratorios and cantatas before they were heard by the general public. In addition to the many verbal expressions of her great appreciation of the renowned singer's exceptional gifts, the Queen has presented Madame Albani with numerous tangible tokens of her regard. The following is a list of the gifts she has received from Her Majesty :—

Necklace and Cross of pearls and diamonds; Photograph of the Queen and Princess Beatrice in velvet and gold frame; Enamel and pearl brooch; Gold inkstand, set with precious stones; Gold-mounted scent bottle, with Royal monogram in enamel; Emerald and diamond bracelet; Sapphire and diamond porte-bonheur; First Jubilee brooch, diamonds, &c.; Second Jubilee brooch, diamonds, &c.; Victoria Badge in solid gold and precious stones; Umbrella, enamel and diamonds in the handle; the Queen's book, "Leaves from our Journal in the Highlands," with autograph inscription; Boehm's bust in bronze of the Queen; several photographs and Jubilee portraits, all signed.



Birmingham 1894.

Be—ne-dic—tus,

Hans Richter

To Madame Albani, the „Meister Singer."

"THE MEISTERSINGER."

Madame Albani's autograph album is a very interesting and precious volume. Headed with the signature of the Queen, it contains the autographs of nearly every member of the Royal Family, also of the Danish Royal House, the Czar and Czarina of Russia, and many other distinguished personages. One of the most interesting to musicians is that of Hans Richter, which "the Meistersinger" has kindly allowed to be re-produced in fac-simile specially for this article. The musical excerpt is the opening phrase of the Benedictus of Cherubini's second Mass in D minor, sung—and admirably sung—by Madame Albani at the Birmingham Festival of 1894 under Dr. Richter's conductorship.

PERSONALIA.

Mention has already been made that Madame Albani made her first appearance in London under the auspices of the late Mr. Frederick Gye, manager of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. On August 6, 1878, at the Bavarian Chapel, Warwick Street, Regent Street, Miss Lajeunesse was married to Mr. Ernest Gye, the eldest son of her impresario. Thenceforth Madame Albani-Gye took up her abode in England. But, like other great singers, she has visited many different countries and charmed with her lovely voice countless listeners of various nationalities in various parts of the globe, including all European countries, the United States, Australia, and South Africa. At the present time she is on her way to South Africa for a second professional visit.

It would be quite impossible to enumerate all the great musical functions—including Handel Festivals and Provincial Festivals—at which Madame Albani has assisted. A few only must suffice for mention here. She sang at the opening ceremonies of the Colonial Exhibition (1886), the Imperial Institute (1886), the Royal College of Music (1894), all occasions on which the Royal Family were present, and at a concert given at the Royal Albert Hall in celebration of the Silver Wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales. She also sang the soprano solos in Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on June 20, 1897, this great occasion being the commencement of the Diamond Jubilee celebrations.

Two incidents in the brilliant career of the gifted singer may be recorded here. The first is another instance of the power of song to touch the human heart, and gives further proof—if, indeed, proof were needed—that music is not only the handmaid of religion, but also of charity in its more circumscribed sense. At a concert given at the Albert Hall in aid of the Home for Incurables, Madame Albani sang "Home, sweet home." A lady in the audience was so touched by it that she sent anonymously to the charity the sum of one thousand pounds. The other incident did not occur in the favoured West-end of the town at a brilliant concert, but away down the East-end of London on a recent Sunday afternoon. The place was Stepney Meeting House; the occasion an ordinary—or, to be exact, an *extra*ordinary—meeting of "The Men's Sunday Union," held on the opening day of the present year. With her characteristic kindness of heart Madame Albani went to the East-end on that foggy day and delighted hundreds of working men. She sang to those hardy sons of toil "Angels ever bright and fair" (with "Home, sweet home," as an encore), "The Star of Bethlehem," and, subsequently, "God save the Queen," the huge audience lustily joining the great singer in a repetition of the first verse of the National Anthem. That the music of her sweet voice moved those men was self-evident. Their lives were for the moment made sweeter, and who can tell what permanent brightness entered into their hearts through those thrilling strains?

SOME RECOLLECTIONS.

VII.—An "Amazing Transaction."

On one occasion the late Henry F. Chorley used the words quoted in the sub-title. What the occasion was and what the circumstances surrounding it, I am about to describe as fully as may be without abuse of confidence.

Sometime in the sixties—I do not remember precisely when, if, indeed, I ever knew—Julius Benedict and Chorley entered into the close art-relationship which necessarily exists between composer and librettist. The critic of the Athenæum, as most people know, sometimes varied his labours by providing musicians with "words." For Benedict he wrote the books of "Red Beard" and "St. Cecilia"; for Sterndale Bennett, that of the "May Queen"; for Vincent Wallace, one version of the "Amber Witch"; for Henry Leslie, "Judith" and "Holyrood"; and for Sullivan, the "Sapphire Necklace" and "Kenilworth." By the time the last of these was finished Chorley could boast of fairly large experience in such work. It should be noted, however, that the libretti just mentioned are, as to text, creations, not compilations. The author had yet to show what he could do in the manipulation of passages from Scripture with a view to a Biblical oratorio, and for this an opportunity came when he proposed to Benedict, or Benedict suggested to him, that they should together take in hand the story of "St. Peter."

The choice of subject was, if not exactly imprudent, open to some objection because of inherent difficulties such as those which influenced Mendelssohn when he abandoned his idea of bringing "the two chief apostles and pillars of the Christian Church side by side in oratorio." Mendelssohn had already written "St. Paul," and it was only natural that he should strongly desire to produce a "St. Peter" as its companion—in some sort its complement also. The reasons which turned Mendelssohn aside from the so-called chief of the apostles to the undoubted head of Israel's prophets were, however, not perceived by Benedict and Chorley, or, if seen and examined, not regarded as insuperable. "St. Peter" it was to be, and the librettist in due time handed the "book" to his associate that it might be clothed with music.

The first hitch now occurred. Benedict read through the libretto with increasing dismay. He pronounced it impossible, and, laying the MS. aside, turned his attention to other matters. I do not know it as a fact, but it is a reasonable supposition that, from time to time, the librettist enquired about the progress of the oratorio. If he did, Benedict probably hinted at what he conceived to be the defects of the "book." But neither then, nor afterwards, would Chorley listen to suggestions of revision. What he had written he had written. His own judgment approved, and, as far as he was concerned, nothing more could or should be done. At that stage the matter remained till, in June, 1869, the Birmingham Festival committee accepted the offer of a "St. Peter" from Benedict as one of the novelties to be produced at the music-meeting of 1870. This involved a crisis. What was a poor composer to do under such circumstances? Should he use the libretto as it stood, or procure another, or adopt a middle course by himself making such changes as he thought desirable? Of these three lines of action, the first was "impossible"; the second involved a serious affront to Chorley; the third, as far as it was a temporising policy, seemed the least unpromising, and Benedict adopted it. But while revision by the composer promised to keep the door open for the librettist should he change his mind, the question arose as to what could be done if he remained obstinate. Possibly Benedict tried his hand at emendations. On that point, however, I have no evidence. Once or twice he spoke to me of his dilemma, shaking his head anxiously at the omens which pointed to loss of the opportunity at Birmingham. The midsummer of 1869 came and nothing had been done. But something had to be attempted then or never; hesitation gave way to action, and the almost despairing composer wrote to me, begging my help in revising the libretto. Never did any letter astound me more. I had been professionally connected with musical literature only four years, and was almost entirely lacking in experience of such work as that to which Benedict invited me. Moreover, there was the objection that participation in interference with the libretto of such a man as Chorley would be absolutely presumptuous, and even of questionable morality. I laid that point before Benedict, but he put it aside at once. The libretto, he said, was his; he had bought it and paid for it; he could do with it as he pleased, especially as all the words were taken from the Bible, Chorley having done no more than select them and arrange the scenes. Though flattered by the composer's offer, as any ambitious novice would be, I was still doubtful as to accepting it. In this fix I consulted friends older and wiser than myself, among them J. W. Davison, who professed not to understand the scruples which weighed upon my mind. But I now know that those scruples were entirely correct. Possession of a work of art, or of literature, implies no right to make changes in it against the wish of the originator, and all who take any part in such an operation are hopelessly wrong; absolutely without excuse. It may, perhaps, be urged, as regards myself, that the temptation was great, and that the opinion of my elders and superiors necessarily carried weight. But I disdain to take refuge behind pleadings of any sort. Since that time I have written and compiled many libretti and can now put myself in Chorley's place. He did well to be angry. Whether he was also right in declining to meet Benedict on the question of revision is another matter, because, after all, a composer stands entitled to a voice in determining his text. Benedict's initial mistake lay in accepting and paying for the book before having given it the careful consideration which later on made its unsuitableness clear to him. That was entirely his own fault. Caveat emptor.

Coming back to my story, I have to say that I called upon Benedict at his house in Manchester Square, and went with him over the Chorley MS. Subsequently, the "book" was sent to me for more deliberate study; the result, to my mind, being that Benedict was absolutely justified in regarding the libretto as impossible. A more rambling, disjointed, ineffective thing of the kind I had never seen before, and have never seen since. Setting to work upon its improvement, we began by making changes here and there—patching up, so to speak; but the futility of that course soon became apparent. I saw, and Benedict with me, that, apart from the opening scene between John the Baptist and the people, the entire work would have to be re-constructed. This was anything but pleasant for the anxious composer, who, between his obligation to the Birmingham committee and his dread of offending any man who wrote for the press, was in worse case than a mariner with Scylla to starboard and Charybdis to port. Nevertheless, we worked on. It should be said here that Benedict kept Chorley informed of what he was doing. I emphasise the he because my position was simply advisory, involving neither responsibility nor publicity. The librettist was, of course, furious, and a sharp correspondence went on between the man of letters and the man of notes. Much of this I saw. But recollection of the points involved has become vague through lapse of time. From Benedict's short and hurried notes to me (these have been preserved) I gather that Chorley remained obstinate on the question of revision. "I told him," wrote the composer, "that I could not admit his right of claiming implicit and slavish submission to every word he had selected from the Scriptures." That, however, was Chorley's demand, and thus the situation remained hopeless.

It is not difficult to understand Benedict's perplexity in the entanglement which had arisen. Almost as much as Meyerbeer, he feared to make an enemy of any man who had a sharp pen and commanded a large circulation. Chorley was such a man in a very special degree. He could say the most cutting things in the fewest words of any journalist I ever knew, and he had made the Athenæum very powerful in all that concerned music. It has, therefore, ever been a marvel to me how the composer of "St. Peter," harassed by dread of public discussion, and with many irons in the fire of various kinds, contrived to push on with his big work as he did. The poor gentleman often looked upon his task with trepidation. "Whether I shall be able," he once wrote, "to accomplish the amount of work before me, that's the question, and the thing seems almost impossible, and beyond my powers." On another occasion he said: "You will be ready in good time. Would I could say as much of myself. The amount of work to be done is perfectly appalling." So indeed it was; but Benedict did not seem to have measured the extent of his own powers. Wonderful to relate—how wonderful nobody knows better than myself—the oratorio was ready at the time appointed, and had its first hearing on one of those memorable days which witnessed the crowning catastrophe of Sédan and the downfall of the Second Empire.

Not having a file of the Athenæum at hand, I am unable positively to say whether Chorley came out in print against what he styled an "amazing transaction" before "St. Peter" was produced. My impression is that he did not, but lay low and said nothing in hearing of the public. If, however, his silence excited hope that the matter would pass without declared warfare, that hope was doomed to disappointment. Chorley's friend, C. L. Gruneisen, first opened fire, but nobody minded him, save, perhaps, Benedict himself. His thunder was of the theatrical sort; his bluster was hollow-sounding, and if anybody cried, "Let him roar again," it was simply that there might be provocation to another laugh. By-and-bye, the great gun of the Athenæum boomed, which was another matter altogether. Alas for the poor composer, who then found himself in the position to which he so greatly objected! The circumstances in dispute at that closing stage of the affair are of no interest now. Enough to state that on one point a question of personal veracity arose, and then it became necessary for Benedict to defend himself.

On the point referred to the composer had an excellent case, and in other respects was in a position to make a damaging retort. But he hesitated. He was all fears; anticipating sore mischief from the vindictiveness of his opponents. Again and again Davison and myself urged him to reply in the columns of Chorley's own paper, but he let "I dare not" wait upon "I would." At last, however, he consented to meet us and come to a decision one way or another.

My recollections of our meeting are quite clear, for, in truth, it was an occasion not easily forgotten. There is an old saying that one man can lead a horse to water, but two cannot make him drink. Our difficulty lay in persuading and stimulating a timid man to face his opponents in the open and confound them with a good case. Proceedings began with dinner, which Benedict showed an unusual disposition to prolong. Not that he ate or drank other than in extreme moderation. He talked freely, however, on subjects unconnected with that which had brought us together, his evident desire being to get the evening over without much reference to Chorley, or to the necessity of defending himself in the columns of the Athenæum. This did not suit Davison at all. As a very old friend of the composer, the famous critic—then in a grave and resolute mood—was determined that Benedict should put his case before the public. After a reasonable time for coffee, and for talk that ranged from China to Peru, "J. W. D." rose, saying: "Now, Jules, let us get this business settled." Benedict murmured something and shook his head, but ultimately led us into his study. There he pleaded his inexperience in writing for the press; besides, would it not be wise for him to prepare exhaustive notes on the matter at issue—notes which we might think over privately and discuss at a future meeting? We held that it would not be wise; that there was nothing like the time present; that the reply should appear in the next issue of the Athenæum; and so on. "Well," said he, taking up a pen, "you must help me in composing the letter." "That," answered Davison, "we are quite willing to do," and then began a task absolutely unique in my experience. Though brought to the point of writing, the agitated composer looked at every phrase suggested to him, proposing either to leave it out or to tone it down. We had to fight him inch by inch, and fight him we did, but making so little progress that the small hours of the morning had passed before the draft was complete. The last sentence shaped and written, Benedict suggested that enough had been done for that time. He would make a fair copy next day and post it to the editor. Davison promptly vetoed the proposal. He was there to see the thing through, and would not leave the house till he had done so. All escape barred, our reluctant friend made a fair copy of the letter (which Davison took care to read), enclosed it in an envelope, addressed it, stamped it, and laid it on the table. I noticed that Davison drew it towards him, apparently in a casual way, and that it was in his hand when we rose to depart. In the hall my companion said, "We will post the letter, Jules; then all will be right." "Oh, no," returned Benedict, "I could not think of your taking that trouble. I will send a servant with it in the morning." Davison laughed pleasantly, with a twinkle in his eye: "No trouble at all," said he; "there is a pillar-box over there by the railings." Benedict's last effort had failed. The letter was posted, and duly appeared in print. That was my closing concern with the controversy according to "St. Peter."

THE CENTENARY OF HAYDN'S "CREATION."

One hundred years ago—on March 19, 1799—Haydn's oratorio of the "Creation" was first publicly performed. In wishing it many happy returns of the day—or of the century—a few words about the birth of the old "Papa's" melodious oratorio may form a pleasant retrospect.

The actual first performance of the work was in April, 1798, but this was of a private nature, being given in the Schwarzenberg Palace, Vienna. On that occasion some Viennese noblemen defrayed all the expenses and generously handed the entire proceeds, about £320, to the composer. Haydn, who conducted, was unable to describe his sensations during the performance. He said: "One moment I was as cold as ice, the next I seemed on fire."

But our interest at this time is centred in the initial public presentation of Haydn's familiar work. The play-bill announcing the first performance had a very ornamental border and was, of course, in German. The following is an English version of its text:—

To-day, Tuesday, 19th March, 1799,
Will be performed at the Imperial Court Theatre, near the Burg,
The Creation,
An Oratorio
Composed by Mr. Joseph Haydn, Doctor of Music, and Chapel Master to Prince Esterhàzy.

Nothing can be more flattering to Haydn than the applause of the public. To deserve this has ever been his earnest endeavour; and often, indeed more often than he could have expected, has he had the happiness of obtaining it. Though he hopes that the work herein announced may be accepted in the same feeling that, to his heartfelt comfort and thanks, he has met hitherto, yet he wishes that in the event of an opportunity presenting itself for the expression of approval, he may consider the same a most valuable sign of satisfaction, but not a command for the repetition of any one piece, otherwise the exact connection between the several parts, from whose uninterrupted sequence the effect of the whole is intended to spring, must necessarily be destroyed, and, moreover, the pleasure considerably lessened, the expectation of which a too favourable repute may, perhaps, have raised in the public.

To commence at 7 p.m.

Prices as usual.

Book of Words to be obtained at the Box Office free of charge.

A few days afterwards Haydn attained the age of sixty-seven years. He had even passed into his seventh decade before he began to compose the great work which has given pleasure to numberless hearers throughout all these years. The spirit in which he set about his task is evidenced in his own recorded words: "Never was I so pious," he says, "as when composing the 'Creation.' I knelt down every day and prayed God to strengthen me for my work." Usually a quick worker, Haydn took nearly two years to compose the "Creation." It is said that he remarked: "I spent much time over it, because I intend it to last a long time." Haydn's presentiment has come to pass as far as England is concerned, and there is no reason why the bright genial strains of his music should not experience another century of its existence.

The score was published in Vienna in 1800, by subscription, and no less than 510 copies, nearly half the number subscribed for, were for England. In fact, the title-page was printed both in German and English, the latter of which reads:

The Creation: an Oratorio composed by Joseph Haydn, Doctor of Musik, and Member of the Royal Society of Musik, in Sweden, in actuel (sic) service of His Highness the Prince of Esterhazy. Vienna. 1800.

The first performance of the "Creation" in England—Covent Garden Theatre, March 28, 1800, under John Ashley—gave rise to a curious incident. Ashley forestalled Salomon, Haydn's friend, in getting a score of the work from Vienna. He received the copy on March 22, when he immediately dessicated the book and set a number of his friends to work to copy the band and chorus parts for 120 performers. So expeditiously was the process of transcription done and the music learnt and rehearsed—if, indeed, it was not performed prima vista—that the performance actually took place six days after the single copy had arrived! When Mr. Harris, the then proprietor of Covent Garden Theatre, complimented the industrious band of copyists upon their extraordinary achievement, the chief copyist replied: "Sir, we have humbly emulated a great example. It is not the first time that the Creation has been completed in six days."

Mr. Edward Elgar has several interesting compositions "on the stocks." Chief among them is the new symphony for the Worcester Festival, which is to bear the title "Gordon." As in the case of Beethoven's No. 3, Mr. Elgar has selected a great hero for his theme, though one of a very different type from that of the "Eroica." The extraordinary career of General Gordon—his military achievements, his unbounded energy, his self-sacrifice, his resolution, his deep religious fervour—offers to a composer of Mr. Elgar's temperament a magnificent subject, and affords full scope for the exercise of his genius; moreover, it is a subject that appeals to the sympathies of all true-hearted Englishmen. A "song cycle," to be sung by Miss Clara Butt at the Norwich Festival, "progresses merrily." A somewhat novel composition, just completed, is a set of symphonic variations on an original theme, thirteen in number. We should not be surprised if the composer calls the finale the fourteenth (which might possibly include "a chord of the thirteenth") in order to avoid the ill-luck which some curious folk attach to "the baker's dozen." We understand that in these variations Mr. Elgar has sketched portraits of his friends—that is to say, he has looked at the theme through the personality (as it were), if not the spectacles, of thirteen other good men (or women) and true. This is not only a novel idea, but one that will be looked forward to with unusual interest and, perhaps, not a little curiosity. The work will be performed for the first time in the spring at an orchestral concert in London.

The Musical Arts Society, of New York, recently offered a prize of 250 dollars for the best à capella chorus, open to any American musician, which has been won by Mr. Horatio W. Parker, for a composition entitled "Astant Angelorum Chori."

A counterpoint controversy has recently been agitating the correspondence columns of a contemporary. The said question had its origin in a specimen working of a counterpoint exercise in "A Handbook of Examinations," by Mr. E. A. Dicks. In order to obtain some fresh light on the subject from an authoritative source, we submitted the example to Professor Rheinberger, one of the greatest living authorities on counterpoint and whose organ works are so well known and esteemed in this country. Professor Rheinberger, in addition to commenting upon the exercise and giving his opinion on the Canto fermo, has very kindly sent three workings by himself, which will doubtless be perused with unusual interest. It is more than probable that certain champions of the "strict" school will shake their heads at Professor Rheinberger's counterpoint, and not a few examiners and examinees will at once say that he would not pass the examination for the Associateship of the Royal College of Organists!

It is not now necessary to enquire whether this distinguished composer believes in two kinds of counterpoint—that of the so-called "strict" or dry-as-dust character of the dark ages, or that of a more natural (and therefore less artificial) kind suited to present-day needs. It raises this very important question: Are young musicians to be made to wear the straight jacket of an archaic texture in regard to their contrapuntal studies? Is their natural growth to be stunted by such an old-world process? Is the word "progress" absent from the contrapuntist's vocabulary? The following examples from the pen of Professor Rheinberger should go a long way towards eliciting a satisfactory answer to that question.

It may not be without interest to mention that a distinguished Doctor of Music on seeing the subjoined examples in manuscript, exclaimed: "This is not counterpoint [strict]; it is music"!!

[Translation.]

Dear Sir,—The example of Counterpoint from Musical News which you have sent me is not badly done; but the melody of the upper part is lacking in charm and moves too monotonously. Moreover, the harmony of the third and fourth bars—cannot exactly be called good, because in both chords the same leading note (F♯) predominates, in consequence of which the progression of the harmony halts: a minor triad instead of a chord of the sixth would have been better. I enclose three small and hurried workings by myself—two diatonic and one with modulations. It would have been preferable if the bass had been—because then the final bass note would have come on an accented (heavy) bar, as should be the case in a good and effective cadence.

With friendly greeting to my esteemed English fellow-musicians.—Yours, &c.,

Munich, Feb. 17, 1899. Jos. Rheinberger.

Herr Felix Weingartner contributed to the February issue of the Contemporary Review an important article, entitled "The Symphony since Beethoven. The new Classical School." This essay, from the pen of a distinguished modern conductor, who, in addition to being director of the Royal Opera, Berlin, is not unknown in London, will doubtless receive all the attention it merits. A few extracts will serve as samples of Herr Weingartner's views on symphonic composers. In his prologue, so to speak, he says, àpropos of Beethoven :—

> I would first of all establish the fact that not one of the symphonies composed since Beethoven has attained, let alone surpassed, the value of one of his, although many of them contain excellent music, and some display genius.

Haydn's symphonies are termed

> Enchanting masterpieces, sprung from his childlike and sunny mind, which, like all productions of true genius, will live for ever and outlast all so-called "schools."

Herr Weingartner writes about Schubert with genuine Groveian enthusiasm. He says :—

> He was the lyric musician κατ' ἐξοχήν. Whatever he wrote, the most serene as well as the most tragic work, seems, as it were, imbued with that infinitely soft, melodic element, which always lets us perceive his figure as if through tears of gentle emotion. A blissful warmth emanates from his music. Only think of the great Symphony in C major! . . . I cannot conceive how it is that there are still people so ill-humoured as to think this symphony too long, nay, even to ask for cuts to be made in it. I am not of their opinion, and I own that whenever I hear this work well conducted, or when I conduct it myself, I always experience the most happy sensations, and am absolutely intoxicated with music. It produces on me the effect as of flight through a bright ether. . . .

A comparison between Schubert and Beethoven is thus prettily expressed :—

> In the greatness and power of his sentiment, united to the tender, lyrical element, which runs through his works like a sacred thread, Schubert appears as the noble and, as it were, female complement of Beethoven; the two great symphonies, in which his important personalty is perfectly represented, are the only ones which approach those of Beethoven.

Schumann's symphonic method and his deficient technique in orchestration call forth the following remarks :—

> In place of the great and broad adagio of the Beethoven symphony, we find in Schumann graceful, melodious, lyrical intermezzi, which would suit the pianoforte far better than the orchestra. Indeed, if a Schumann symphony be well played as a pianoforte duet it is far more effective than in the concert hall. . . . His instrumentation is so thick and clumsy that, were one to play strictly according to his direction, no expressive orchestral performance would be possible. You may believe my experience as a conductor that nothing is so troublesome as the performance of a Schumann symphony, because almost all nuances of sound and the accentuation of the leading parts must be obtained through the conductor's own initiative, so that the composer's intentions, which come out clearly enough on the pianoforte, may also be recognised in the orchestra, and the performance may not be devoid of light and shade. . . .

In regard to "absolute" music and its "tedious dreariness" (excellent definition), the essayist observes :—

> Music which might be called "absolute" in a certain sense, i.e., which is put together without any instigation, a mere formal conglomerate of sonnets and trifling with phrases, may sometimes emanate from the pen of an art-philistine, but has no right to any attention on account of its tedious dreariness; now that Ferdinand Hiller and the brothers Lachner are dead it no longer does any serious damage. All other music betrays, even without song or programme, the mental influence which affected the composer when he wrote it. In this sense none of our great masters were absolute musicians—Beethoven least of all.

Brahms-worshippers will assuredly dissent from Herr Weingartner's strictures on their hero. The reference to the origin of the term, "the three B's"—Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms—is interesting :—

> Partisanship in music is doomed to failure. It is clear that the zeal of the "Brahmsians" could not rob Wagner's greatness of one jot, and, on the other hand, Brahms will occupy the place he deserves in the history of art, in spite of the too zealous attacks directed against him by certain Wagnerians by way of revenge. Time is the severest of judges. How far Brahms belongs to the immortals it is impossible to say as yet; we are still in the period of the funeral orations in his honour. There is no doubt that many, who are not blind adorers of his, would feel more sympathy with Brahms's works if he had not been put forward as a counterweight against Wagner—and again, if he had not been placed on a level with Bach and Beethoven. This last conceit originated in the well-known witticism of Bülow about the three B's, which, after all, arose from a merely personal motive. Bülow would never have dreamt of becoming a champion of Brahms but for his own painful breach with Wagner.

Again, still on the subject of Brahms, in which Herr Weingartner uses the word "indigestible"—a term which might prove a useful addition to the oft-times limited vocabulary of the musical critic :—

> By degrees I have learned to like this movement [the slow movement of the Second Symphony], which at first seemed indigestible to me; with many other compositions by Brahms I have not succeeded in doing this in spite of most sincere efforts.
> Nor can it be denied that this complicated character of the works produces a certain monotony, which is in marked contrast to real simplicity. At all times, and from every point of view, simplicity will always have a happy and stirring effect; it will ever appear new and young; in Haydn and Mozart we admire it even to-day, after the lapse of a century. But monotony, particularly if, as in Brahms's case, it results from over-complication, will at first cause us to meditate and search, but afterwards will fatigue us, and at last produce that dangerous and art-killing poison, feared by all like death—the poison of boredom.

The temptation to further quotation from this significant article, which should be read in its entirety, must be resisted. We will only add that the name of Dvorák is entirely absent, and that while not everybody will agree with Herr Weingartner in his enthusiastic eulogy of Anton Bruckner, those who can appreciate a thing of beauty will join in his regret that Hermann Goetz's delightful Symphony in F "has vanished from concert programmes." Why is this ?

"The Englishwoman's Year Book and Directory, 1899" (A. and C. Black), is an excellent book of reference of special interest to the fair sex, but it contains a mass of information that even mere man may find useful. In the half-a-dozen pages devoted to music we find it stated, under "Teachers," that "the average music-teacher in the average private school is under-paid, over-worked, and, as a rule, most inefficient." No one will deny that this is plain speaking. In regard to "orchestral players," we learn that "the most lucrative opening for female orchestral players at the present time is without doubt in the 'wind' department." There are now lady performers on most orchestral instruments, "but no woman has yet become a proficient trombonist." Here, then, is at least one opening for some fair damsel, whose rate of payment might be based on a sliding scale.

Bristolians and Bristol's chief musician, Mr. George Riseley, are to be congratulated upon the new organ which Sir W. H. Wills, at a cost of £5,000, has most generously promised to present to the rebuilt Colston Hall. This magnificent instrument, like the former one, will be built by Father Willis from a specification drawn up by Mr. Riseley, which has been prepared more from the point of view of variety than mere power. Here is the scheme in its skeleton form, with some of its chief features, together with a comparison of the number of stops in the old organ, also built by Mr. Willis, at a cost of £3,000, nearly thirty years ago.

Four manuals: compass, C C—C, 61 notes.
Pedal: compass, C C—G, 32 notes.

	New Organ, 1899. Stops.	Old Organ, 1870. Stops.
Choir	12	9
Great	12	12
Swell (excluding tremulant)	17	14
Pedal	10	7
Total sounding stops	51	42
Couplers	15	9

5 pistons to each manual.
5 composition pedals to the pedal organ.
Pedal board radiating and concave.
Tubular pneumatic action throughout.
25 independent reservoirs, in addition to (at least) 4 bellows.
Two 32-feet stops on the pedal organ, including a contra posaune, and a 16-feet Bombardon on the solo organ. The tremulant, which runs all through the swell manual, is acted upon by a draw-stop.

In recording this munificent gift to Bristol by one of its worthiest citizens, there comes to mind the old saying—slightly varied to suit the special circumstances of this (organ) case—"Where there's a Wills (and a Willis) there's a way"!

Madame Clara Samuell has been appointed a professor of singing and Mr. Edwin H. Lemare a professor of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music. The Academy, no less than the two recipients of this well deserved honour, is to be congratulated upon thus having acknowledged the gifts of two of its distinguished old students, both of whom are of English nationality. Madame Clara Samuell is a native of Manchester, where she was born August 29, 1857. As Miss Clara Samuell, she studied first in that city under Henry Wilson and subsequently at Milan. In 1876 she gained the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, and four years later the Parepa-Rosa prize. She has sung with much acceptance and unvarying success at the principal London and provincial concerts. She is an Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, and, in 1888, she was married to Mr. Henry R. Rose, an "old boy," and now a professor of the organ at the Institution in Tenterden Street, where many of his fellow students will remember him as the best player amongst Dr. Steggall's organ pupils.

Mr. Edwin Henry Lemare, born at Ventnor, September 9, 1865, was, in 1878, elected Goss scholar at the Royal Academy of Music in succession to Ernest Ford. He is a Fellow of the Institution of which he was a student and is now a professor. Mr. Lemare, who is also a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, has held the following organ appointments: St. John the Evangelist's, Brownswood Park; St. Andrew's, Cardiff, and the Public Hall there, he being the most successful of the 110 candidates who competed for the posts; the Parish Church, Sheffield; Holy Trinity, Sloane Square; and St. Margaret's, Westminster, an appointment he still holds. He has a high reputation as a recitalist. During his Sheffield period he gave over 300 recitals in the North of England and no less than 110 at the Inventions Exhibition of 1884, and he was the first Englishman to give organ recitals in Italy. His Saturday afternoon recitals, at St. Margaret's, Westminster, are attended by a highly appreciative audience, numbering upwards of 1,000 persons, and many have to be turned away. As a composer Mr. Lemare is widely known, more especially perhaps by his attractive and popular Pastorale in E for the organ. He was one of the few young men who attracted the attention of that prince of organists, the late Mr. W. T. Best, who on one occasion gave free rein to his fancy by designating Mr. Lemare, "Mr. Lehorse"!

Mr. Edwin Lemare, senior, the father of Mr. Edwin H. Lemare referred to above, has recently been presented with a handsome gold watch by the members of the Ventnor Choral Society, which he founded forty years ago and has since conducted with praiseworthy skill and enthusiasm. It is not often that a conductor can show so long a record, and Mr. Lemare is to be heartily congratulated on the event. The watch bears the inscription:

Ventnor Choral Society.
Fortieth Annual Concert
February 8th, 1899

Presented to Mr. Edwin Lemare by the members as a token of their gratitude, respect, and esteem.

Mr. John S. Bumpus has recently added to his fine collection of church-music lore a number of letters from various musicians to Miss Hackett, the "choristers' friend." This lady, it will be remembered, instituted, in the thirties, the Gresham Prize, which consisted of a gold medal of the value of five guineas for the best Church composition. It was for this distinction that Samuel Sebastian Wesley submitted his anthem "The Wilderness," but, alas! without success. Writing to his mother from Hereford on December 15, 1832, in reference to the parcel (sent by coach) containing the anthem, Wesley said: "You must keep father at home, as he will have to write something in a letter; it is only to write a motto in Latin. Tell him I wish it to be 'Let justice be done,' or, 'Weigh and consider,' or anything he chooses—only in Latin it must be. . . . If this music is not sent on Monday I am too late." It evidently was too late, as is proved by the following letter written by Mr. Alfred Novello to Miss Hackett:—

London, 67, Frith Street, Soho,
Nov. 12, 1833.

Madam,

One of the compositions sent in last year, "The Wilderness and the solitary place," was too late to be received, but the author understands that it is still in the umpires' hands, and he is anxious to let it be a candidate this year. If you would be so kind as to make the necessary enquiries it would add to the many [favours] already conferred on, Madam,

Your obliged and obedient servt.,
J. Alfred Novello.

This letter furnishes internal evidence that "The Wilderness" was a "candidate" for the prize of 1834 (not 1833, as is usually stated), in which year it was won by John Goss with his anthem "Have mercy upon me, O God." Mr. Bumpus's "Hackett" correspondence contains another letter which seems to throw some light upon Wesley's failure. One of the judges was R. J. S. Stevens, Gresham Professor of Music, organist of the Charterhouse, and composer of "Ye spotted snakes." Writing to Miss Hackett on the manuscripts submitted to him for the Gresham medal, Mr. Stevens said: "One copy is written so close that I have had much trouble in understanding it. It is a clever thing, but not Cathedral music ('The Wilderness')." While posterity has more than endorsed the verdict that this particular anthem is "a clever thing," it has thought fit to differ from Mr. Stevens in his opinion as to what is or what is not Cathedral music. Judged by the standard of all that is true in devotional fervour and depth of expression, Wesley's "Wilderness" is one of the richest gems amongst the jewels of English Church music.

Like the demand for rent, the issue of the "Dictionary of National Biography" comes round with quarterly regularity. Two volumes (56 and 57) have appeared since we last noticed the work, which is now brought down to the letter T. The first of these two instalments includes John Templeton, "Malibran's tenor," whose voice was of such an extended compass that Cooke called him "the tenor with the additional keys." There is a notice of Arthur Goring Thomas (who was born in 1850, not 1851), in which it is stated that "when about ten years old his power of extemporisation was remarkable"; but that "he lost it after he began to study seriously." The inference that might naturally be drawn therefrom is that "the schools" warped his spontaneity. It would be interesting to know of any similar instances. Volume 57, in addition to a notice of the late Berthold Tours (whose real christian name was Bartolomeus), contains the biographies of several church musicians, including James Turle and some of the old anthem composers—e.g., Tomkins, Travers, Tudway, Turner, and Tye. It has been said of old time that the Tomkins family "produced more musicians than any other family in England." In 1625 Thomas of that prolific ilk was paid forty shillings "for composing of many songes against the coronation of Kinge Charles." The organ copy of his "Musica Deo Sacra et Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ" (1668) "has directions for counting time by the pulse, and for the pitch to which organs should be tuned." John Travers (d. 1758), who is best known in Cathedrals by his Service in F and his anthem "Ascribe unto the Lord," copied, says Burney, "the correct, dry, and fanciless style of his master," Dr. Pepusch. How many other English composers have traversed the same dreary road? Tudway, of "collection" fame, was the second professor of music in the University of Cambridge. One of his puns, that relating to the restricted bestowal of patronage upon the members of the University is quoted: "The Chancellor rides us all, without a bit in our mouths." Dr. William Turner was a lay vicar of Westminster Abbey who lived to be almost a nonagenarian. His wife, to whom he had been married nearly seventy years, predeceased him only by four days; they were both buried at the same time and in the same grave in the West cloister of Westminster Abbey. Dr. Turner "bequeathed all his property to his wife, except one shilling to each of his five children." His daughter, Anne, married John Robinson, the composer of the well-known double chant in E flat and one of Sir Frederick Bridge's predecessors in the organistship of the Abbey.

Dr. Christopher Tye (d. 1572) distinguished himself by doggerelly versifying the Acts of the Apostles, of which he published the first fourteen chapters under the following title:—

> The Actes of the Apostles, translated into Englyshe metre, and dedicated to the kynges moste excellent maiestye, by Christofer Tye, Doctor in musyke, and one of the gentylmen of hys graces moste honourable Chappell, wyth notes to eche Chapter, to synge and also to play upon the Lute, very necessarye for studentes after theyr studye, to fyle theyr wyttes, and alsoe for all Christians that cannot synge to reade the good and Godlye storyes of the lives of Christ hys Apostles.

The first stanza may serve as a specimen of Dr. Tye's poetry:—

It chaunced in Iconium
  As they oft tymes dyd use,
Together they into dyd cum
  The Sinagoge of Jues.

The music, which, it should be remembered, was composed for "studentes to fyle theyr wyttes," was of a superior type to the "poetry." It gave birth to two of our familiar common metre tunes—"Windsor" (called "Dundee" in Scotland, and immortalised in Robert Burns's "Cotter's Saturday Night") and "Winchester Old." Two references to the garments of professors and graduates in music may be noticed. When Dr. Tye was presented for his degree of Doctor in Music at Cambridge in 1545, "he was permitted to wear the robes of a doctor of medicine," as there were no distinctive robes for musical graduates. In 1718, 173 years later, Dr. Tudway, Professor of Music at Cambridge, was "created" (whatever that may mean) by "the vice-chancellor and heads" in order that he might present two young musical graduates, which he did clad in "the Professor of Physick's Robes, pro hac vice, as Professor of Music." The "Dictionary of National Biography" is a most delightful companion for a quiet studious hour; and even he who runs through its pages may pick not a few enjoyable plums from these biographical branches.

Great interest will be aroused by the forthcoming first London performance of an important Wagner "novelty." We refer to "The Holy Supper of the Apostles," which is announced for production by the Royal Choral Society at the Albert Hall, on the 9th inst. In another column we have suggested that it was Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" that gave Wagner the idea of writing a sacred work dealing with an episode in the lives of the Apostles, and it may interest our readers to learn a few more details about its conception and completion. On the back of the "St. Paul" critique, given on page 171 of the present issue, is to be found the following scenario for the "Holy Supper":—

"The Feast (Gastmahl) of the Apostles."

1. Meeting. Oppressed feeling.
2. Bad news. Threats.
3. Prayer.
4. Inspiration. Great union of souls and of the righteous.

It will be noticed that the title was originally "Gastmahl," instead of the more impressive "Liebesmahl," which latter term, by the way, he afterwards used again in the Grail scenes in "Parsifal." Apart from this, the sketch has been strictly followed. Wagner held at that time a commission to write a work for the Dresden Männergesangfest (male-choir festival), which he was to conduct on July 7. As the "St. Paul" critique was written on or about April 9, it follows that the "Holy Supper" was conceived and composed within a few months. Moreover, from the draft of a letter to Herr von Lüttichau, director of the Dresden Opera, also printed in No. 125 of the Bayreuther Blätter, we learn that the composition cannot very well have been begun till May; as this draft is dated April 27, 1843, and on the back thereof the whole of the libretto is sketched out, but in somewhat unmusical prose, instead of the verse ultimately used.

If from the nine weeks thus left we deduct the time required for copying (or engraving and printing, as the case may have been) the parts for the large choir, and, what is even more to the point, for studying the complicated work, we must conclude that the actual composition could only have occupied him for a very short time, probably but a few days. The work is therefore apparently another instance of the lightning rapidity with which genius works under certain circumstances; and when we consider the complex nature of the score, as well as the power and the splendid, enthusiastic swing of the Finale, from the entrance of the orchestra, we are forced to admit that the young master's achievement was a remarkable tour de force. Sir Frederick Bridge and his merry men of the Royal Choral Society will doubtless give, on the 9th inst., a performance that will do justice to such an interesting novelty as "The Holy Supper of the Apostles."

Messrs. Sotheby sold, on the 18th ult., a very interesting collection of autographs, including letters from Beethoven and others, that formerly belonged to the late Alexander Thayer, the biographer of Beethoven. Lot 1 was a manuscript of the trombone parts to the Ninth Symphony, written in Beethoven's own hand, which realised the large sum of £45. A lead pencil memorandum in the handwriting of Mr. Thayer, and signed with his initials, records "Aus Franz Schubert's Nachlass." As MS. parts of the "Choral" are mentioned in the catalogue of Beethoven's music, &c., sold at Vienna in 1827, Schubert may have become the purchaser. A very curious letter, written in French, from Beethoven to Baron Zmeskall, begins: "I am greatly obliged for the weakness of your eyes," and goes on to state that he was not quite himself Ludwig, but the Devil! This letter was sold for £17 10s. A characteristic letter from Gounod to Ernst, the violinist, accompanying some music, is too interesting not to be quoted in full:—

> My Dear Ernst,
> Permit me to offer a musical expression of my sentiments toward you. Not too much piano—more music; not too much head—more heart; not too much study—more reflection; not too much combination—more conception. Do not listen to those who will tell you that one must not imitate the masters. It is not true. One must not, indeed, imitate one, but all. It is this that made them great. It is relationship with masters that makes the master. Happy he whose relations are the closest.
> Entirely yours,
> Ch. Gounod.

Two important musical competitions with attendant Festivals are to be held in the North of England during next month. The first in order of both seniority and date is to take place at Kendal on April 12, 13, and 14. Founded in 1885 by Miss Wakefield—who is still its very life and soul—it bears her name, and the greatest success has attended her efforts and those who have been so laudably associated with her. The adjudicators this year will be Mr. F. Cunningham Woods and Mr. Lionel Benson. The works to be performed include "Ruins of Athens" (Beethoven), "The Banner of St. George" (Elgar), "Young Lochinvar" (Liza Lehmann), and "Old May-Day" (F. Cunningham Woods). The secretary of the "Wakefield" competition and festival is Mr. L. Gardner Thompson, 14, Finkle Street, Kendal. The Morecambe musical festival and competition (founded in 1891) is fixed for April 26, 27, 28, and 29, with Sir Frederick Bridge as adjudicator. The Festival will include a performance of Jacobi's operetta "Cinderella," and a lecture on "Pepys' Diary and its musical notes," by Sir Frederick Bridge, who will also conduct each of the four concerts, and who has written "The Frogs and the Ox" specially for the occasion. The honorary secretary is Mr. James W. Aldous, Woodlands, Lancaster. It is hardly necessary to say that both at Kendal and Morecambe the various competitions, vocal and instrumental, are arranged to suit all classes and all ages of musical folk. The educational value of such functions is of distinct importance, and we wish them all possible success.

The Sheffield Musical Festival is to be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, October 11, 12, and 13, when the following works will be performed:—

Wednesday morning. "The Messiah" (Handel).
Wednesday evening. "King Olaf" (Elgar).
Thursday morning. "Samson and Delilah" (Saint-Saëns).
Thursday evening. "Golden Legend" (Sullivan), "Choral Symphony" (Beethoven).
Friday morning. "King Saul" (Parry).
Friday evening. "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn).

The principal vocalists are Madame Ella Russell, Madame Brema, Miss Suzanne Adams, Miss Clara Butt, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. William Green, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Charles Knowles, and Mr. David Bispham. Mr. August Manns, as at the last Festival in 1896, will conduct, and Sir Hubert Parry and Mr. Edward Elgar will be invited to conduct their own works. The duties of chorus-master are safe in the experienced hands of Dr. Henry Coward.

The "Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music (Incorporated) and Kalendar, 1899," has recently been issued. Under the able editorship of Mr. T. L. Southgate, this useful book of reference has been admirably compiled, and it contains much valuable information upon the subject of musical degrees and the holders thereof. We understand that Mr. J. W. Sidebotham, M.P., has secured the 15th inst. for the second reading of his Bill to regulate the use of Foreign Degrees in the United Kingdom, a measure that will doubtless receive all the consideration it deserves in the House of Commons.

"The Year's Music, 1899" (J. S. Virtue and Co.), is a useful book of reference, and its 400 pages are crowded with information on matters musical of a most varied kind. The chapter on "Musical Literature" is not only an excellent feature, but a compilation of distinct importance. There are fifteen portraits of musicians and a good index is provided. Three of the four obituary notices are from the columns of The Musical Times, for which we feel duly honoured.

Mr. Edgar F. Jacques will deliver three lectures at the Royal Institution, on Saturday afternoons, May 20 and 27 and June 3, the subject being mainly on the music of the East (particularly that of India) and its influence on that of the West.

Dr. Ebenezer Prout, Professor of Music in the University of Dublin, will form the subject of the Biographical Sketch in our April number.

DON LORENZO PEROSI.

Less than a year ago only a few persons here and there in Italy were aware of the fact that a young abbé, maëstro di capella at the Basilica of Saint Mark, Venice, was successfully occupying himself during his leisure hours with the composition of masses, hymns, and other church music. Since that time the name of Perosi has become known in other parts of Europe, and from America the most tempting proposals have reached him for the production there of his oratorios under his own personal direction. Don Perosi is shortly to make his appearance in Paris, where he will conduct some of his works, while later on he will also introduce some of his oratorios to English audiences. Under these circumstances, a few biographical details, gathered from authentic sources, will doubtless be of interest to our readers.

Lorenzo Perosi was born at Tortona, in Piedmont, on December 20, 1872. His father was then, as he is now, maëstro di capella of the Cathedral in that little town. Himself a musician of considerable attainments, an able organist, and appreciated as a composer, the father was well qualified to discern at an early period the talent of his child, and he laid himself out to undertake its proper development. Indeed, without the intelligent guidance and solicitous care bestowed upon him by the Maëstro Giuseppe Perosi, Lorenzo would scarcely have been able to achieve such brilliant success. The Pope has recognised the father's merit by personally conferring a decoration on him during his recent stay in Rome.

The surroundings in which little "Renzo" (as he is still called in his old home) passed his childhood were most peaceful and tranquil, and far removed from all turmoil and strife. At the age of six he received his first lessons on the pianoforte, being grounded in the "school" of Liebert and Stark, at the same time studying also Bertini, Moscheles, and Cramer, and mastering the difficulties of Clementi's "Gradus ad Parnassum." He was early drawn to the classical composers—Bach, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven being his favourites. When scarcely ten years of age he began to study the organ, on which instrument he was soon able to play the most difficult sonatas of all epochs, from Frescobaldi to the modern masters. For the great composers of church music, however, he showed a marked preference. He delighted in the study of Palestrina, Vittoria, Jomelli, Scarlatti, Carissimi, Handel, and Haydn. His father instructed him in the rudiments of composition, and when only twelve years of age his improvisations were wont to astonish all those who heard them. All the Piedmontese ladies who had met Lorenzo at the salons of the Countess San Giorgio de Tornaforte and the Barons Cavalchini talked about him as being the eighth wonder of the world!

In June, 1888, the young musician passed his examinations at the Musical Lyceum in Rome. He was highly complimented by the committee, who predicted a brilliant future for him. Not content with the diplomas he had there obtained, Lorenzo continued his studies under Professor Saladino, of the Milan Conservatorio, and afterwards at the famous monastery of Monte Casino. For the special study of sacred music he entered, in 1893, the celebrated school for church music at Ratisbon. From being a pupil he would soon have been appointed to a professorship of the organ, but for the fact that the Bishop of Imola had meanwhile entrusted him with the foundation of a Schola Cantorum in that town. To this sphere of work he devoted himself with enthusiastic zeal, and in less than a year the newly constituted choir was able to give an admirable performance of the "Missa Papæ Marcelli." It was at Imola also that Perosi began the study of theology and decided upon taking orders. At Venice, where, at the age of twenty-two, he was appointed chapel-master of Saint Mark, he was ordained a priest. Don Lorenzo is much esteemed by the people of Venice, not only by reason of his talent, but for his simplicity of manner and his unassuming kindliness of disposition. The venerable Cardinal Sarto has a fatherly affection for him and insists upon his residing at the Curia, while entire evenings are spent by the young abbé in improvising on the organ and in composing.

Perosi works incessantly. Although he is only twenty-six he has composed no less than twenty-five Masses, a Te Deum, an enormous number of Hymns, Psalms, Motets, Preludes, &c., as well as chamber music. His productivity is marvellous. His popularity and celebrity as a composer are, however, derived chiefly from his oratorios. The first one of these is the "Passion of Christ," a trilogy, the first part of which was performed at Venice at the beginning of August, 1897, while it was produced in its entirety in December of the same year, at the Chiesa delle Grazie, in Milan. This was followed in rapid succession by the "Transfiguration of Christ" (produced in Venice, March 20, 1898), the "Resurrection of Lazarus" (Venice, Theatre la Fenice, July 26, 1898), and the "Resurrection of Christ" (Rome, last December), which will ere long also be heard in London. These oratorios form part of a projected cycle of twelve similar works, illustrative of the life of the Saviour. Rumour has it that the cycle is to be complete in two years' time.

G. Franchi-Verney.

Don Lorenzo Perosi's "Passion of Christ" is entitled a Sacred Trilogy; his later works, the "Transfiguration of Christ" and the "Resurrection of Lazarus," are, however, called "oratorios," although in general form and character they are all much alike. The term "oratorio" at once calls to mind Handel, Spohr, and Mendelssohn; but with their works which bear this name, those of Perosi have little or nothing in common. A comparison with the oratorios of Carissimi and the old Passions, making all allowance for the development of musical art since the seventeenth century, would be much more to the point. There are two composers who seem, and very naturally, to have strongly influenced Perosi—the one is Bach, the other Wagner. There is a good deal of fugato writing in Perosi's Preludes, also in certain instrumental episodes—special features of the works under notice; the one entitled the "Resurrection of Lazarus" may, indeed, be named as one of the most interesting and characteristic. The composer not only employs Bach methods, but he borrows at times even his phraseology. With all that, nineteenth century effects make themselves felt, and prevent one from regarding Perosi merely as an imitator of the old master.

The influence of Wagner shows itself in the use of representative themes, though of these the Italian Abbé makes extremely moderate use: one of the most marked instances occurs in "Lazarus," in which a "Resurrection" theme is introduced at salient points of the sacred narrative. Further, there is the chromatic character of much of the music, also particular phrases, which recall the music-dramas of Wagner; at times, however, Perosi expresses himself in archaic, ecclesiastical style.

Then, again, the absence of any break in the parts into which the "Passion" and oratorios are divided, and the general avoidance of definite forms, give quite a Wagner cachet to these works. One may say roughly that Perosi's music, which shows feeling and skill, is a clever compound of various styles, ergo not possessing as yet strong individuality.

A FOLK-SONG FUNCTION.

A Mayfair mansion was the scene of a brilliant gathering on the evening of the 2nd ult., when the first general meeting of the Folk-song Society was held under the hospitable roof of Mrs. Beer at 7, Chesterfield Gardens. Amongst the large company present were Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Hubert Parry, Mr. Fuller Maitland, Mr. Barclay Squire, Mr. Edward Elgar, Mr. Alfred P. Graves, Mr. Edgar F. Jacques, Mr. Spencer Curwen, Mr. A. Kalisch (honorary treasurer), and Mrs. Kate Lee (honorary secretary). The question might naturally be asked "What is the Folk-song Society?" The best answer is that furnished by one of its rules—viz., "The Society shall have for its primary object the collection and preservation of Folk-songs, Ballads, and Tunes, and the publication of such of these as may be deemed advisable." The Society was only started in January last year by Mrs. Kate Lee and Mr. Alfred Percival Graves, with the kind advice and help of Mr. Fuller Maitland; it was fully inaugurated June 16, 1898. Another object of the Society is "the holding of periodical meetings at which folk-songs will be introduced and form the subject of performance, lecture, and discussion." Such an occasion was that under notice, and which proved to be a most successful and enjoyable gathering.

The general proceedings, under the genial chairmanship of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, commenced with the inaugural address delivered by Sir Hubert Parry, a vice-president, whose remarks were of that essentially brainy nature so characteristic of his utterances. His reference to the popular songs of the day as "snippets of musical slang" was one of the many good points in an address of which the following is a report:—

SIR HUBERT PARRY ON FOLK-MUSIC.

I think I may premise that this Society is engaged upon a wholesome and seasonable enterprise. For, in these days of high pressure and commercialism and that little smattering of the science of heredity which impels people to think it is hopeless to contend against their bad impulses, because they are bound to inherit the bad qualities of countless shoals of ancestors, the tendency is to become cynical; and the best remedy is to revive a belief in and love of our fellow creatures. And nothing has such a curious way of doing this as the study of folk-music. There is nothing in folk-music common or unclean; and this fact is worthy of the serious consideration of some future philosopher. How has the unregenerate public arrived at such a perfect result that in this folk-music there is no sham, no got-up glitter, and no vulgarity? But these treasures of humanity are getting rare, for they are written in characters the most evanescent you can imagine, upon the sensitive brain fibres of those who learnt them, and have little idea of their value. Moreover, there is an enemy at the door of folk-music which is driving it out—namely, the popular songs of the day—and if we compare the genuine old folk-music with the songs that are driving it out, what an awful abyss appears! The modern popular song reminds me of the outer circumference of our terribly overgrown towns, where the jerry-builder holds sway, and where one sees all around the tawdriness of sham jewellery and shoddy clothes, the dregs of stale fish, and pawn-shops, set off by the flaming gin-palaces at the corners of the streets. All these things suggest to one's mind the boundless regions of sham. It is for the people who live in these unhealthy regions, people who have the most false ideals, who are always scrambling for subsistence, who think that the commonest rowdyism is the highest expression of human emotion; for them popular music is made, and it is made, with a commercial object, of snippets of musical slang. This is what will drive out folk-music if we do not save it. The old folk-music is among the purest products of the human mind. It grew in the hearts of the people before they devoted themselves assiduously to the making of quick returns. In the old days they produced music because it pleased them to make it, and because what they made pleased them mightily, and that is the only way in which good music is ever made.

In this country we have not, until recently, had any idea of concentrating our attention on the collecting of our folk-music, and even now what difficulties beset us! Some people seem to think that they have but to walk out into the byways and hedges and pick them up; but the collecting of folk-songs really requires the most extraordinary faculty of accurate attention, of accurate retention, of self-criticism, as well as practice, to distinguish what is genuine from what is corrupt or emasculated. We have among the members of the Folk-song Society several who have already practised the art, and have developed a wonderful gift in that direction. I hope that, with their assistance, we shall preserve much precious folk-music from being lost, and I trust that before long we shall find England more satisfactorily represented by folk-song collections than has hitherto been the case. The rapidity of our commercial development is partly responsible for the fact that England is not yet in possession of any great collection. In the neighbouring countries of Ireland and Scotland town civilisation is not so rife, and in out-of-the-way places old things survive much longer. But it is also partly because English folk-music has not such extremely characteristic intervals as that of Scotland and Ireland that it has not been so successfully recorded. Still, we have no need to be ashamed of it. It is characteristic of the race—of the quiet reticence of our country districts—of the contented and patient and courageous folk, always ready to meet what chance shall bring with a cheery heart.

Moreover, it is worth remembering that the great composers of other countries have concentrated themselves upon their folk-music. The true test of style must lie in folk-music, for style is national. True style comes not from the individual, but from crowds of fellow-workers. And folk-music is the outpouring of endless combined souls, who sift and try till they have found the thing that suits their native taste, and leave it to outlast the greatest works of art, the heritage of generations.

Mr. Edgar F. Jacques followed Sir Hubert Parry with a paper, entitled "Modal Survivals in Folk-song"—a title suggested by Mr. Fuller Maitland, who had also selected the same subject, but who generously relinquished it in favour of Mr. Jacques. In the course of his extemporaneous remarks Mr. Jacques gave his audience quite a nice little lesson on the old modes—the Dorian, the Phrygian, the Lydian, the Mixo-Lydian, and the Æolian. As an aid to memorising the modes, he reminded us that the first (Dorian) began on D, its first letter; that the other three followed in alphabetical order (starting on E, F, and G respectively); and that the last (Æolian) had its initial letter A for its primary note. But Mr. Jacques, with all the enthusiasm of an educationist, had a more potent mnemonic in store for his hearers. He produced and exhibited a diagram designed thus:

D(i)PL(o)MA

the natural product of an exceedingly happy thought, but which Sir Alexander Mackenzie subsequently referred to as being of a somewhat "diplomatic" nature! Mr. Jacques supplied the interesting information that in the modern edition of Chappell's "Old English Popular Music," out of 118 tunes, there are 44 Dorian, 19 Mixo-Lydian, and 12 Æolian—making 75 altogether—thus proving his point of the "Modal Survivals in Folk-song."

The honorary secretary of the Society, Mrs. Kate Lee, then contributed a very amusing and highly interesting paper on "Some Experiences of a Folk-song Collector." The vivacious manner in which she related her experiences, no less than the enthusiasm she threw into the rendering of her songs, formed one of the most attractive features of the evening. The substance of Mrs. Lee's paper is contained in the following report:—

FOLK-SONG COLLECTING.

I began seriously to think of collecting songs when I went for a holiday of several weeks to a little seaport town in the North of Norfolk, not patronised by tourists, and with no special attraction of any sort except fresh air. The fact that everybody there seemed to live to nearly one hundred years old led me to consider that it was possible that there was some latent music somewhere or other among the people, and so I thought I would try and get some tunes.

I had not the faintest idea how to begin. First I asked the clergyman and the doctor, but they looked at me with dismay and could not give me any advice. I did not know any of the people about at all, so the only thing to do was to be very audacious. Accordingly I walked down one morning to the quay, where I had noticed that four old fishermen always stood. I expect they are standing there still, for they never moved away, they never caught any fish, and they never seemed to go out to sea; but their faces grew familiar as the days passed. At last, with a trembling heart, I went up to them and said: "Do any of you sing?" "Do any of us sing?" was the startled reply, as they were generally only asked about the weather and the boats and the departed glory of the town since the railway came, a good deal of which they could tell you for sixpence. So I asked again. "Sing? No, none of us sings." But I said: "Don't you sing when you go out to fish?" "Oh, yes, of course we sings then." "What sort of songs?" "Oh! all sorts of songs, but none as you would care to hear." "Perhaps they are just the sort of songs I should care to hear. Don't you sing 'My Johnny was a Shoemaker' or 'The Farmer's Boy'?" (By-the-way, "The Farmer's Boy" is a very good title of a song to start on in any district, for nearly everyone knows it.) "Oh, yes," one of the sailors replied, "we sings that—others too." However, one of the men said he was sure that was not what the lady meant, and he said "There's sure to be some minstrels coming to the town in a few weeks; they nearly always do come in the summer time, and they sing some fine songs"!

I have a number of Sussex songs, all collected at the little village of Rottingdean, where there are many little secluded cottages and some very quiet unconventional people still living around the downs, even near to fashionable Brighton. I shall never forget the delight of hearing the two Mr. Coppers, who gave me the songs, and who are now members of the Society. Mr. William is a foreman of a farm, and his brother is the landlord of the "Plough Inn," a very small public-house. They are very proud of their Sussex songs, and sang them with an enthusiasm perfectly grand to hear. When I questioned them as to how many they thought they could sing, they said they thought about a hundred! You had only got to start either of them on the subject and they commenced at once. "Oh, Mr. Copper, can you sing me a love song, or a sea song, or a plough song?" It did not matter what it was, they looked at each other significantly, and, with perfectly grave faces, off they would go. Mr. Thomas Copper's voice was as flexible as a bird's. He always sang the under part of a song like a sort of obbligato, impossible at a first hearing to take down. To show you the beautiful variety of these songs—which, by-the-bye, I collected in November last—I should like to say that another man came to me with a song which he called "Judy Credio." I asked him what the title meant before hearing the song; he said he hadn't the faintest idea, but he thought it was the name of a girl, an Irish girl. Then another man present said, "Oh, no, it's not the name of a girl; it means 'What a Jew believes.'" This shows that often words become perverted in folk-songs.

Another man sang to me a song into which he brought the words, "Dimmy Darey ran through the wood." At the end of the verse I stopped him and asked what "Dimmy Darey" meant. He said he thought it was a dromedary. At last I found in a ballad sheet the same poem, with the words, "And the little timid hare ran straight through the woods."

Several very interesting folk-songs were contributed by Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Mary Hurlbert, Mrs. Kate Lee, and Mr. Charles Phillips. A quaint specimen in the Lydian Mode, about two or three hundred years old, but with words about Napoleon, was sung by Mr. Hammet Drake, accompanied by Mr. Fuller Maitland. A very amusing duet, entitled "The Wedding Song," was capitally rendered by Mrs. Kate Lee and Mr. Charles Phillips. The following is a choice specimen of its poetry:—

She.—Young Johnnie, if he was here this night,
He'd keep me from all harm.
He.—He's in the field of battle,
And in his unifarm.
He's in the field of battle,
His foes he will destroy
Like some roaming king of honour
Who fought in the wars of Troy.

The honorary secretary of the Folk-Song Society is Mrs. Kate Lee, 8, Victoria Road, Kensington.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH" MATERIAL.

The extraordinary rapidity with which Handel composed his oratorio "The Messiah" has always excited wonder. According to his autograph score he commenced it "August 22, 1741"; the first part was completed "August 28"; the second part, "September 6"; the third part, "September 12"; the instrumentation (such as it is) filled in "September 14"—in all, only twenty-four days!

In the first of his four recent Gresham lectures on Handel's "Messiah," Sir Frederick Bridge discoursed on "The Messiah as Handel wrote it." He might almost have said "as Handel hashed it up"; or even entitled his lecture, "The Messiah before it was composed."

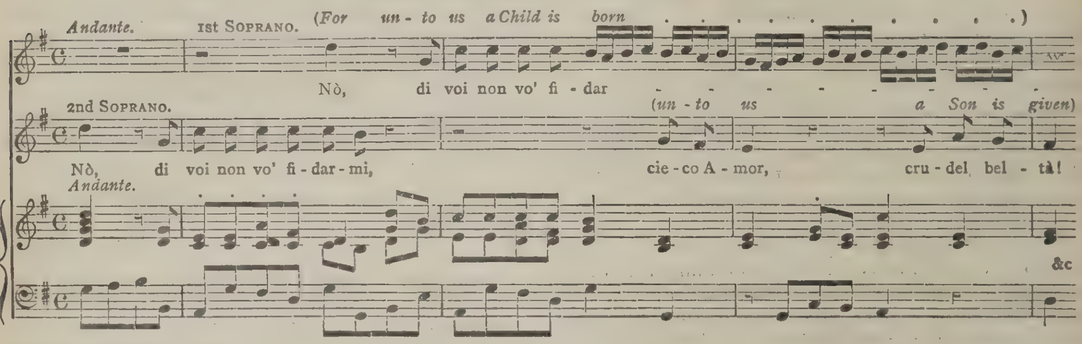
Dr. Crotch, in his "Lectures on Music" (1831), states that—

> Handel quoted or copied from the works of Josquin de Prez, Palestrina, Turini, Carissimi, Calvisius, Uria, Corelli, Alessandro and Dominico Scarlatti, Sebastian Bach, Purcell, Locke, Caldara, Colonna, Clari, Cesti, Kerl, Habermann, Muffat, Kuhnau, Telemann, Graun, Mondeville, Porta, Pergolesi, Vinci, Astorga, Bononcini, Hasse, &c.

Here, then, is Dr. Crotch's list, which consists of twenty-nine names, exclusive of the very significant "&c." It would be an extremely interesting investigation to trace out definitely and in detail the actual instances wherein Handel was indebted to the works of the above-named composers. And what became of Handel's private library of scores other than his own? Was it not a working library—a veritable quarry to him?

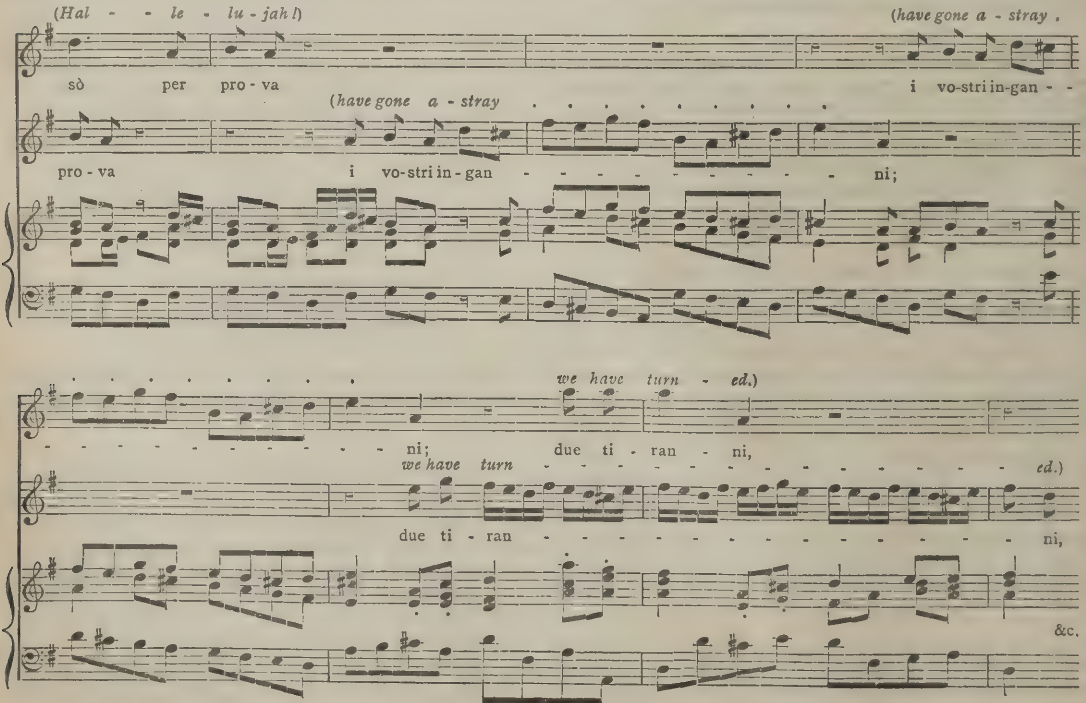
Moreover, Handel was by no means averse to using up old material of his own as occasion required. In regard to his masterpiece, "The Messiah," he seemed to set special affection upon the music of three Italian duets. It might be assumed that these duets were the product of his early years, 1707-1712. But in his lecture Sir Frederick Bridge pointed out that two of these "Messiah"-material duets were composed by Handel only seven weeks before he started upon the composition of his "sacred oratorio"! One of them, "Nò, di voi non vo' fidarmi," is dated "London: July 3, 1741," and "The Messiah" was commenced on the following August 22. It is interesting to find that Handel, after he had transferred the music of this duet to his great oratorio, re-set the Italian words, the autograph of which is dated "London: November 2, 1742." He fortunately did not destroy the first version, the following example from which will probably be more familiar to our readers in regard to the music thereof than are the Italian words to which the music was originally composed:—

Duet—"Nò, di voi non vo' fidarmi" (1741).



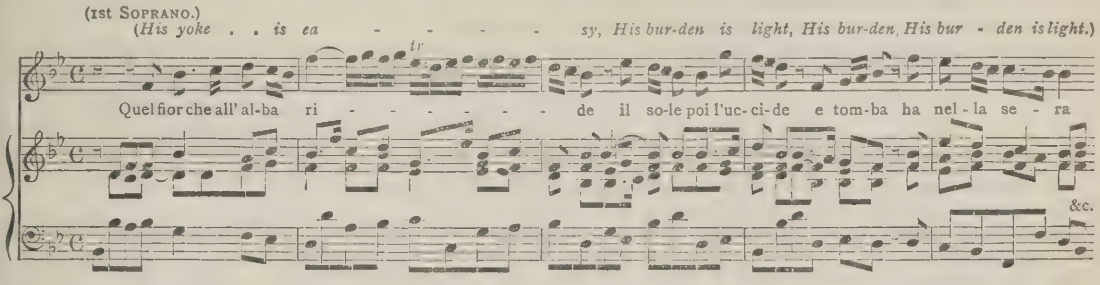
Andante.
1st Soprano.
(For un - to us a Child is born . . . .)
Nò, di voi non vo' fi - dar - - - - - - - - - -
2nd Soprano.
(un - to us a Son is given)
Nò, di voi non vo' fi - dar - mi, cie - co A - mor, cru - del bel - tà!
Andante.
&c

This duet was an ideal Klondyke to Handel. In two successive bars of its third movement we not only find the opening phrases of the "Hallelujah" chorus, but a considerable instalment of "All we like sheep"!



(Hal - - le - lu - jah!)
(have gone a - stray .
sò per pro - va i vo-stri in-gan - -
(have gone a - stray . . . .
pro - va i vo-stri in - gan - - - - - - - - - - - ni;
. . . . we have turn - ed.)
- - - - - - - - - - - ni; due ti - ran - ni,
we have turn - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - ed.)
due ti - ran - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - ni,
&c.

The next example is from another Italian duet, "Quel fior che all' alba ride," which was composed by Handel two days earlier than the foregoing, it being dated "London: July 1, 1741," the "Messiah" year. The music of this duet is also not unlike something else. Here it is:—



(1st Soprano.)
tr
Quel fior che all' al-ba ri - - - - - - - de il so-le poi l'uc-ci-de e tom-ba ha nel-la se - ra
&c.

Not only is the key and notation the same, but the latter part supplied, with equal faithfulness, the material for "And He shall purify."

The question naturally arises: "What were Handel's reasons for using up this material and more of a similar nature in his sacred oratorio?" The dates on the autographs prove that the Italian duets were written shortly before and not after "The Messiah." And this suggests another interrogation: "What became of the association of the words and music?" How often has it been pointed out that Handel has "so graphically portrayed the 'going astray' of the sheep," and so on, and yet the music now irrevocably associated with those solemn words was originally composed to utterances of a different nature. It is more than a puzzle. It is a curious problem that has yet to be solved.

We regret that we have not space to give a detailed account of Sir Frederick Bridge's excellent lectures, which he will doubtless have many opportunities of re-delivering elsewhere. The four discourses, entitled respectively: (1) "The Messiah as Handel wrote it"; (2) "The Messiah as Handel performed it"; (3) "The Messiah as Mozart, J. Smithies, and others improved it"; and (4) "The Messiah as it should be performed," were excellently illustrated by the following vocalists: Miss Elvira Gambogi, Miss Holding, Mr. W. Fell, Mr. Bertram Mills, and six chorister boys from Westminster Abbey, under the conductorship of Mr. John E. Borland. At the concluding lecture the orchestra and chorus of the Guildhall School of Music performed, under their principal, Mr. W. H. Cummings, himself a true Handelian.

WAGNER ON MENDELSSOHN'S "ST. PAUL."

It has almost become an article of faith with present-day Mendelssohn-detractors that Wagner thought and spoke slightingly of the composer of "Elijah." But they ought to know by this time that the modern master found words of genuine and warm praise for some of Mendelssohn's finest orchestral works, such as the "Hebrides" Overture and the first movement of the "Scotch" Symphony. Wagner's opinion of "St. Paul" (which in Germany is generally considered the greater of Mendelssohn's two oratorios) had not been made public, as far as we are aware, until its appearance in a recent issue of the Bayreuther Blätter (No. 125). This short article gives Wagner's impression of a performance of the work in Dresden under its composer's personal direction. From the historical notes preceding the article it appears that Wagner's manuscript, consisting of two quarto pages, is at present in the Royal Library at Berlin. Glasenapp refers to it in his "Life of R. Wagner" and quotes a few short extracts, though he confesses that he had not seen the complete text, nor even knew the purpose for which it was written.

The performance in question took place on Palm Sunday, April 9, 1843, about two months after Wagner had been appointed Royal Saxonian Court Kapellmeister "for life." It seems to have been a brilliant affair, for Mendelssohn was then at the height of his popularity. His music had long become known and loved, the Leipzig Conservatorium had at last been opened (April 3), and he was full of work. "St. Paul," which had been produced at Düsseldorf, May 22, 1836, was thus seven years old, and had evidently become a favourite in Dresden. Wagner's remarks read like the expression of genuine admiration both for the master and his work, and that he had not yet at that time thought of oratorio as a "sexless opera-embryo" seems to be proved by the curious and decidedly interesting fact that the performance in question appears to have actually given him the first idea for the one work which most nearly approaches an oratorio in scope, that work being the "Biblical Scene" entitled "The Holy Supper of the Apostles." Here, then, is Wagner's opinion of "St. Paul," which was evidently only jotted down for his own amusement, and not for publication:—

> The concert of last Palm Sunday must be called a most brilliant one, which left a deep impression on the exceptionally numerous audience. Mendelssohn Bartholdy had been invited to personally conduct a performance of his oratorio "Paulus," and by his readiness to accept the invitation he gave us a pleasure of an exceptional kind—viz., to hear on this occasion a classical work produced under the personal direction of its creator. True, we had already become acquainted with the masterpiece through two public performances which must be called thoroughly successful; but yet it seemed to us that not till now had the right understanding come to us, when the direct personal leadership of the master filled every one of the executants with a peculiar feeling of elevation (Weihe) and inspired them in such a degree that the importance of the performance almost equalled the height of the work itself. The very large choir and orchestra, as well as the soloists —Wüst, Tichatschek, Dettmer, &c.—covered themselves with glory in the true sense of the word, and they have thus shown us in its fullest perfection a work which is a witness to the most flourishing condition of our art, and which, when we consider that it was created in our own days, fills us with just pride in the times in which we live. We can only regret that such an oratorio cannot be completely incorporated in our Protestant Church Service, because only then would its true significance sink into the hearts of all believers, while without this foundation, and especially in a concert-room, it appears to us more or less merely an art work of a serious kind, and its real religious tendency can by no means become so preponderant as would be the case if it were produced under the conditions under which Sebastian Bach introduced his oratorios to the congregation. But in any case the effect, even in a concert-room, is touching and elevating.

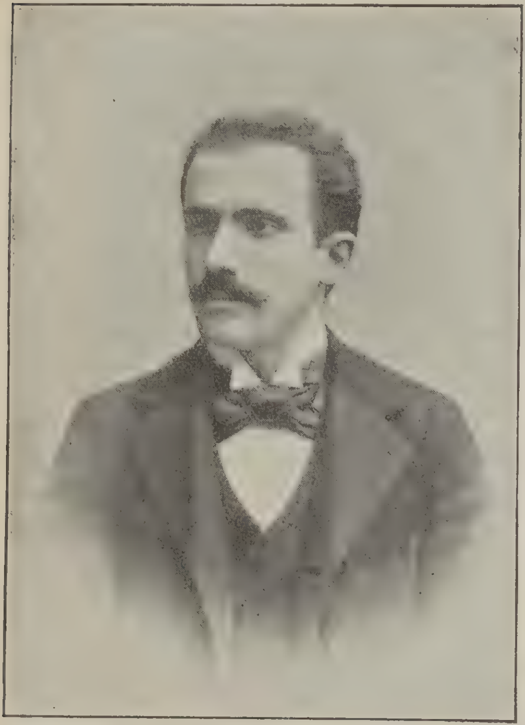
On the back of the manuscript of the above article Wagner has written some lines, which are nothing more or less than the scenario for the aforesaid "Biblical Scene," to which we refer in another column.

SIGNOR ARTURO TOSCANINI.

"La Scala" has always held such a high position in the realm of opera that any musician who attains the unusual honour of becoming artistic head of that great establishment at Milan is one who merits special recognition. In our issue of October last we gave a biography of Signor Toscanini from information derived from special sources, and now, by way of a sequel to that article, we have much pleasure in presenting our readers with a portrait of the clever young musician who is now the distinguished conductor of "La Scala."



CHURCH MUSIC.

The service lists of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, are always interesting. Services and anthems by such English and American composers as Martin, Lloyd, Foster, Selby, Messiter, Aitken, and Gilchrist have recently been given with much acceptance. Many on this side of the Atlantic would be glad to have a wider practical acquaintance with the works of the American composers, who seem to be daily adding to the stores of Anglican Church music.

The selection of English Church music given at the Little Oratory, at South Kensington, on the 5th ult., was of exceptional interest. In accordance with the musical tradition surrounding the name of the "Father of the Oratorio," the Patron Saint of the Church, performances are given from time to time by the fine choir, frequently aided by leading instrumental performers. The selection upon the present occasion, which deserves to be quoted in full, consisted of:

Motet, "Justorum animæ," William Byrd; Motet in five parts, "Jehova, quam multi sunt hostes," Purcell; Motet in eight parts, "In exitu Israel de Egypto," S. Wesley; Ancient carol, "In dulci jubilo," arranged by R. Lucas de Pearsall, a theme so admirably treated in Bach's organ works; Hymn for St. Philip's Day, "Pangamus Nerio debita cantica," Thomas Wingham (for eleven years director of the Oratory choir).

Interesting notes by Mr. Barclay Squire added to the enjoyment of the occasion.

At Marylebone Church, Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" was sung on the 16th ult. and Stainer's "Crucifixion" on the 22nd ult., and these two works will continue to be given on alternate Wednesdays during Lent, the latter being also announced for Good Friday. At St. Anne's Church, Soho, the customary Lenten performances of a selection from Bach's "Passion" Music according to St. John began on the 17th ult., under the watchful direction of Mr. E. H. Thorne.

Mr. J. H. Maunder's cantata "Penitence, Pardon, and Peace," is being given twice, in sections, during Lent, at All Saints', Leyton. An orchestral service was recently given at Brixton Church, when three movements from Mendelssohn's First Symphony in C minor were included in the service scheme. At Bromley Parish Church a good selection of music was performed by organ and strings on the 1st ult., and included Handel's fine Organ Concerto (No. 4), and Sgambati's Te Deum laudamus (Andante solenne), played by the same instruments, proved to be a feature of special interest.

One of the many Lent performances of Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given at St. James's, Bermondsey, by the Bermondsey Settlement Choral Society, assisted by the choir of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, under Mr. John E. Borland's direction, on the 23rd ult. and repeated on the 26th ult. The "Crucifixion" is a work which calls forth with unmistakable if simple eloquence the devotional feelings of those who take part and those who listen; thus it has a distinct and well-deserved place in the Church music of the Lenten season.

At St. James's, Sussex Gardens, the first part of Handel's "Messiah" was sung on the 12th ult. At St. Alphage, London Wall, a Lenten musical service has been and is being weekly sung on Fridays. The music is selected from Spohr's "Calvary," Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, and "Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me."

A choral festival and service of praise was held on the 1st ult. in Above Bar Congregational Church, Southampton, in connection with the Southampton Nonconformist Choral Union. The united choirs were conducted by the Rev. Carey Bonner and Mr. Percy Withers presided at the organ.

An impressive rendering of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given in Armagh Cathedral, on the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul.

ORGAN MUSIC.

A matter of special interest was the recent opening of the new organ at St. Michael's, Chester Square, built by the Electric Organ Company, under the direction of Mr. Hope-Jones, and generously given by Mr. A. J. Graham Cross, when the many good points of the instrument were duly displayed by Mr. Tertius Noble, of York Minster. The selection of stops is of a highly satisfactory character, and the mechanisms are elaborate and display to the full Mr. Hope-Jones's many ingenious inventions.

The organ in Gloucester Cathedral, originally built, during the years 1663-1665, by Thomas Harris, father of the still more celebrated Renatus Harris, has been completed by the famous firm of Messrs. H. Willis and Sons. The scheme includes four manuals and pedal organ, with some forty-five registers, including couplers. Though perhaps the scheme would have been still more satisfactory with a stop of thirty-two feet on the pedal organ and a larger choir organ than the present one of five stops only, the instrument is now remarkably complete and effective. A well thought of feature of the opening recital by the excellent Cathedral organist, Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, was a group of movements by successive organists of the Cathedral, as follows:—

Andante in F sharp minor (S. S. Wesley), 1865-1876.
Allegretto in E (C. Harford Lloyd), 1876-1882.
Diapason Movement (C. Lee Williams), 1888-1897.
Melody in A (A. H. Brewer), 1897.

The weekly organ recitals given by Dr. A. L. Peace in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, pursue their successful course. At a recent performance the classical organ works included Prelude and Fugue in C minor (Bach), Andante in G and Festive March (H. Smart), and the Andante from Mozart's Duet-Sonata. In connection with the question of organ adaptations, the eminent Liverpool organist is known to favour the judicious introduction of arranged organ music, one forcible argument he presents in this direction being that the organ arrangements bring a great deal of fine music within the organist's reach which is superior to the bulk of music written for the instrument. Moreover, Dr. Peace wisely considers that, if such arranged music can be effectively rendered on the modern organ, as we all know it can, its claims to be thus heard cannot be overlooked.

The new three-manual organ supplied by that old-established firm, Messrs. Bevington and Sons, to the Church of the Holy Trinity, Port Elizabeth, was recently opened by Mr. Roger Ascham. His excellent programme included Rheinberger's Sonata (No. 4) in A minor, Bach's Fugue in D major, and pieces by Guilmant and the rising French composer bearing the famous old name of Rousseau. If the English School was not extensively in evidence, it was certainly exceedingly well represented by Dr. E. J. Hopkins's charming Andante in C.

The recitals, under Dr. Warriner's management, at the Royal College of Organists maintain their value and interest. During the past month two were given by that exceedingly clever performer, Miss Erdroff (who played Mendelssohn's recently published Air with Variations in D), and Mr. H. L. Balfour.

At one of Mr. E. H. Lemare's much appreciated performances his list of pieces embraced Bach's Toccata in F, Dvorák's "Legende" (Op. 59, No. 4), and the sister composition, the "Legende" (No. 2).

At St. Stephen's, Guernsey, Mr. J. Matthews lately played a selection of organ music in which was heard Toccata and Fugue in D minor and two movements from a new Organ Suite by A. Ravanello, an Italian writer for the instrument of rising reputation. Mr. E. H. Thorne's admirable Bach recitals given at St. Anne's, Soho, during the past month, included the Toccata and Fugue in F, the Sonata in C major, and notable specimens of the fine Choral Preludes. The programme of Mr. A. H. Allen played on the 6th ult., at St. David's Church, Denbigh, included Garrett's "Fantasie-Overture," one of the finest specimens of recently published English organ music; Brahms's Fugue in A flat minor, and a Fantasia by Boëly. Mr. H. A. Jeboult introduced into a recent recital scheme Mendelssohn's lately published Andante and Variations in D and S. S. Wesley's not too frequently played "Holsworthy Church Bells." H. Berens's Fantasia in C minor was a feature of Mr. Midgley's recital at St. John's Church, Perth, on the 8th ult., as was also Bach's ever-welcome great Prelude and Fugue in A minor. A new three-manual organ, built by Mr. John White, was recently dedicated at the Church of our Immaculate Lady, Rathmines, Dublin, and opened by Mr. R. Dwyer. Mr. Allan Patterson's programme at a recital recently given at St. Paul's, Cannes, included Tours's Andante Grazioso in D.

Mr. H. C. Perrin's organ recital at Canterbury Cathedral included an Allegro appassionata by Basil Harwood, Lemare's Romance in D flat, a Pastorale by Luard Selby, and Smart's Grand Solemn March. One cannot but rejoice in this new evidence of the growing use of our Cathedrals in additional musical services and organ recitals, which are never so impressive and profoundly eloquent as they are in these "solemn temples."

Mr. Walter Hedgcock gave a recital at St. Clement Danes, Strand, on the 17th ult. His programme included Saint-Saëns's "Bénédiction Nuptiale" and Concert-Overture in D (Kinross).

Mr. R. H. Kaye, at an organ recital recently given at St. Mary's, Haverfordwest, played, among other good things, Andante et Marche (Aloys Klein) and Dr. Peace's Sonata da Camera (No. 1).

At Romsey Abbey, on the 13th ult., Mr. W. C. Bliss gave an interesting recital, when his programme included Rheinberger's Sonata in A and Prelude and Fugue in C (Saint-Saëns).

Mr. Cuthbert Harris has given three excellent organ recitals during the past month at St. Andrew's Church, South Streatham, which included Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and Rhapsodie, No. 1, by C. Saint-Saëns.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE'S LECTURES.

Liszt, Tschaïkowsky, and Brahms formed the triumvirate of composers selected by Sir Alexander Mackenzie for his three lectures which he recently delivered at the Royal Institution and at the Royal Academy of Music. Through his courtesy we are enabled to give a few short extracts from these interesting discourses, as by reason of their comprehensiveness—biographical, critical, and analytical—it is almost impossible to give a satisfactory digest of their contents.

LISZT.

After referring to Liszt's nobility of nature, his self-effacement, his devotion to the works of others, and especially to the pioneers of modern music, Sir Alexander said: "I am personally able to speak with some authority on this point, since it was my lot as a boy to play in the Ducal orchestra in Schwarzburg Sondershausen (near Weimar), where I frequently saw Liszt during the last two years of his official stay at Weimar. . . . I have a vivid recollection of 'Tannhäuser' in 1860 and 'Lohengrin' in 1861. I played a humble second violin part in such epoch-making works as Berlioz's 'Symphonie Fantastique,' the 'Tristan' Prelude, Liszt's own symphonic poems, 'Mazeppa,' 'Tasso,' and others. A performance of Liszt's Concerto in E flat by his pupil Ratzenberger is stamped on my memory, not alone by reason of the novelty of the music, but also by the fact that I had to don for the first time a dress coat, white waistcoat, and tall hat—de rigueur at a Court concert—as well as to stand throughout the concert on an exceedingly well-polished floor, which made energetic fiddling—as it were on skates—a matter of difficulty.

"My own master, Edward Stein, initiated me into the mysteries of these scores (when, perhaps, he ought to have been teaching me harmony and counterpoint), even as Liszt himself drew my attention to the new Russian movement many years later. The last piece in which I took part was Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony. All this was an unforgettable experience and strange preliminary training for a boy of fourteen, who was immediately afterwards to pursue his studies at the Royal Academy of Music in London. For I need hardly say that, in the year 1862, the Academy 'knew not Joseph' and the 'music of the future' was considered to hold its proper place among Satan's own works."

TSCHAÏKOWSKY.

"'Their compositions make amends for the boredom which other works, better known, and more highly praised, inflict on me.' Thus observed Liszt in regard to the new Russian school of composers. The distinctive qualities and elements which enter so largely into the present Russian methods of composition are not favourable to the foundation of a National school, since they import unfamiliar rhythms, the strange attractions presented in gipsy and Oriental melodies, which carry with them again harmonic tunes and progressions all new to the Western mind and taste. But, if I may put it so, our digestive powers were not strong enough to assimilate with entire satisfaction the highly-seasoned sauces with which these piquant dishes are served up. And whether we have even now reached this nice point I am not quite prepared to say. After a good many years of intimacy with modern Russian music (to the study of which I owe my first introduction to Liszt's ever-ready propagandism in favour of all that was new), I am somewhat reluctantly driven to the conclusion that not a little of its so-called 'novelty' owes its existence to more than a mere 'thread' of amateurism which runs through its mazes. I hope I shall not be misunderstood; for as I have taken an active part in bringing it into notice, it cannot fairly be said that I lack appreciation of its excellences. [It should not be forgotten that Sir Alexander Mackenzie, as conductor of the Philharmonic Society, introduced Tschaïkowsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony in London on February 28, 1894.] Within the last few years, however, we have learned to know it so well here in London—perhaps even to the exclusion of equally interesting music—that, so far from requiring an introduction, it can well afford to stand closer examination. And any critical remarks are chiefly applicable to the earliest leaders (so-called), not to the 'coming men' of the present generation."

BRAHMS.

"The high position of Brahms as a bright particular star was fixed and settled many years ago. A delicate, but clear enough sub-division between the so-called 'Romantic' and 'Imaginative' schools of composition has been drawn. Brahms belonged at first, I think, to the former, and passed by naturally-accounted-for steps to the other. In the end we think of him on much broader lines—viz., as the most prominent representative of the 'classics.' That is to say, of those who conscientiously and persistently preserve the fixed landmarks, and who, while extending and infusing a modern spirit into previously accepted 'commandments' or precepts, impress their own intellectual and individual stamp upon them. And this Brahms has undoubtedly done. . . . While Wagner invites the assistance of the sister arts and creates that wonderfully complicated, but inseparably united result which has attracted us so strongly, Brahms, on the other hand, is contemplative, purely musical. He asks for nothing but complete sympathy and concentration on the part of his listeners. By these alone, and without any external means, he holds his place among the most gifted composers in the history of music. . . . If I were asked to name the most representative of Brahms's works, the answer would be the Symphony in C minor. It proves that in the hand of a genius the symphony is by no means exhausted as an art-form. Moreover, it exhibits all the skill and knowledge, the manifold beauties, as well as the occasional angularities, or hardness, of his ripest manner. The last movement alone would suffice to place it in the first rank and justify the suggestion of 'Prometheus unbound,' which has been, not inaptly, applied to it. It captured one influential friend from the opposite camp at any rate—one who devoted the rest of his life to the service of Brahms—viz., the erst doughty champion of Wagnerism, Hans von Bülow. . . . I take it, that it is not an invariable rule that a composer's individual characteristics are reflected in his music. Indeed, I could cite examples to the contrary. Tschaïkowsky's inborn gentleness contrasts, for instance, strangely with the boldness, sometimes fierceness, of many of his musical moods. But if ever a man's personality is mirrored in his creations, it is the case with Brahms."

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

"ISRAEL IN EGYPT."

No oratorio is more calculated to show the strength and weakness of a choral body than Handel's "Israel in Egypt." Moreover, the massive choruses are so familiar to an English audience, and certain effects are so looked for, that a high standard of excellence has to be attained to ensure public approval. Particularly is this the case at the annual performance given of the work by the Royal Choral Society, but the interpretation on January 26, at the Albert Hall, met all requirements, for the choral singing, in its wealth of tone, precision of attack, and clearness of articulation and phrasing, can only be adequately described as superb. A feature of the evening was the rendering, by Mr. Andrew Black and Mr. Watkin Mills, of the duet "The Lord is a Man of war," which elicited enthusiastic and prolonged applause. The other soloists were Miss Clara Butt, Madame Duma, Miss Maggie Purvis, and Mr. Herbert Grover.

GOUNOD'S "REDEMPTION."

The performance on Ash Wednesday by the Royal Choral Society of Gounod's sacred trilogy "The Redemption" may be said to be widely anticipated by Metropolitan admirers of the work; and a very large audience assembled at Kensington, on the 15th ult., when Gounod's music received a most impressive rendering. Alike in the "Reproaches," the "chorales," and in the stirring choruses, the choristers evinced a keen appreciation of the requirements of the music combined with full powers to give it perfect expression. The efforts of the choir were ably seconded by the soloists. A more devotional rendering of the quartet and chorus "Beside the Cross remaining" has rarely been given, the solo parts in this being sung by Miss Maggie Purvis, Miss E. D'Egremont, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Daniel Price. Miss Esther Palliser was the soloist in the expressive number "From Thy love as a Father," and she sang throughout the evening with great charm and purity of style. No finer exponent of the part of the Redeemer could be found than Mr. Santley, and his delivery of Christ's last words was most impressive. The narration also was admirably intoned by Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Daniel Price, and full justice was done to the instrumental portions of the work by the orchestra, with Mr. H. L. Balfour at the organ. Sir Frederick Bridge ably conducted both performances.

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

On Ash Wednesday afternoon (15th ult.) Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" were performed at Queen's Hall. The solo parts were ably sustained by Madame Duma, Miss Hilda Wilson (admirable in the "Inflammatus"), Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Daniel Price. In the "Hymn of Praise" the choralists sang with breadth and fervour, and a good word was earned for the rendering of the orchestral sections. Madame Duma and Mr. Hirwen Jones were the soprano and tenor principals respectively. Mr. George Riseley, under whose energetic and watchful conductorship the chorus is showing steady improvement, kept his forces well in hand throughout.

THE BACH CHOIR.

The concert directed by Professor Stanford, at Queen's Hall, on the 7th ult., consisted entirely of compositions by Bach. The most important were the superb Magnificat in D and the Church cantata "Ein' feste Burg," known in this country as "A Stronghold Sure." Better performances of each have been heard in London, the chorus occasionally displaying a hesitation inexcusable in works so familiar to the admirers of the Leipzig cantor. The solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Eleanor Jones, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black. The original trumpet parts were restored to the cantata. An interesting feature was the Suite in B minor for flute and strings, a happy specimen of the composer's lighter vein, which was played in a manner that would have recommended the work even had its intrinsic merits been less. The Concerto in C for two claviers, another welcome feature, was entrusted to Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Leonard Borwick, who ably acquitted themselves in a task in which they evidently delighted.

MR. NEWMAN'S SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

All lovers of good orchestral playing will have welcomed the resumption of the above, for with the first concert of the new season, given at the Queen's Hall on January 28, came the proof that the splendid orchestra conducted by Mr. Wood is still the finest and most highly trained body of instrumentalists in London. We do not approve of all that Mr. Wood does; we may occasionally find fault with his selection of novelties, or cavil at his readings of recognised masterpieces; but it is impossible not to feel genuine admiration for the magnificent performances he secures of those works which appeal to his temperament. At the concert under notice the band displayed a beauty of tone, a brilliancy of colour, and a finish that were absolutely delightful. Even Mr. Wood has never given us a more gorgeous performance than that of some new Symphonic Dances (Op. 64) by Edvard Grieg. They are, to be sure, scored with consummate mastery and glow with exquisite colour; but their beauty of raiment seemed intensified in the superb playing of the band. The symphony was Tschaïkowsky's original but distressingly Slavonic No. 4 (in F minor), one of those works which one completely exhausts at a first hearing, and whose repeated performances leave one less and less impressed. Herr Zwintscher proved himself a brilliant pianist in Rubinstein's D minor Concerto and Madame Medora Henson was at her best in Gounod's "Far greater in his lowly state."

At the following concert, on the 11th ult., two more novelties were introduced—viz., a Suite on themes from Wormser's music to Michel Carré's play without words, "L'enfant prodigue," and a "South-Slavonic Rhapsody," by the recently deceased Karel Bendl. M. Wormser's little suite in five little movements is charming (using the word in the best sense), being dainty in conception as well as execution, and beautifully scored; moreover, through its little themes runs a pretty vein of refined sentiment. Bendl's Rhapsody, the first orchestral piece by this prolific composer that has come under our notice, proved another disappointment. There is some impressive writing in its three slow movements, with their broad and melodious themes, good workmanship, and sonorous scoring. But in the final Dance we have one of those simple bucolic themes abounding in Slavonic countries, and this empty phrase—is repeated again and again, until it becomes an absolute nuisance. It spreads itself over eighty pages of full score, more or less, and it really looks as if its repetition had only been restricted by the supply of score paper at the composer's disposal. The work, though magnificently played, was but coldly received. Miss Leonora Jackson gave a beautiful performance of Brahms's Violin Concerto. Her pure, round tone, artistic phrasing, dignified style, and intimate revealing of the master's thoughts deserve the highest praise. Miss Ellen Beach Yaw sang two florid airs, and a youthful Symphony (in three movements) by Mozart (B. and H., No. 26) completed the programme.

MADAME ALBANI'S CONCERT.

It is an open secret that the idea of a performance (at the Queen's Hall, on the 10th ult.) of Professor Stanford's "Te Deum," composed for last year's Leeds Festival, originated spontaneously with Madame Albani. Her wish to pay the composer this compliment redounds greatly to her credit, and the thanks of London music-lovers are due to her for thus giving them an opportunity of hearing the Professor's latest important contribution to our rich store of choral works. The Te Deum has so recently been described in these columns that further remarks in praise of its sterling qualities may be deemed superfluous. A superb quartet of principals, consisting of the concert-giver, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, gave the utmost effect to the solos. The orchestra consisted chiefly of present and past students of the Royal College of Music, and the Queen's Hall Choral Society was responsible for the choral portions. Madame Albani and Mr. Ben Davies gave a magnificent performance of the great love duet from "Siegfried." Madame Albani as a Wagner singer we have long known, but Mr. Ben Davies's was almost a "first performance," and he scored a brilliant success. His declamation of the music and the German text was superb and his style throughout noble and elevated. The orchestra played the difficult music with splendid effect. Mr. Lloyd created a furore with his beautiful singing of the fine song "Onaway! awake, beloved!" from Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." It is many years since we heard a new and important air sung with such evident enthusiasm by a great singer, or so warmly received by a large and representative audience. Miss Crossley and Mr. Santley sang a number of songs and M. Johannes Wolff played two violin solos. Dr. Walford Davies presided at the organ.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS

Little more than a bare record is required concerning Mr. Arthur Chappell's popular concerts at St. James's Hall. Lady Hallé relinquished the post of first violin, on Saturday, the 4th ult., to Mr. Kruse, who led on that occasion an effective interpretation of Beethoven's Septet; and Dr. Joachim made his first appearance this season on the 13th ult., when the Monday evening concerts were resumed, and, it may be added, quickly proved to the large audience that assembled to greet him, that he was in full possession of those powers that have entitled him to be considered the greatest violinist of his day. Dr. Joachim also played on the 20th ult., and his performance of Beethoven's Romance in F on that occasion elicited such enthusiastic applause as to compel an encore. The pianists have been Mdlle. Ilona Eibenschütz, Herr Ernst von Dohnányi (4th and 11th ult.), Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Leonard Borwick, and Herr Schönberger, all of whom have sustained their reputations by their renderings of familiar works. The vocalists were Mr. Ernest Sharp, Madame Ruth Lamb, Mr. Gregory Hast, Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Louise Dale, and Mdlle. de S'André.

ROYAL CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

"TRISTAN AND ISOLDE" IN ENGLISH.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company concluded its six weeks' season at the Lyceum Theatre, on the 11th ult., with Benedict's "Lily of Killarney." The other operas which have been mounted, in addition to those already mentioned in these columns, were "The Bohemian Girl," "Il Trovatore," and Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Tristan and Isolde." Criticism is only called for concerning the last-named, as its presentation, on the 4th ult., was the first time the music-drama had been performed in English in the metropolis. That it was English the exponents were singing was, however, but occasionally audible. When will our singers grasp the fact that clear articulation is a help to vocal tone, imparting to it expressive variety of timbre, besides greatly assisting the vocalist in holding the attention of the listener? Miss Lucile Hill sang the music of Isolde in a lyrical rather than a dramatic manner. Mr. Philip Brozel modelled his reading of Tristan on that of M. Jean de Reszke, and his embodiment presented many excellent features, notably in the third act. Miss Kirkby Lunn showed great ability as Brangäne, Mr. Charles Tilbury personated Kurvenal with effective earnestness, and the parts of King Mark, Melot, and the Steersman were capably sustained by Messrs. Arthur Winckworth, William Dever, and William Gillard. The rendering of the complex orchestral score was, on the whole, creditable and proved that in Mr. Hamish MacCunn the company has a conductor of exceptional ability, and one who, moreover, is in sympathy with, and understands, Wagner's music.

It should be added that the "argument" printed on the "Tristan" programme contained several prejudicial inaccuracies. Isolde and Tristan are led to declare their mutual love under the impression that they have each taken poison and have not long to live, consequently there is no need of their longer concealing it from each other. And in the second act Isolde has not been made the wife of King Mark. Is there no staunch Wagnerian who will write the Royal Carl Rosa Company a correct précis of Wagner's libretto?

MR. NEWLANDSMITH'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

HAMERIK'S "SYMPHONIE SPIRITUELLE."

Mr. Newlandsmith opened the second concert given by his string orchestra, in St. James's Hall, on January 31, with Asger Hamerik's "Symphonie Spirituelle," which had not previously been heard in London. This composer, who is little known in England, was born at Copenhagen in 1843, and by his musical aptitude attracted the attention of Gade and Hartmann. In 1871 he was appointed director of music at the Peabody Institute, Baltimore, and since then has composed a large number of works of important dimension, including six symphonies. The symphony heard at Mr. Newlandsmith's concert is pleasing music, orthodox in form and Beethovenish in manner, but scarcely justifying the title "Spirituelle." Other novelties performed on this occasion were a graceful "Pensée Melodique" and Gavotte in G minor by Mr. J. F. Barnett; the first and third movements from a well-written suite entitled "Mélodies Ecossaises," by M. Paul Gilson; and three numbers from Mr. Harry Farjeon's clever Ballet Suite. This comprises four movements, severally entitled "Harlequin," "Columbine," "Pantaloon," and "Clown." The music shows a lively fancy and considerable skill in construction.

MR. EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN'S QUINTET IN F.

At the Curtius Club concert, on the 8th ult., Mr. Albert Fransella and his chamber concert party included in their programme Mr. Edmondstoune Duncan's Quintet in F (Op. 38) for flute, clarinet, horn, bassoon, and pianoforte, which gained the prize of £20 offered in 1897 by Mr. Lesley Alexander for the best chamber work by a British composer. The quintet consists of three movements, all of which are characterised by a form and directness of expression suggestive of old English music. This is particularly noticeable in the first, and the most important, movement, the second subject of which largely partakes of the nature of an English folk-tune. The second number, in D minor, is elegiac in expression, the music flowing on in a tranquil and passionless manner, tinged by pensive melancholy. The Finale is a light-hearted Rondo, through which the spirit of Elizabethan days seems to flit. The work was admirably interpreted by Messrs. Fransella, Gomez, Borsdorf, James and Carl Weber.

SIGNOR GIORGIO FRANCHETTI'S TRIO IN G.

The chief feature of Mr. Newlandsmith's Trio concert, on the 14th ult., at St. James's Hall, was the first performance in the metropolis of Signor Giorgio Franchetti's Trio in G (Op. 1) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. This composer is a pianist, and is not to be confounded with Baron Alberto Franchetti, the composer of operas and symphonies. The most attractive number of the trio is the slow movement, which is built upon a very expressive melody of tender sentiment. The work was excellently interpreted by Mr. Frank Mummery, Mr. Newlandsmith, and Mr. A. H. Earnshaw, who also severally played with notable skill solos on their respective instruments.

DVORÁK'S SONATINA IN G (Op. 100) FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE.

A concert given on the 7th ult., at St. James's Hall, by Mr. Carl Heinzen, an American violinist, acquired special interest owing to a novelty from the pen of Dvorák. With the assistance of Mr. Christopher Wilson, Mr. Carl Heinzen played, for the first time in London, Dvorák's Sonatina in G (Op. 100) for violin and pianoforte. The term "Sonatina" gives a somewhat prejudicial idea of the style and dimension of the work, being, indeed, only justified by its simplicity and the terseness with which the themes are developed. These are both excellent features, which, by the way, many modern composers might incline to with advantage to themselves and their listeners. The sonatina comprises the usual four movements, which are respectively headed Allegro risoluto, Larghetto, Scherzo and Trio, and Finale—the last-named consisting of three sections, Allegro, Molto tranquillo, Allegro. The work was written five years ago, some three years after the composer had settled in New York as director of the National Conservatoire of Music. Its themes are more or less suggestive of American negro melodies, which Dvorák maintained should form the basis of the national American school of music—a theory which he has made such remarkable use of in his Symphony "From the New World" (Op. 95) and the String Quartet in F (Op. 96). In both these works the music seems to get very close to human nature; this humanity of expression is the chief characteristic of the Sonatina in G, and it need scarcely be added is a very attractive one withal. The work was most effectively interpreted, for Mr. Heinzen is a very finished and engaging player, and doubtless the work will be heard again at no distant period. Mr. Heinzen further proved his command of his instrument by a finished rendering of Bach's Chaconne from the Suite in D minor, and agreeable variety was contributed by a good selection of songs, interpreted in an artistic manner by Mr. Ernest Sharpe.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Herr Ernst von Dohnányi gave, on the 13th ult., the first of two pianoforte recitals in St. James's Hall, and is to be commended for playing two of the preludes and fugues from Bach's "48," instead of the usual arrangement of one of the master's organ fugues. Both were finely rendered in a style in consonance with their character. Schumann was represented by his "Etudes Symphoniques," Chopin by the Ballade in G minor (Op. 23) and the Variations (Op. 12), and Brahms by his Rhapsodie in B minor (Op. 79), all of which were interpreted with great brilliancy.

Other recitals worthy of record are: Miss Mabel Seyton's, a pupil of Herr Karl Klindworth, who showed promising ability on January 26 at the Queen's (Small) Hall; Mr. Leonard Borwick's, who concluded a series of three recitals in St. James's Hall on January 30; and M. Pachmann's, in the same hall, on the 3rd ult.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The organ recital given by the students of the instrument at the Royal Academy of Music, at the Queen's Hall, on the 9th ult., was opened by Leonard Hart, who displayed much facility of execution combined with clearness of phrasing in Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in C minor. Like commendable qualities and tasteful employment of the tone colours at command were shown by H. Vincent Read in the Adagio and Introduction and Fugue from Merkel's Sonata in E minor (Op. 137). The most important performance of the afternoon, however, was that by George D. Cunningham, who interpreted with considerable brilliancy Mr. Edward Elgar's little known Organ Sonata in G (Op. 28). The rarity of its performance is probably owing to the difficulties of the work. The slow movement in B flat contains many passages of poetic character, and the Finale, presto, although somewhat light for the conclusion of an organ sonata, is bright and pleasing. E. Spencer Dyke and Walter S. Vale played three movements from Rheinberger's Suite for violin and organ (Op. 166) with promising skill.

Ethel M. Wood sang with admirable expression the solo in Gernsheim's "Salve Regina," receiving excellent assistance in the chorus from the female voices of the choir; and Edith Nutter rendered Handel's air "Lascia ch' io pianga" with an ease of vocal production and clearness of articulation that considerably enhanced the natural beauty of her contralto voice. Sarah A. Gomersall sang neatly Bach's air "My heart ever faithful," and the part-songs "Ye spotted snakes" (G. A. Macfarren) and "Where the honey-bee goes" (Smart) were well rendered by the "select choir" under the able direction of Mr. Henry R. Eyers.

The most interesting novelty of the Students' concert on the 20th ult., at St. James's Hall, was a setting by Adam von Ahn Carse (Macfarren Scholar) of Felicia Hemans's poem "The Voice of Music." The words are set for a tenor voice, which is accompanied by strings, harp, and drums. The voice part is vocal and effective, and, what is particularly promising in a young composer, the spirit of the text finds a sympathetic echo in the music. W. R. Maxwell sang the solo excellently, and justice was done to the instrumental portion under the conductorship of Mr. Frederick Corder. A neat and crisp rendering was given of Bennett's pleasing Trio in A by M. E. Colyer, Llewellyn Toms, and Dezso Kordy; and Dvorák's American Quartet in F (Op. 96) was boldly attacked by N. Atkinson, J. Penso, M. Phillips, and E. L. Pettit. Edwin S. Dyke showed much ability and exceptional promise as a violinist in Gade's Caprice for the violin, and two movements from Grieg's Sonata in G (Op. 13) for violin and pianoforte were rendered in a fluent manner by Stephen Champ and Elsie Horne. Cuthbert Whitemore's interpretation of Grieg's Ballade (Op. 24) for pianoforte also deserves praise. The most successful of the solo vocalists was Gertrude Drinkwater, who sang three clever MS. songs by Mabel E. Colyer. Anna B. MacDonald contributed two songs by Jensen in a sympathetic manner, and Liszt's effective settings of the "Tantum Ergo" and "O Salutaris" were well rendered by Ethel M. Wood, K. Kelyn Williams, Lizzie Davies, and Jane Spicer.

Signor Luigi Denza has been appointed a Professor of Singing at this Institution.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

"A very unhackneyed programme, well carried out," must have been the opinion of the large audience present at the Students' Orchestral concert, on the 17th ult. Opening with Méhul's rarely-heard Overture "La chasse du jeune Henri," the programme finished with Brahms's Third Symphony in F (Op. 90). Beatrice La Palme, who stepped out of the ranks of the first fiddles to sing an exotic song, "La cloche," by Saint-Saëns, has a sympathetic voice and style, and should do well, even though the vocal art is but her second study. Cicely Gleeson White is another promising singer, who did ample justice to the dramatic requirements of an "air des adieux," from Tschaïkowsky's "Jeanne d'Arc." The same composer's brilliant, but in parts rather common Concerto in B flat minor for pianoforte was played by Herbert Fryer with a good deal of power and aplomb, as well as with delightful smoothness and elegance where necessary. Little Haydn Wood gave a very boyish but wonderfully correct and crisp performance of Saint-Saëns's popular Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso for the violin. He is a remarkably sure player for one so young. Professor Stanford conducted, as usual.

"KING OLAF" AND "HIAWATHA" AT THE PEOPLE'S PALACE.

The East of London has not lost its faith in native art, and the 3,000 people that filled the great hall of the People's Palace, on the 11th ult., to hear Mr. Elgar's "King Olaf" and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" had no occasion to regret it. Taking into consideration that, with the exception of the principals, almost the whole orchestra consisted of amateurs, the performance of the band was quite remarkably good. We hope Mr. Allen Gill may soon have a chance of giving West-enders a taste of his skill, as first-rate English conductors are not so plentiful that we can afford to let one of the youngest but most gifted hide his light under a bushel in the East-end. Madame Medora Henson, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. Arthur Walenn sang the solo music as if they loved it. In Mr. Taylor's splendid little cantata Mr. Branscombe sang the beautiful tenor solo "Onaway! awake, beloved!" with much charm of voice and style, and he, as well as the composer, scored a great success.

REVIEWS.

How to sing the Choral Service. A Manual of Intoning for Clergymen. By G. Edward Stubbs, M.A.
[Novello and Company, Limited].

The multiplication of books designed to assist the clergy in the musical portion of the Church service is to be welcomed, for although some observable progress has been made of late, comparatively few of those who conduct divine worship use their voices in a proper manner, or have anything beyond a superficial knowledge of music. Mr. Stubbs's manual may therefore be commended to the attention of the clergy who have neglected, or know little of these important matters, and those who read it and put in practice its precepts will assuredly become more profitable servants. The introduction by the Rev. H. H. Oberly may also be perused with advantage by such as take an interest in the present discussions concerning the duties of the clergy and the traditions of the Church. The author devotes chapters, somewhat unnecessarily, to the orthodoxy of "The perpetuation of the choral service," the "Ability of the clergy to learn to intone," and the "Arguments for and against intoning"; but the remarks on "The musical education of the priest" are commendable, and the information given and the methods prescribed for the acquirement of the desirable abilities are good and practical. A merit of the book lies also in its quotations from authorities on the subjects treated. Amongst these the following from Canon Shuttleworth's "The place of music in public worship" is well worthy of reproduction. It runs as follows: "To the poor, and those upon whom life lies heavily, few influences are so subtly powerful for consolation and uplifting as those of the best music. Singers always say that, however untrained their musical faculties, no audiences are more encouraging than those composed of the workers and the poor." This is undoubtedly true, and did the clergy more fully realize the power of finely rendered music and the mighty influence exercised by well modulated and accentuated speech the majority of our Church services would be far more impressive and far reaching in their effects than they are at present.

Voice and Violin: sketches, anecdotes and reminiscences. By Dr. T. L. Phipson. [Chatto and Windus.]

Dr. Phipson, like fiddle fanciers generally, loves to gossip—using the word in its inoffensive sense—about the instrument and the players on the instrument of his affection. It is not his first attempt in this direction, as his former book, "Famous violinists and fine violins," fully testifies. The twenty-six chapters of the present volume embrace a variety of subjects connected with the violin, ranging from "The art of playing in tune" to "Tamburini's cow." Throughout the whole of his chattily-written pages the author proves to be a genial raconteur and his book will make a pleasant fireside companion. There is an index—good.

Novello's School Music. Old May-Day. Cantata for Female Voices. Words written by Shapcott Wensley. Music composed by F. Cunningham Woods.

May-Day Revels. Words written by Hettie M. Hawkins. Music composed by John E. West.

"'Old May-Day' is designed to awaken some of the echoes of bygone days. . . . In 'Old May-Day' we get the young men and maidens bringing in the branches of may at the dawn; the milkmaids with their shining pails; the May bells; the dance round the May-pole; the Morris dancers with Maid Marion; the 'clean sweeps'; the hobby-horses; Jack-in-the-green, and many of the features of the May-day in olden times." So runs the preface to one of the best of this excellent series of school music. The spirit of spring seems to have inspired Mr. Wensley's poetical lines, and they have been wedded by Mr. Woods to music happily suggestive of jocund mirth, which in bygone times was wont to reign "in the merry month of May." No small share of Mr. Woods' success is attributable to his having cast his music in old English dance forms. The sprightly overture is in the style of a jig. Its tripping melody is subsequently made to serve as the accompaniment to the vocal portion of the gay and jovial May-pole dance, which effectively concludes the cantata. Into this number Byrd's Sellenger's round is also cleverly interwoven. There are only four other vocal numbers, in all of which the chorus is called upon. The first two movements are entirely for chorus, written in two parts, one in 6-8 time of graceful character and the other in Tempo di menuetto. In the remaining numbers the chorus takes up the refrain of the soprano soloist, who is furnished with some very pleasing and melodious music of a simple but effective nature.

"May-Day Revels" is a cantata intended for dramatic representation and the work is laid out on a more extended scale than that by Mr. Woods. It opens with a short but lively instrumental introduction to which the villagers enter dancing. When they are all assembled they break forth into a graceful two-part song in waltz measure. This is succeeded by a chorus of girls, who sing a "Children's 'Ladye' song," which should prove one of the most pleasing features of the entertainment. The villagers return and execute the May-pole dance, for which Mr. West has written some music in perfect accord with the style of the old English dances on such occasions, and for the dancing of which full directions are given. The next number is a rhythmic march to accompany the entrance of the May Queen, who is greeted by a melodious chorus written in two parts. The subsequent appearance of Robin Hood and Maid Marion is followed by an effective ballad for the knight of the forest, and this is succeeded by a milkmaid's song and dance, the entrance to appropriate music of the hobby-horse, and a pleasing waltz to accompany the archery contest. The dance round the May-pole is subsequently resumed, the chimes give out the discreet hour of six p.m., and the villagers conclude the festivities in a loyal fashion by singing "God save the Queen." With gay dressing, a little ingenious stage management, and appropriate "business" a good deal might be made of this well designed work, which, moreover, could be most effectively performed out of doors "under the greenwood tree."

Four Pianoforte Sketches. By Alicia Adélaïde Needham.
Far from my Heavenly Home. Sacred song for a medium voice. Words by Henry Francis Lyte. The music composed by Alicia Adélaïde Needham.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mrs. Needham's four pianoforte sketches are very pleasing and playable little pieces. The first, entitled "Moods," might perhaps have been more happily called "whims," for the moods with which the music deals are decidedly whimsical. But doubtless this effect arises from the fact that ladies' moods are often whims in disguise, and whatever it was that Mrs. Needham sought to express it was worth saying, and has been said with grace and neatness. The second number bears the descriptive title of "An old spinning wheel," and to an accompaniment in triplets it sings an expressive song, into which much meaning might be put by a sympathetic pianist. The third sketch is called "Frolics," and the music is delightfully light-hearted and gay, and although sometimes insistent in expression the frolicsomeness is always decorous, even possessing a measure of grace. The series is concluded by "Fancies," "bright-eyed" in character and vivacious—a little inclined to run wild, perhaps, "as is their nature to." The movement makes more demand on digital dexterity than what has gone before; but there will be "pleasure in the learning," and, it may be added, in the listening—provided the "learning" is what it should be.

The setting of the well-known hymn "Far from my heavenly home" is of a kind that has met with much acceptance, and so presumably it supplies a want. In this style of sacred song the chief requirement would seem to be the provision of singable phrases, with an accompaniment that can be read at sight by a pianist of average abilities. Both these conditions are found in Mrs. Needham's song, combined with a measurable amount of artistic skill in construction and workmanship.

The growth and influence of Music in relation to civilization. By H. Tipper. [Elliott Stock.]

It stands to reason that a writer who attempts to set forth the growth and development of music from the earliest times to Beethoven in 200 octavo pages has attempted a task that is well nigh impossible. But the aim of the author has been to consider his subject "chiefly in relation to the moral influence it has exerted, and the ideal forces of which it is the exponent." Within these limitations Mr. Tipper has produced a book which may be read with interest and profit. His aim has been to "leave an impression of the majesty and permanence of ideal forces which the tendency of the time has unwittingly done much to obscure." The development of the art in England has not been treated of in the present volume, as the subject has been reserved for separate treatment. The book would make an appropriate present to a lover of music.

Music: how it came to be what it is. By Hannah Smith.
[John Murray.]

The authoress of this attractive and interestingly written book modestly states that it is "founded upon various courses of lectures which the writer has given before audiences of students and amateurs." Her desire has been to "aid any lovers of good music toward a more intelligent hearing—which is sure to bring an increased love of the art." Miss Smith, who is, we believe, an American lady, has admirably succeeded in carrying out her intention and she has produced a book of educational value, yet free from that pedantic style which so often repels the general reader. The divisions of the work are excellent, and the information supplied is quite encyclopædic in its way. The book is admirably got up and, moreover, the many illustrations greatly add to its value, the nine plates at the end of old clavier instruments being of special interest. It is just the book to put into the hands of young students to stimulate in them a love of the art of music.

Bonnie Jeannie Gordon. Song. Words by Arthur King. Music by A. C. Mackenzie.
Eily. Song. Words by G. Hubi Newcombe. Music by Stewart Macpherson.

[Joseph Williams.]

"Bonnie Jeannie Gordon" is a vivacious song which tells how this patriotic maiden secured a thousand recruits for her country's need by promising each a kiss and a guinea. The story is told in four verses, each of which is followed by a refrain which might well be taken in chorus by faithful clansmen. Sir Alexander's setting is of course in ballad form, and the music is as true to the spirit of the text as Bonnie Jeannie was to her clan, and that the South'ron may fully comprehend Jeannie's patriotism an English translation is given of the Scotch text.

In "Eily," tenor vocalists will find a simple but tender and passionate love song, extremely melodious and grateful to sing. What tenor could wish for more?

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Philharmonic Society gave a subscription concert, on the 3rd ult., in the Ulster Hall. The managers of this flourishing Society are obliged to consult the varied tastes of their subscribers. Many of these—a rapidly increasing number—prefer solid and good music, but a number still require to be catered for with a miscellaneous "bill of fare." This concert was for the latter—a few part-songs, very well sung by full choir and by male and female choirs separately—exhausted the Society's contributions to the concert, the rest being filled by Miss Beach Yaw (the phenomenal American singer), Madame Ruland, Madame Ablamorich, Miss Esther Fee, and Mr. Orme Darvall.

The Ulster Hall was crowded on January 28, the occasion being the second People's Concert, when the "Creation" was creditably performed by members (orchestral and choral) of the Philharmonic Society, under the able direction of Dr. F. Koeller. The soloists were Miss M'Creary, Mr. William Thomas, and Mr. Merriman, while Herr Louis Werner presided at the organ and Mr. T. J. Lindsay "led" the orchestra. The promoters of the People's Concerts deserve to be congratulated on the manifest success attending their efforts to provide good music for the people.

A very ambitious attempt to perform Handel's "Messiah," under the conductorship of Mr. George Ferguson (whose choir distinguished itself at the Feis Ceoil in Belfast last year), was made on the 4th ult. The solos were taken by amateurs and the accompaniment was principally that of the organ.

Among minor concerts I may mention the first semi-public appearance, on the 16th ult., of the Ladies' Orchestral Society, originated and conducted by Dr. Koeller, the indefatigable conductor of the Philharmonic Society. The concert was well attended and thoroughly creditable to the fair performers. As yet they all play only on stringed instruments. They will soon, it is hoped, have wood-wind players—we dare not suggest brass!

Musicians in Belfast are much agitated at present by a serious impending loss. The historic Ulster Hall, where so many fine performances have been heard during its thirty-seven years' existence, can no longer "pay its way," and in such an essentially commercial city this is the unpardonable sin. It is clear that the days of its old management are over. But surely there is enough public spirit left among its wealthy citizens to save this fine building from being turned into a linen warehouse! What makes the case really critical for music is that there is positively no other hall suitable for a high class concert with chorus and orchestra. The fine organ, too, would revert to the descendants of the original donor if accommodation ceased to be provided for it. But we cannot contemplate the sacrilege!

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

The pupils of the Edgbaston Parish Girls' School gave an operatic performance at the Edgbaston Assembly Rooms on the 11th ult. The programme comprised an operetta entitled "Enchanted Palace," a new version of the popular and time-honoured legend of "The Sleeping Beauty." The singing and spoken parts were admirably undertaken, and the same may be said of the minor parts and chorus. The operetta was most creditably presented before a crowded audience. A word of praise is due to the head-mistress and director, Miss Clapham, to whom the success of the production is largely due.

Mr. Monteith Randell's choir gave its annual concert in the Town Hall, on the 11th ult., Mr. Randell conducting. The concerted vocal selections comprised Faning's "The Vikings" and Elgar's trio "The Snow," given by the ladies of the choir, Roeckel's "The Wind and the Ocean," and a quartet entitled "Music," composed by Dr. W. T. Belcher. Mr. Edward Arthur was an excellent vocalist, the instrumental interludes were supplied by Herr Paul Stoeving, a violinist new to Birmingham, and Mrs. Richardson was the pianist.

The second orchestral concert of the Festival Choral Society was given in the Town Hall, on January 26, under Dr. Swinnerton Heap's conductorship. The novelties consisted of Saint-Saëns's Second Symphony in A minor (Op. 55) and an Overture Symphonique (Op. 27), "Germania," by our townsman, Mr. J. D. Davis. The latter work is intended to convey the composer's impressions of Germany as reflected in its people. In its construction certain themes are connected with certain characters, after the manner adopted by Wagner. Miss Fanny Davies gave a delightful rendering of Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor (Op. 54). Mr. George A. Clinton was specially engaged for Weber's Clarinet Concerto in E flat (Op. 74). The chorus of the Society gave with splendid tone power and perfect ensemble Dr. Heap's "The Voice of Spring" (for chorus and orchestra) and Dr. C. H. Lloyd's unaccompanied pastoral "The Rosy Dawn."

Dr. Rowland Winn's third orchestral concert, given in the Town Hall on the 2nd ult., included Dvořák's Symphony "From the New World," interpreted in a masterly way by the fine orchestra of eighty performers. Lady Hallé gave, in her own incomparable style, two movements of Vieuxtemps's Violin Concerto in E (Op. 10) and Max Bruch's "Romanze."

Mr. George Halford's sixth and seventh orchestral concerts of the current series were given in the Town Hall, on January 31 and the 14th ult. Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the "Pastoral," and a Wagner selection formed the programmes. The soloist at the first concert was Mr. Adolf Brodsky, at the second, Miss Alice Esty was the vocalist.

The St. Oswald's Choral Society, entering on its second year, gave Bennett's "May Queen" in the Small Heath Assembly Rooms, on January 30, with a chorus of fifty voices and an orchestra of nineteen performers. The principal vocalists were Miss Carrie James, Miss Annie Hill, Mr. Samuel Fenn, and Mr. Edwin Garbutt, who gave a good rendering of their respective solos. The choruses were given with great precision and fine volume of tone. Mr. F. W. Benson conducted and Mrs. L. T. H. Hiorth accompanied.

Six performances of Mr. Festing Jones's operetta for children, "King Bulbous," were given, from the 6th to the 11th ult., by the children of St. Mary's Schools, Aston Brook, the last performance being added on account of the overflowing audiences. Mr. Tilt is to be congratulated on the excellence of the representations. A reproduction of a photograph of the principal characters appears in the current issue of the School Music Review.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

The Victoria Rooms were secured by the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society for its annual ladies' night, on the 9th ult., for which all the tickets were sold several weeks before the event. The programme was of the customary varied nature, and included pieces never before performed by the Society—namely, J. Clippingdale's "The first violets," "Breathe soft, ye winds" (J. Baptiste Calkin), "My true love hath my heart" (specially written for and dedicated to the Society by Mr. C. Lee Williams), and "Harmony" (W. Beale). All the compositions were sung with that purity of voice, unity, precision, clearness of enunciation, correctness of phrasing, and exquisite tone shading, which have made this body of amateurs famous at home and in the metropolis. Mr. Braxton Smith and Mr. W. Thomas were the soloists. The conductor was, as usual, Mr. Riseley, who handed the baton to Mr. C. Lee Williams that he might direct the performance of four pieces from his pen.

The other recent choral concert was that given by the Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society on January 28, when Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" was brought forward, and the result was a remarkably good and spirited representation of the tuneful work under the guidance of Mr. E. Pavey. The soloists were Madame Ada Patterson, Miss Ada Bennett, Mr. Whitworth Mitton (who particularly distinguished himself), and Mr. Arthur Wills, who ably discharged their duties. Mr. E. Cook lent excellent service at the organ.

The second of Miss Lock's Chamber concerts took place at the Victoria Rooms, on the 20th ult., when Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in D minor (Op. 63) was played and a Suite (Op. 35) for strings from the pen of the Russian composer, Alexandre Glazounow.

The annual concert of the Thornbury Society of Gleemen took place on the 14th ult., when favourite glees and part-songs were well sung, under the direction of Mr. H. P. Thurston.

MUSIC IN CHELTENHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A highly interesting and decidedly successful concert was given in the Assembly Rooms, Cheltenham, on the 7th ult., when Gounod's "Faust" was presented in cantata form by the new Philharmonic Society. If the performance was not a faultless one, it was distinctly creditable to all concerned, and there were times when a high level of artistic excellence was reached. The solos were in the capable hands of Madame Dorigo Phillips (Marguerite), Miss Alice Hare (Siebel), Mr. Gregory Hast (Faust), Mr. Charles Copland (Valentine), and Mr. Charles Tree (Mephistopheles), all of whom admirably discharged their arduous duties. A special word of praise is due to Mr. Charles Tree, who undertook at short notice to replace Mr. Archdeacon (absent on account of illness), and who acquitted himself with praiseworthy skill. The orchestra, under the able leadership of Mr. Lewis Hann, did splendid work throughout, and Mr. C. J. Phillips conducted with distinguished ability and foresight.

Mr. Edward Elgar's dramatic cantata "Caractacus" was the pièce de résistance at the second concert of the season given by the Cheltenham Musical Festival Society, in the Assembly Rooms, on the 13th ult. It speaks well for the enterprise of this veteran Society (now in its twenty-ninth season) when it brings forward so important and by no means easy a festival novelty as that written by Mr. Elgar for the Leeds Festival of last autumn. Special interest was centred in the performance by reason of its local associations—the scenes of the cantata being laid on the slopes of the Malvern Hills. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls (a native of Cheltenham who is rapidly making her way), Mr. Charles Saunders, Mr. Henry Sunman, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's brilliant Orchestral Ballade in A minor was an attractive feature in the second part of the programme, which also included Mendelssohn's "Son and Stranger" Overture. The band (led by Mr. E. G. Woodward) and chorus, numbering together 250 performers, gave a good account of themselves, under the experienced conductorship of Mr. J. A. Matthews, who is to be congratulated upon a memorable concert.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

The Dublin Glee Singers gave their first concert for the season at the Antient Concert Rooms on January 30. The choir (about sixty voices), under the direction of Mr. Joseph Seymour, displayed all the qualities which won a victory at last year's Feis Ceoil, and was ably seconded by the solos of Madame Jeanie Rosse, Miss Victoria Delaney, and Mr. Walter Bapty. Dr. T. R. G. Jozé and Mr. Vincent O'Brien played accompaniments.

Dr. Smith's Glee Choir, which made its appearance on the 14th ult. at Rathmines Town Hall, consists of sixty carefully selected voices, under the direction of the conductor of the Dublin Musical Society. A selection of glees, &c., was given with admirable tone, nice judgment, and fine precision. The male voices were heard alone in "Banish, O maiden" (Lorenz), and the female voices in "O native music" (arr. by Smith). Mrs. Ward-Moriarty, Misses Kirk, Frengley, Sage, and Carnegie, with Messrs. Stone and Coade, contributed solos, and the accompaniments were played by the conductor, Dr. Joseph Smith.

The Royal Dublin Society's recital of chamber music, in the Society's Lecture Theatre, Kildare Place, on the 13th ult., included Brahms's String Quartet in B flat (Op. 67), Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, and Raff's Pianoforte Trio in C minor. The executants were Signor Papini, Messrs. Delany, Grisard, and Bast, with Signor Esposito at the pianoforte.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

The fifty-fifth concert of the Norwich "Gate House" Choir took place in the Noverre Assembly Rooms on the 9th ult. A selection from Rossini's "Messe Solennelle" constituted the first half of the programme, the solos and concerted numbers being sung by Miss Stannard, Miss Annie White, Miss Constance Betts, Miss Howitt, Mr. H. J. Luckett, and Mr. J. T. Moffitt, all members of the choir. Under Mr. Kingston Rudd's careful beat, and resulting from his painstaking training, the different numbers received a commendable interpretation. Herr Ernst von Dohnányi made his first appearance before a Norwich audience and fairly electrified his hearers by his marvellous executive powers.

The Glee Club, established in connection with the voluntary choir singing at the nave services, held in Norwich Cathedral on Sunday evenings, gave its annual concert in the Noverre Rooms on the 10th ult. Under the tuition of Mr. H. J. Brookes, the members were enabled to sing several part-songs with commendable precision. Songs were contributed by Miss Lefroy, Mrs. Harry Francklin, Mr. S. Hemmings, and Mr. J. Manning, while Miss M. Lefroy played several violin solos in her usual finished manner. A pleasant innovation was the introduction of two movements from Mozart's Quartet (No. 12) and also a portion of a similar composition written by the conductor, Mr. H. J. Brookes, both being very capably rendered.

The annual concert under the auspices of the Kirkley Madrigal Society took place in the Public Hall, Lowestoft, on the 9th ult., when the members rendered several part-songs and madrigals in a manner highly creditable to themselves and to Mr. P. Chignell, their conductor. Miss Margaret Cooper and Mr. Walter Driver contributed songs, and Mr. A. C. Kemp accompanied.

The North Walsham Amateur Musical Society gave a performance of Handel's "The Messiah," on the 8th ult., conducted by Dr. Horace Hill. The principals were Madame Blanche Powell, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Murray Rumsey, and Mr. F. B. Ranalow. Mr. H. J. Brookes was the leader of the band and Mr. Frank Hill and Mr. J. Dixon presided at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively.

Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was the work selected by the Bungay Choral Society for its annual concert on the 8th ult. The work had been carefully rehearsed under Mr. W. Harvey, with the result that the choruses went with precision. The solo quartet comprised Mrs. Harvey Thomas, Miss Leila Kemball, Mr. Franckiss, and Mr. Pratt. The band was led by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre and Mr. R. Price gave great satisfaction as a solo violoncellist.

The Hunstanton Musical Society gave a satisfactory rendering of Cunningham Woods's cantata "King Harold" on January 30, conducted by Mr. W. A. Montgomery, the band being led by Mr. A. H. Hackney. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Ashworth and Mr. Gwillym Evans, while Mr. W. H. Leslie contributed several violin solos. The chorus did its share of the work most creditably.

A Society which can print "ninety-sixth concert" on its programme certainly shows signs of vigorous health. This the Norwich Philharmonic Society was able to do on the 13th ult., when the first concert of the present season was given. Romberg's Symphony in E flat, Beethoven's Symphony (No. 2), and two movements from Mozart's Clarinet Quintet were played, under the able direction of Dr. Horace Hill, who is so ably seconded by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre as leader.

The Beccles Choral Society gave a performance of "Elijah" on the 13th ult. The band (led by Mr. W. A. Tuddenham) and chorus numbered about 100 performers. Mr. Warder Harvey conducted and Mr. C. H. Duffield presided at the organ. The principal vocalists were Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Alice Long, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, and Mr. Edwin Webster.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

On January 23 (too late for notice in the February number of The Musical Times), the much debated question whether the McEwan Hall is suitable for vocal concerts was triumphantly solved by Mr. Kirkhope's choir. This magnificent body of singers was in its very best form, and the result was a concert which eclipsed anything of the kind heard in Edinburgh during this generation. The "Walpurgis Night" was rendered with due breadth and dignity; the melodious, the massive, and the delicate passages had a new beauty added to them by the quality, unanimity, and freedom of the chorus. Miss Alice Jaxon, Miss Elsie Macmillan, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. George Fergusson were the soloists. The performance of Schumann's "Faust" (Part 3) was no less distinguished, and the choir is now to take one step forward towards its high destiny by undertaking two Bach cantatas for its next concert.

Mr. Moonie's choir more than fulfilled, on the 10th ult., the high promise it held out at its two previous annual concerts. The quality of the fresh young soprano voices in itself distinguishes this choir from the others in the city and offers a rare treat to enthusiasts about choral singing. A model rendering of Mendelssohn's "As the hart pants" was followed by Elgar's "Banner of St. George" and by Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty." It is impossible to give the choir too much praise for their care, energy, and well-directed enthusiasm. Mr. Moonie may well be proud of his singers. The band, under Mr. Dambmann, did excellent work.

At the ninth orchestral concert, on the 18th ult., Ernst von Dohnányi "came, saw, and conquered" the Edinburgh public, and at his own recital, in the Music Hall, on the 18th ult., he gave a fuller exposition of his claims to stand among the greatest of contemporary artists.

Messrs. Paterson's twelfth series of orchestral concerts has been in every way successful, and Mr. Paterson in his annual statement was able to show an encouraging financial report.

The Philosophical Institution closed its season, on the 14th ult., by a chamber concert, under the direction of Miss Clara Lichtenstein, who, with the assistance of Mr. Dace and Mr. Colin McKenzie, gave works by Schumann (Andante for two pianofortes), Liszt, Schütt, and Smetana. The vocalist was Mr. Hedmondt, who was most cordially received.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

The Choral and Orchestral Union concert was the means of bringing Herr von Dohnányi to Glasgow on January 31. The occasion was the eleventh orchestral concert of the series, and it need hardly be said that the young Hungarian pianist achieved a phenomenal success. The new-comer played Beethoven's G major Concerto, his reading of which was remarkably fine, and confirmed his claim to rank amongst the foremost pianists of the day. In the symphony of the evening—Schumann's D minor—as in the accompaniment to the concerto, the band, under Mr. Bruch, earned high praise. Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Scottish Rhapsody, No. 2 ("Burns"), again gave much pleasure to the audience. At the popular concert, on the 4th ult., a couple of novelties found place: Mr. J. B. McEwen's "Overture to a Comedy" and a Serenade for wind instruments from the pen of Richard Strauss. The overture contains many bright and lively passages, and the composer must certainly be encouraged to "go on and prosper." Mr. Sons excelled in Henschel's Ballade for solo violin and orchestra, and the programme otherwise included Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony. Madame Marian McKenzie was the vocalist.

The programme for the twelfth classical concert was entirely choral, and musicians were again grateful for the opportunity of renewing acquaintance with Dr. Villiers Stanford's "The Revenge." The Glasgow Choral Union and the Scottish Orchestra sang and played with admirable effect, and Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted in his usual careful manner. "The Revenge" was followed by the first concert performance of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's opera "Diarmid." The solos were entrusted to Miss Kirkby Lunn, Madame Marie Duma, Mr. Philip Brozel, and Mr. John Sandbrook, and each and all heroically passed through their ordeal. Mr. MacCunn himself conducted, Mr. Bradley having piloted the choir through the various rehearsals.

The last classical concert for the season took place on the 14th ult., when Mr. Bruch and his orchestra gave, in almost every respect, a very satisfying reading of the "Eroica" Symphony. Excellent performances also fell to the lot of Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem "Phaëton" and to Berlioz's "Carnaval Romain." The vocalist of the evening was Madame Tirzah Hamlen Ruland. The usual "plebiscite" programme was submitted at the last popular concert on Saturday evening, the 18th ult. Once more Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony headed the list with a voting power of 439 votes. Dvorák's symphony, "From the New World," Beethoven's "Pastoral," the "Tannhäuser," and "Leonora" (No. 3) Overtures, Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite (719 votes), and Délibes's "Sylvia" Ballet had each and all high places in the poll—one method, certainly, of discovering what the popular taste really is, and a plan which has, moreover, been faithfully carried out in Glasgow for many years.

At the third and concluding concert for the season of the Greenock Choral Union, on the 9th ult., Mr. W. T. Hoeck, the Society's enterprising conductor, introduced Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's setting of Longfellow's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," this being its first performance North of the Tweed. The work ought to appeal to societies seeking a novelty by reason of its engaging devices, shared in alike by both choir and orchestra. The "Golden Legend" was received with all the cordiality due to an old friend. The soloists, Miss Thudichum, Miss Elmslie Cran, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Watkin Mills, acquitted themselves admirably. A contingent from the Scottish Orchestra had charge of the accompaniments and Mr. Hoeck was in full sympathy with Sullivan's ever popular work.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

Two concerts have been given by the Philharmonic Society during the past month, that of the 7th ult. being distinguished by the production of "The Water Lily," one of the latest compositions of the conductor, Mr. F. H. Cowen. The work itself is extremely beautiful and received a fair measure of justice at the hands of the chorus. The principals were Miss Palliser, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. R. W. Lee, the latter an excellent local vocalist. The orchestral work was, as is usual with the Philharmonic band, of the best, and the directorate of the Society is to be congratulated upon introducing to its subscribers so deserving and poetic a cantata as that under notice.

The Musical Society gave, on the 16th ult., Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," under Mr. F. H. Crossley, who also conducted Cowen's "St. John's Eve" at Newton-le-Willows, on the 1st ult., and Stanford's "Revenge" at Warrington a week later.

The works taken in hand by Dr. C. T. Reynolds at Birkenhead have been Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" and Mendelssohn's "Christus," which is believed hereabouts to have been originally intended for the Liverpool Philharmonic Society. The same conductor has introduced Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" to his Oswestry patrons, and Mendelssohn's "Loreley" and Gounod's "St. Cecilia" Mass to the less remote district of Runcorn.

The Orchestral Society played Mozart's Symphony (No. 35) in D (Köchel, No. 385), under Mr. Rodewald, at the City Hall, on January 28, with a delightfully delicate appreciation of extreme light and shade, and a pretty Scherzo from Mr. Courvoisier's Symphony in C was directed by the composer. A new and evidently vigorous orchestral society has been brought into existence by Mr. H. Jennings, himself a respected member of the city staff, under the style of the Municipal Officers' Guild, and its forty performers did credit to themselves at St. George's Hall on the 8th ult.

The third concerts of Mr. Schiever's and Mr. Lawson's chamber series, given respectively on January 31 and the 17th ult., furnished proof of the happily growing taste for refined orchestral music in this city.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

At the third of the Harrison concerts (the 1st ult.) the purity of tone of the higher notes of Miss Alice Esty's voice was very refreshing to ears wearied by the hysterical vibrato and simulated passion of French vocalisation; but popular as Miss Clara Butt is, and with such a wonderful organ must be, she is scarcely judicious in her selection of songs. Schubert's "Wanderer" severely tests a contralto in the most dangerous register, and Blumenthal's "He giveth His beloved sleep" was a little out of place after "The little grey fox" of Maud Valérie White. The violin and pianoforte playing of Mr. William Henley and Miss Ilona Eibenschütz were the salt of a programme further diversified by the pleasant quartets of the Georgian glee party.

At the Royal College several open practices have been given lately; one evening being devoted to a delightful recital of Mendelssohn's wonderful "Midsummer Night's Dream" music with complete orchestra, and another to a display of solo singing and playing of excellent promise; especially remarkable being the progress of a young violinist, Margaret Challenor, and the performance of Schumann's "Symphonische Etuden" by Miss Néruda's pupil, Helen Brown.

Although more than a month has passed since the first performance here of Mr. Cowen's "Ruth," it is impossible to leave unnoticed the pastoral charm which so pleasantly characterises a great part of the work and indissolubly unites it to the simple tale unfolded. As I confidently anticipated, the songs of the gleaners and of the harvest home were received with excitement; and the warm thanks which the conductor gave to the choir were thoroughly earned by the enthusiasm thrown into the interpretation of the choral strains. Of the orchestral performances of the month no praise could be too high. The third and fourth symphonies of the greatest of all orchestral masters were never better rendered; and, in spite of Mr. Cowen's evident and almost obstinate reluctance to appropriate the applause of a crowded audience as a tribute to himself, he was, after the C minor Symphony, compelled repeatedly to acknowledge the long-continued cheering. On the 2nd ult. Mr. Brodsky repeated, with even increased vigour and refinement, the extraordinarily difficult Violin Concerto of Tschaïkowsky, which he introduced here last season. No pianist is more warmly welcomed in Manchester than Mr. Borwick; but few of the listeners were quite prepared for the depth of expression which he threw into the Schumann Concerto, or for the skill and exquisite delicacy whereby he enlivened the many variations with which Grieg embellished the somewhat lugubrious air which forms the theme of his so-called "Ballade."

The performance of "Elijah," on the evening of the 16th ult., was in every respect excellent; but chiefly remarkable for the capital singing of the choir. All the more important choruses—and which of them is not important?—were given with enthusiasm and good judgment; the distinctness of enunciation being specially noteworthy and highly to the credit of Mr. R. H. Wilson, the choir director. Who, looking at the crowded hall, could prate about the decadence of Mendelssohn? What a pity that Englishmen so love his music! The principals were Miss Mabel Berrey—whose voice is gaining strength—Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Santley; and very efficient aid was rendered by members of the choir—Mrs. Pashley and Mrs. Tonge, Mr. Holt and Mr. Richardson. The services rendered by Mr Fogg at the organ could hardly be overestimated, the force was always sufficient without being obtrusive.

For the concert on the 23rd ult. the "Pastoral" Symphony is announced; and Mr Carl Fuchs will be the violoncello soloist.

Mr. Max Mayer, who for many years has persistently struggled to stimulate a taste for classical chamber music, brought to his second concert, on the 8th ult., not only Miss Wietrowetz and Mr. Hugo Becker to aid him in Beethoven's C minor violin and pianoforte duet (Op. 30), in the early work in F major for pianoforte and violoncello of Richard Strauss, and in Dvorák's Trio in F minor (Op. 65), but also an able interpreter — Mr. Leonard Sickert—of the Lieder of Brahms and Schumann. And in the same hall Mr. Brodsky, on the 15th ult., concluded the third series of those meetings, the proceeds of which are generously devoted to the encouragement and prolongation of their studies of the most promising pupils of the College. The programme included Mendelssohn's E minor Quartet and Brahms's E flat Trio (Op. 40), with Miss Néruda (pianoforte) and Mr. Paersch (horn); and fittingly concluded with a most finished performance of the great Beethoven Septet.

The concert of Dr. Watson's Vocal Society was very successful and well attended on the 8th ult., in spite of at least two other attractions, one of which demands notice. It is a source of great gratification that not only have we in the centre of the city regular orchestral performances of unsurpassed merit, but that Mr. Cowen's influence is well felt even in the surrounding districts, and especially in North Manchester, where a young band has sprung up under his presidency; and, under the direction of Mr. Charles Taylor, is already capable of doing good work and promising better achievement as the result of zealous and untiring labour.

Mr. Pyne's organ recital programme on the 11th ult. included Bach's Toccata and Fugue in F, an Andante by Paul Devred, H. Smart's "Marziale" in C, and some smaller pieces.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

A very interesting and highly creditable performance of "The Messiah" took place on January 26, in Durham Cathedral, under the direction of Dr. Armes. A chorus of some 250 voices was drawn from St. Hilda's Female Training College, Beds Male Training College, the Dunelm Choral Society, the Durham University Choral Society, and the Durham Cathedral Old Choristers' Association, assisted, of course, by the present members of the Cathedral choir. The orchestra consisted chiefly of members of the Durham Amateur Orchestral Society, with Mr. Arthur Wallerstein as leader. The soloists were Masters Dixon and Lisle, and Messrs. Jackson, Macdonald, Peacock, and Duncanson, all members of the Cathedral choir, and the Rev. Canon Bennett presided at the organ. It is estimated that over 7,000 persons were present on the occasion, and such was the success of the performance that opinions were expressed on all sides that periodical renderings of popular oratorios in the Cathedral, under somewhat similar conditions, would meet a decided want in the locality.

The Sunderland Amateur Orchestral Society gave its first public concert in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, on January 24, under the direction of Mr. C. Francis Lloyd. The programme was rendered in such a manner as to more than justify the formation of the Society. The vocalists were Mrs. Whatford, Miss Sara James, Mr. Whatford, and Mr. W. Tone Allen.

One of the most enjoyable concerts ever given by the Middlesbrough Musical Union took place in the Town Hall, Middlesbrough, on the 1st ult., when the programme was entrusted to the Hallé Orchestra, in conjunction with the Musical Union Choir. Mr. Cowen's setting of Collins's "Ode to the Passions," produced at the last Leeds Festival, received a most praiseworthy rendering. After the performance of his Ode, Mr. Cowen, who conducted, received quite an ovation.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Nottingham Philharmonic Choir gave a performance of Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" and Bridge's "Flag of England," on January 26. The artists were Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Miss Janet Spicer, Mr. W. R. Maxwell, and Mr. Ivor Foster. The chorus work needs more than a passing word of praise and reflects the greatest credit on the conductor, Dr. Horner.

At Derby, on January 27, Harold Henry's Orchestral Society gave its first concert of the season. A feature of the concert was a Romance for full orchestra (MS.) from

Mr. Henry's own pen, conducted by the composer, which received a hearty reception and showed evidences of the composer's rich vein of melody and ease in orchestration. The soloists were Miss Alice Ward and Mr. Edwin Thorpe, a violoncellist of far more than average ability. Mr. Sadler was leader and accompanist and Mr. E. M. Barber conducted.

Mr. Henry J. Wood appeared in a new rôle on the 6th ult., when he gave a lecture, "On Singing as an Art," to a closely packed audience in the University College. Mr. Wood dealt with the means for producing sound, which resulted in a carefully studied paper on the anatomy of the vocal organs. Mr. Wood had arranged a most attractive programme of songs in Russian, Danish, French, German, Italian, and English, which were artistically rendered by Mrs. Wood and Mr. Louis Fröhlich, two pupils of whom Mr. Wood is justly proud. Mr. Wood's setting of "The sea hath its pearls," a charming song, was sung con amore by Mr. Fröhlich, and received a hearty ovation.

On the following afternoon Mr. Wood gave a second lecture, "On the Cultivation of the Singing Voice." This proved to be a continuation of the previous one, but was more interesting, as it dealt so much more directly with the subject of singing. In treating of "breathing," Mr. Wood supports the Italian or costal system, and leaves the clavicular and diaphragmatic methods to take care of themselves. Much emphasis was laid upon the duties of the tongue and lips as well as the palate, and the art of correct enunciation, phrasing, and rhythm were also admirably dwelt upon. As in the former lecture, an admirable programme was rendered in refined style by the same vocalists, accompanied by the lecturer in a manner deserving the highest praise.

On Tuesday, the 7th ult., the Nottingham Glee Club was responsible for a very agreeable entertainment, when the Nottingham Glee Quartet rendered part-songs in a most efficient manner. "Breathe not of parting," an arrangement from Mendelssohn, by Mr. J. Adcock, was performed for the first time and met with a hearty reception. The vocalists were Mr. Jack Robertson and Mr. Arthur Lakin, and Mr. G. F. Johnson contributed two violin solos.

The chief feature of the Sacred Harmonic Society's concert, on the 9th ult., was a performance of Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch." The artists were Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Peterkin, and Mr. Radford. The chorus did its work magnificently and gave a very fine rendering of the unaccompanied funeral anthem, "Brother, thou art gone before us." The band, under Mr. H. J. Wood, executed its work in a manner calling for great praise.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society gave a successful concert in the Albert Hall on January 30. The members sang with admirable precision, finish, and tone Beale's madrigal "What ho! what ho!" "The Tyrol" (Thomas), "Come, bounteous May" (Spofforth), "The long day closes" (Sullivan), and "Crowned with clusters" (Mellon). Associated with the Society were the Meister Glee Singers, Madame Alice Gomez, Mr. Hollmann, and others. Mr. J. A. Rodgers conducted.

The Rotherham Choral Society performed Parry's "Job" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend" on the 7th ult., under the direction of Mr. T. Brameld. In submitting two such exacting works the Society taxed its members severely, but they emerged from the test with much credit to themselves and their conductor. The chorus-singing in "Job" was in the highest degree praiseworthy. The choral portions were splendidly given—vigour, attack, phrasing, and unanimity being alike admirable. In the "Golden Legend" these qualities were again evident, and for a fine rendering of "O gladsome light" the choir was persistently encored. The orchestra accompanied both works in capable style. The principals were Miss Margaret Coomber, Miss Lilian Hovey, Mr. Tom Child, Mr. Joseph Lycett, and Mr. David Hughes.

The St. John's (Abbeydale) Choral Society performed Haydn's "Creation," on the 22nd ult., under Mr. G. A. Leed; and the same work was given, on the 27th, by the Attercliffe Zion Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. W. W. Chisholm.

A choral society has been formed in Eyam (Derbyshire) with Mr. J. W. Froggatt as conductor. Judging by the success of its opening concert, at which Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" was performed, the organisation will prosper.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

In Leeds there have, during the past month, been two concerts of more than local interest. On the 1st ult. two of the most promising of young artists made their first appearance in Yorkshire at one of the Leeds Subscription concerts. The violinist, Miss Leonora Jackson, reflected the spirit of her master, Joachim, most faithfully in the great Chaconne. Ernst von Dohnányi, on the other hand, revealed a temperament of his own in his pianoforte solos, and the respective qualities of the two were strongly contrasted in the "Kreutzer" Sonata. Miss Ada Crossley was the vocalist. On the 8th ult. the Leeds Choral Union gave a concert performance of Mancinelli's opera-cantata "Hero and Leander." Considering its many difficulties it was most creditably done, under Mr. Benton's direction, the soloists, Miss Esty, Miss Hovey, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Daniel Price, proving thoroughly efficient, if hardly physically equal to the strain placed upon them. The band and chorus, if not note-perfect, got through their task without disaster. Another "Hero and Leander," the less ambitious but thoroughly artistic cantata by Dr. C. H. Lloyd, was given by a suburban society connected with St. Chad's Church, on the 6th ult. The programme also included Mr. MacCunn's "Lord Ullin's Daughter," both being conducted by Mr. H. Percy Richardson, while the solo parts were taken by Miss Lily Pearce and Mr. John Browning. Mr. Richardson is a Bach enthusiast, and his enthusiasm has taken practical shape in a series of four recitals devoted exclusively to the famous "Forty-eight." Historical and analytical comments were furnished by the vicar of St. Chad's, the Rev. W. H. Stables, and by the Rev. W. F. Moulton, both amateurs well qualified for their task. It was as gratifying as it was certainly surprising to find that Leeds could furnish a fair-sized audience for what was calculated to prove "caviare to the general." On January 28 a very enjoyable chamber concert was given by Messrs. Elliott and Fawcett (violins), Haigh (viola), J. and C. Walton (violoncellos), and N. H. Bell (pianoforte). Schubert's String Quintet in C (Op. 163), the fifth of Beethoven's "Lobkowitz" Quartets, and the well-known Pianoforte Quartet by Rheinberger, in E flat, were thoroughly well played, the ensemble being particularly good. Concerts given by Mr. Tom Child, a local tenor, on the 10th ult., and by Miss Hattersley, a promising young violinist, on the following day, both possessed features of some interest.

At Huddersfield, on the 14th ult., the Rhondda Male-Voice Choir and the brilliant organist, Mr. W. S. Hoyte, provided the chief features of a miscellaneous programme. The Halifax Choral Society, being in debt, gave an economical concert on the 9th ult., the programme being supplied entirely by members of the Society. Though not calling for any criticism, it is satisfactory to learn that the attendance was good, so that it is to be trusted the result will be of material help to this excellent Society. A new series of chamber concerts has been begun at Halifax by Mr. H. F. Webster. At the first concert, on January 25, an interesting feature was a MS. pianoforte quartet in C minor, by a local musician, Mr. H. van Dyk, a work that is well written for the instruments, shows considerable melodic power, and is concise and free from laboured effects.

At Bradford, the subscription concert, on the 10th ult., at which Miss Wietrowetz and Mr. Leonard Borwick appeared, and a chamber concert, given on the 17th ult. by Miss Ethel Cross, a local pianist, deserve mention. On the 11th ult. the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave an interesting programme, including several popular orchestral classics.

At Harrogate there was, on the 10th ult., a joint musical service, in which six of the church choirs of the town took part, numbering altogether about 200 voices, under Mr. C. L. Naylor's conductorship. The anthems were Dr. E. W. Naylor's "Behold, God is great," and "Round about the starry throne" ("Samson").

At a time when municipal orchestras are so much in the air, it is encouraging to find private and voluntary effort accomplishing as much as has been done by Mr. G. H. Hirst at Dewsbury, where the local Orchestral Society gave, on the 7th ult., a concert, to which Mr. Edward German's presence and assistance lent a special interest. His influence over an orchestra was shown by extraordinarily spirited performances of selections from his music written for "As You Like It," "Much Ado about Nothing," "Romeo," and "Henry VIII.," together with a delightful Suite for flute and pianoforte. Mr. Walton's violoncello solos and songs by Miss Frood and Mr. Blagbro, a highly finished vocalist, were among the features of this excellent concert.

At Keighley, on the 7th ult., a "Carrodus concert" was given, and in nowise belied its name, for no fewer than seven "Carrodi" took part. On the 3rd ult. a concert was given at York by Miss Lottie Hopkins, a local soprano.

The Ripon Choral Society gave Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," on the 7th ult., the Rev. F. H. Taylor conducting for the last time, having resigned his precentorship at the Cathedral on his preferment to a country vicarage. The principals were Miss Bishop, Miss Brooke, Messrs. Fallas and Senior, and the performance seems to have been an admitted success.

The Cleckheaton Orchestral Society, a very promising institution, gave a concert on the 6th ult., Mozart's G minor Symphony being very creditably played under Mr. Stott's direction, while the brilliant violin playing of Mr. Weist Hill was a noticeable feature of the programme.

On January 31 "The Messiah" was given by a fairly large choir in the Queen Street Chapel at Scarborough, under Mr. H. Hill's conductorship, the principals being Miss Bishop, Madame Cawley, Messrs. Raper and Pecket. On the same date a miscellaneous concert, by the Hull Vocal Society, the programme of which included an interesting series of compositions belonging to the golden age of English music, may be recorded. It would seem, however, that the musical aspirations of Scarborough are not satisfied by ordinary concerts, nor even by a pier band, for it is proposed that there should be a musical festival in the town, and, as the result of a preliminary meeting, arrangements are being made for the enterprise. The "Hymn of Praise" was given, on the 14th ult., by the Selby Choral Society, Mr. Tom Foster being the conductor and Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Lee, and Mr. Edward Kemp the principal vocalists.

The annual general meeting of the Choir Benevolent Fund was held at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 7th ult., Mr. Calkin Lewis in the chair. A number of representative members from Metropolitan and provincial choirs were present. The report read by the secretary indicated the continued prosperity of the Fund and referred to a highly successful Festival held at Windsor during the year, to an increase of payments out of the "Sick and Infirm Fund," and to a recent satisfactory valuation of the funds of the Society. The committee of management and secretary are to be congratulated on their prudent and efficient control of this excellent Society. Its claims and benefits cannot be too warmly commended, not only to the organists and lay-clerks of the cathedral and collegiate establishments throughout the country, but also to the consideration of the governing bodies of these establishments, who may naturally be supposed to show an interest in the well-being of those who take so important a part in the due and efficient rendering of the musical services of the Church.

Distinction was given to Mr. Elderhorst's ninth chamber concert at the Steinway Hall, which took place on the 1st ult., by the first performance in London of Dvořák's String Quartet in G (Op. 77), which was effectively interpreted by Messrs. Elderhorst, Kornfeld, Hobday, Whitehouse, and Claude Hobday. The first movement, Allegro con fuoco, is extremely melodious and picturesque, the Scherzo and its trio are thoroughly Slavonic in idiom, the Andante possesses fascinating grace and expressiveness, and the Finale is spirited and engaging. French music dominated the programme of Mr. Elderhorst's tenth chamber concert, on Tuesday evening, the 7th ult., which was opened by M. Camille Chevillard's Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 8), not previously heard in London, and played on this occasion in an effective manner by the composer and M. Rivarde.

The Victoria Madrigal Society does well to combine choice examples of unaccompanied part-music by the old masters with those of the modern school. At the concert at St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 9th ult., the choir sang with commendable steadiness Morley's "My bonny lass," Walmisley's "Sweete flowers," and Weelkes's "As Vesta was," all the chief points being brought out with excellent effect. Good performances were also given of Mendelssohn's "O hills, O vales," Pearsall's "Shoot, false love," Walter Macfarren's "You stole my love," and a pleasant new madrigal by Dr. Murray, "In the blush of eventide." Vocal solos were contributed by Mdlle. Bué, Mr. Herbert Emlyn, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. Ellie Marx played violin pieces, and Dr. G. Stanley Murray conducted with much spirit.

Mr. William Nicholl was supported by several well-known artists at his concert at St. James's Hall, on January 30. With his customary charm of voice and style this popular tenor rendered Dvorák's "Songs my mother taught me," the Scottish ditty "Willie's gane to Melville Castle," and other pieces. Miss Catherine Murray (a contralto who sang with much refinement the romance from "Gioconda"), Miss Ethel Bevans, Mrs. Helen Trust, and Mr. George Thorp were also among the vocalists. Mr. Georg Liebling, the pianist, played Chopin's Ballade in G minor, and Mr. Joseph Ivimey satisfactorily interpreted on the violin Wieniawski's "Légende."

A most successful chamber concert (the first of the present series) was given by Messrs. F. Lewis Thomas and Norman Bath at the Co-Operative Hall, Bromley, Kent, on Thursday evening, the 9th ult., when the following programme was performed before a large audience: Schumann's Quartet in E flat major (Op. 74) for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, Grieg's Sonata (Op. 13) for pianoforte and violin, and Haydn's String Quartet (Op. 76, No. 4). The concert-givers were assisted by Mr. Druan Bath (second violin), Mr. E. Tomlinson (viola), and Mr. Tennyson Werge (violoncello). Vocal pieces were also contributed by Madame Kate Cove.

The London Sunday School Choir held its annual Festival at the Albert Hall, on the 18th ult., when anthems and choruses were sung with spirit and expression by a choir of a thousand voices conducted by Mr. George Merritt. The rendering of Maunder's "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem," and of "Achieved is the glorious work" ("Creation") specially commanded approval. The London Sunday School Orchestra, under Mr. David M. Davis, played several pieces. Songs were contributed by Miss Esther Palliser and Mr. Ben Davies, Miss Gertrude Lester successfully gave violin solos, and Mr. Horace G. Holmes presided at the organ.

A concert was given on the 11th ult., at the Vestry Hall, Hampstead, by the students of the Primrose Hill School. Considerable indication was manifested of the careful training which the students had received at the hands of their able teacher, Miss Lavinia Conder. The choice of music selected for performance was generally of a high standard. The interest of the concert was increased by the professional assistance rendered vocally by Mr. Vivian Bennetts and Miss Hamilton Smith, and by Miss Olive Kennett's admirable recitations, which were very warmly encored.

Mr. Homer Lind, most favourably known in London by his embodiment of Beckmesser in "Die Meistersinger," gave a recital of German songs, on the 10th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. He was ably assisted by Miss Maud Powell and Mr. Herbert Parsons, whose violin and pianoforte playing provided agreeable variety.

Madame Hanka Schjelderup, the pianist and vocalist, at her concert at St. James's Hall, on the 1st ult., maintained the favourable impression she created on preceding occasions. Although her ability was again more marked as a player than as a singer, she sang with much brightness Délibes's "Les Filles de Cadix," and did justice to some Norwegian folk-songs. In Chopin's Fantaisie in F minor, and compositions by Liszt, Schumann, and Grieg, neat and tasteful execution was manifested in a high degree.

The fifteenth concert of the Borough of West Ham Choral and Orchestral Society took place on the 8th ult., in Stratford Town Hall, when an excellent performance of Handel's "Samson" was given by a choir and band of 120 performers. The soloists were Miss Amy Sargent, Miss Edith Hands, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. Arthur Barlow. Mr. D. Caldwell played the trumpet obbligato, Mr. G. B. Gilbert presided at the organ, and Mr. W. Harding Bonner was an efficient conductor.

The appointment of musical director to the Pavilion and Gardens, Buxton, Derbyshire, has been offered to, and accepted by, Mr. Churchill Sibley. A fine orchestra and military band will be placed under his exclusive control, and opportunity will be afforded for the performance of the highest class of music. Mr. Sibley has conducted many works by English composers, and he will doubtless not overlook the claims of English music in the formation of his programmes.

After twenty-one years of indefatigable and self-sacrificing work as organist and choir-director at the Church of SS. Michael and All Angels, Ryde, Miss Margaret Fowles is about to send in her resignation of the post. This news will be received with much regret by Miss Fowles's large circle of friends. Miss Fowles was the founder (or foundress) of the Ryde Choral Union in 1874, and she was also its conductor for twenty years.

A fine performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given in the new concert hall of the Battersea Polytechnic by the Choral Society, conducted by Dr. Dunstan, head of the music department, on the 11th ult. Mr. Daniel Price, who was in excellent voice, sang the part of the Prophet, the other principal vocalists being Madame Edwardes, Miss Adelaide Lamb, and Mr. Sinclair Dunn. Miss Mary Thomas and Mr. Stokoe accompanied.

The Clapton Philharmonic Society, recruited from the church choirs of the neighbourhood, gave a very excellent performance of Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" and Sullivan's Te Deum on the 1st ult., in Stamford Hill Congregational Church. Miss Ethel Winn, Mr. Albert James, and Mr. Donald King rendered the solos, and Mr. John Jeffreys presided at the organ. Mr. Arthur Roby was an efficient conductor.

Dr. William Lemare delivered a highly interesting lecture on "Glees and Glee Writers," at the Bermondsey Settlement, on the 11th ult. The musical illustrations were admirably rendered by Miss E. M. Lemare, the Misses Godden, the members of the Bermondsey Settlement Glee Society, and the gentlemen of All Saints' choir, Leyton.

An excellent performance of Aspa's attractive "Gipsy Cantata" took place in the Public Hall, West Norwood, on the 6th ult., with scenic accessories and with the aid of an efficient orchestra. Mr. John B. Gasmann conducted the work, which gave general satisfaction and pleasure to an appreciative audience.

An error, due to a lapsus calami on the part of a correspondent, appeared on page 90 of our last issue in reference to the formation of a permanent orchestra in Dublin. For "thirty-four," read "thirteen or fourteen rehearsals are to be held before any concert is given."

Mr. F. A. W. Docker gave an interesting lecture on "The History of the Oratorio," with vocal and instrumental illustrations, at the Vestry Hall, Little Russell Street, Bloomsbury, on the 14th ult.

A successful concert was given at the Birkbeck Institution, on the 8th ult., by the violin classes, under the able direction of Mr. G. A. Parker.

Mr. Edwin O. Sachs has been appointed architect and technical adviser to Covent Garden Theatre in connection with the structural and mechanical features of stage mechanism.

Dr. W. J. Treutler read an interesting and erudite paper on "Music in relation to man and animals," before the Musical Association, at the Royal College of Organists, on the 14th ult.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Antwerp.—Preparations are going forward to celebrate in a worthy manner the approaching tercentenary of the birth of one of Antwerp's greatest sons—viz., Van Dyck. Musical art will be represented in the festivities by a cantata specially written for the occasion by M. Peter Benoit, the veteran director of the Conservatoire, who also wrote the cantata for the Rubens festival in 1877.

Carlsruhe.—A new lyrical drama by Franz Servais, entitled "Ion," was brought out, for the first time on any stage, at the Court Theatre, on January 29, under Herr Mottl's direction, with good success. The subject of the piece is taken from Greek mythology, while the music is constructed, with much ability and some originality, particularly in the orchestration, on Wagnerian lines. On the 19th ult. the personnel and orchestra of the Court Theatre gave a performance of Berlioz's "Les Troyens," at the Mannheim Hof-Theater, where the work had not been given before, Herr Felix Mottl being the conductor.

Cologne.—The first performance in Germany of Goldmark's new opera, "Die Kriegsgefangene," took place at the Stadt-Theater, on the 2nd ult., when the interesting and melodious work was received with much favour, both by the public and the leading organs of the press.——An enthusiastic reception was accorded, at the seventh Gürzenich concert, last month, to Fritz Volbach's ballad for chorus, soli, and orchestra, "Page and King's Daughter," under Dr. Wüllner's direction. Herr Volbach—the highly esteemed conductor of the Mayence Liedertafel—was a gratified and much applauded witness of the performance.

Dresden.—The opera "Der Cid," by Peter Cornelius, was produced for the first time at the Royal Opera, on January 27, under Capellmeister von Schuch's direction, and received with much favour by a numerous audience. The posthumous work of the gifted composer of "Der Barbier von Bagdad" is likely to maintain itself in the répertoire of the Opera for some time.

Eisenach.—The Beethoven Concert given, on January 29, by the Meiningen orchestra, with the co-operation of the united Meiningen and Eisenach Choral Societies, was rendered memorable on account of the demand for tickets having been such that two performances had to be given, one in the afternoon and a repetition in the evening. The programme included the Ninth Symphony, the "Leonora" Overture (No. 3), and the Violin Concerto, the latter interpreted in superb style by Professor Joachim. Herr Fritz Steinbach conducted the orchestra, Professor Thureau was the choral director, and the soloists in the Ninth Symphony included Fräulein Therese Behr, of Berlin, and Herr Emil Pinks, of Leipzig.

Frankfort-on-Main.—The charming new comic opera "Das Unmöglichste von Allem" (founded upon Lope de Vega's "El major imposible"), by Herr Anton Urspruch, who is also the author of the libretto, was brought out at the Stadt-Theater on January 31, with great success. There is but one opinion amongst competent critics here as to the superior merits of the work. It will be performed ere long at the Royal Opera, Berlin.

Gotha.—Max Bruch's new secular oratorio, "Gustavus Adolphus," was produced, with considerable success, on January 25, under the composer's direction, and again a few days later, when it was received with even greater favour.

Leipzig.—An excellent first complete performance of Liszt's oratorio "Christus" was given by the well-known Riedel'sche Gesangverein, on January 29, under the direction of Dr. Goehler. The work was most enthusiastically received.——A musical festival took place under the auspices of the Liszt Verein, on January 20, 22, and 23, with the co-operation of the Kaim Orchestra, of Munich, under Herr Weingartner's direction, and the Chemnitz Choral Society, under the direction of Herr Mayerhoff. The performances, which were excellent throughout, included the following important works: Liszt's "Dante" Symphony, "Prometheus," and Spanish Rhapsody, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Wagner's "Meistersinger" Prelude and "Kaisermarsch," and Weingartner's Symphony in G minor. Amongst the solo performers were the pianist Busoni, the violinist Petri, Dr. L. Wüllner, and a number of other distinguished vocalists.

Madrid.—The first performance in Spain of Wagner's "Die Walküre" took place on January 29, at the Royal Opera House, which was completely filled. The Spanish version of the book was from the pen of Señor Cadanus, and the performance, the leading interpreters in which were Spaniards, was a very satisfactory one.

Moscow.—Herr Felix Weingartner made his first appearance here as the conductor of the fifth Symphony concert of the season of the Imperial Musical Society, and fairly electrified his audience with his interpretation of Gluck's "Alceste" Overture, Borodin's Symphony (No. 2), and his own symphonic poem, "Gefilde der Seeligen."

Munich.—The musical interest of the Bavarian capital has been concentrated during the last few weeks upon the performances of the Kaim orchestra, under Herr Felix Weingartner's direction, whose pre-eminence as a conductor meets with ready recognition both on the part of the musical public and the excellent forces under his command. Amongst the works produced were the "Carneval" Overture by Dvorák, a novelty here, which was received with much favour, Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, and Beethoven's "Pastorale." The conductor's new Symphony in G major, a finely elaborated work in the "orthodox" form, was also performed, and gained him many fresh admirers. Mdlle. Marcella Pregi and Professor Julius Klengel, the Leipzig violoncello virtuoso, were amongst the soloists. An interesting concert also was that given, on the 3rd ult., by the Russian composer, Nicolai Kasanli, who, with the co-operation of the Kaim Choir and orchestra, gave a number of excerpts from Glinka's opera "Russlan and Ludmila" (held in such high estimation by both Liszt and von Bülow), which, on account of its characteristic national elements and melodious charm, produced a highly favourable impression.——Several repetitions of Siegfried Wagner's comic opera "Der Bärenhäuter" have taken place at the Royal Opera since its first production on January 22, but the interest in the new work by the son of the Bayreuth master is manifestly on the wane, there having been a considerable falling off in the demand for tickets.

Rome.—A series of eight weekly orchestral and vocal concerts, under the direction of Signor Martucci, was inaugurated, on the 6th ult., at the Saint Cecilia Academy, in the presence of a very select audience.——A new three-act opera, "Trillo del Diavolo," by Signor Falchi, achieved a great success at its first performance, on January 31, at the Teatro Argentina. The hero of the new work—it is scarcely necessary to say—is the famous violinist, Giuseppe Tartini, whose celebrated "trillo" constitutes an important feature in the piece.

Yokohama.—The recent first performance here of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" deserves to be recorded, the executants being a company of musicians on tour, reinforced by local amateurs.

OBITUARY.

Frau Amalie Joachim, whose death, on the 3rd ult., is announced at Berlin, was in her younger days one of the most distinguished contralto singers of Germany. Born on May 10, 1839, at Marburg, in Styria, she made her début as Fräulein Weiss (recte Schneeweiss), at the theatre in Troppau, when only fourteen years of age. She later on obtained an engagement at the Kärnthnerthor Theatre, Vienna, but it was not until, in 1862, she became a member of the Royal Opera, Hanover, that her remarkable gifts as a dramatic singer obtained general recognition. Her career in opera would doubtless have been a brilliant one, but on her marriage with Professor Joachim, in the following year, she retired from the operatic stage and henceforth appeared only in the concert-room. Here her success was equally pronounced, and both as an oratorio singer and interpreter of songs, Amalie Joachim was for many years unsurpassed in the Fatherland. Frau Joachim but seldom appeared in public in recent years, except on the occasion of her annually given series of recitals, which both in Berlin and other leading German towns invariably formed a source of attraction.

We regret to record the death, in her seventy-fifth year, of Mrs. Chipp, widow of Dr. Edmund Thomas Chipp, formerly organist of Ely Cathedral, which took place at Palace Green, Ely, on the 18th ult.

George Gemunder, the famous American violin maker, died on January 15, at Astoria (U.S.), at the advanced age of eighty-three. He was a native of Ingelfingen, in Würtemburg.

William B. Elliott, an esteemed organist and choral director, died in Philadelphia, on January 22, aged fifty-one.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MENDELSSOHN'S "WEDDING MARCH."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—Referring to the query in your January issue as to whether Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was first performed at a nuptial ceremony in this country on the occasion of the wedding of the Princess Royal in 1858, I think I am able to throw some light on the subject.

At the foot of an organ arrangement I made of the march from a pianoforte duet copy of the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, just then published by Messrs. Ewer and Co., and within a day or two of the date mentioned, is the following record:—

"Arranged for the organ by Samuel Reay, and played for the first time on such an occasion at the marriage of Mr. Tom Daniel and Miss Dorothea Carew, at St. Peter's Church, Tiverton, June 2, 1847."

As both bride and bridegroom belonged to well-known and influential families, and the function had attracted an overflowing gathering of all sorts and conditions of people (the bride especially being greatly beloved), is it not just possible that the performance of the "Wedding March" on this occasion may have had something to do with bringing it into fashion as a nuptial piece?

An entry on June 25 of the same year reminds me that on that day I made an arrangement of the lovely Notturno from the same music, which I played very shortly after on the great Birmingham organ, when officiating there during an absence of my old friend and master, James Stimpson, for so many years the distinguished organist of the Town Hall.—I am, yours faithfully,

Newark, February 8, 1899. Samuel Reay.

[The above letter is an interesting sequel to that from Dr. E. J. Hopkins on the same subject which appeared in our February issue, p. 122.—Ed., M.T.]

BRITISH MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—A great deal has been written and much more said lately on the subject of the neglect of British music, and it has been suggested to me that my experiences might interest your readers.

As many are aware, during the past four seasons I have given over two hundred symphony concerts in Bournemouth, at which I have frequently introduced works by British composers, having given over one hundred performances of such works, of which twenty have been played for the first time. I have, therefore, had a fair experience of seeing how my audiences were inclined to receive the efforts of native composers, and the result has been decidedly gratifying.

Mr. Edward German has, on two occasions, conducted selections from his own compositions (including "Hamlet"), which were received with much enthusiasm by distinctly better audiences than usual, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade (conducted by himself) attracted a crowded house. Dr. Villiers Stanford has promised to conduct a symphony of his own, and I hope to induce Sir Hubert Parry and Mr. Elgar to favour us likewise, and I can assure them of a hearty welcome.

Art is and should be cosmopolitan; but do let us show, even in music, a little of that patriotism of which we are so proud.—I remain, your obedient Servant,

Dan Godfrey, Jun.

Bournemouth, February 15.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Abergavenny.—The Abergavenny Choral Society gave a meritorious performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment," in the Town Hall, on the 13th ult. The principals were Miss Mildred Howell, Miss Beatrice Jones, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Fred. Lightowler. The band and chorus, under the able direction of Mr. W. R. Carr, numbered 140 performers. Mr. Arthur Angle was the leader of the band and Mr. Fred. Bumford and Mr. Bert Restall presided at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively.

Belvedere (Kent).—The eighth annual concert of the Belvedere Choral Society was given in the Public Hall, on the 19th ult., before a crowded audience, when Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" was performed, under the able conductorship of Mr. T. A. Bevis. The principals were Miss Annie Swinfen, Mr. W. Fell, and Mr. Edgar Archer, who did ample justice to Smart's melodious and grateful music. A word of commendation must be given to the choir for its excellent singing.

Berkhamsted.—A performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was given by the Berkhamsted School Musical Society, on the evening of the 14th ult., in the School Chapel, conducted by Mr. J. T. Bavin. The soloists, Miss Katherine Elder, Miss Winifred Marwood, and Mr. Arthur Court, were heard to advantage in their respective parts. The orchestra, ably led by Mr. W. B. Carter, did its work in first-class style. Mr. Montague Borwell was an efficient organist.

Blaenavon.—The opera of "King Bulbous," words by P. H. Crib and music by H. Festing Jones, was performed in character in the Workmen's Hall, on the 9th ult., before a delighted and highly appreciative audience. The libretto is exceedingly laughable, and the actors brought out the "points" so well that the house continually swayed with merriment. The music also drew forth rapturous applause. The opera is well adapted to delight and amuse an audience, and it has been much talked of since its performance in Blaenavon.

Broughty Ferry.—A meritorious performance of Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" and Macfarren's "May-Day" was given by the church choir, on the 2nd ult., in St. Stephen's Church Hall. The solos, rendered by Miss Ella Westwood, Mr. W. Nicoll, and Mr. Reay, were much appreciated, and the well-balanced choruses reflected much credit upon the ability of the conductor, Mr. A. W. Hayward, organist of the church.

Chester-le-Street (Co. Durham).—The Chester-le-Street Choral Society gave a most successful performance of Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," on the 7th ult., when the choruses were sung with taste and spirit by a well-balanced choir of sixty voices. The orchestra was led, as usual, by Mr. E. Laws, of Durham. The Rev. G. W. Anson Firth, minor Canon of Durham Cathedral, conducted.

Collingham.—Haydn's "Creation" was excellently performed by the Collingham Choral Society, at its concert in the Public Hall, on the 2nd ult. The soloists were Miss Hettie Creasey, Miss Florence Lansdown, Mr. E. Dunkerton, and Mr. C. Woodward. Miss Bertha Wigram accompanied and Mr. Woolley conducted.

Consett.—On the 8th ult. a concert, reflecting credit on all concerned, was given by the Consett and District Philharmonic Society, in the New Town Hall, when Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" was performed, with Miss Annie Nelson, Madame Bellas-Dryden, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. George Uttley as the solo singers. Mr. G. P. Stephenson ably conducted.

Cowes.—The Northwood Musical Society gave a very praiseworthy performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" on January 24, under the skilful conductorship of Mr. Frederick Rutland. The solos were sung with taste and feeling by Madame Leonora Ellerton, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. H. Turnpenny, and Mr. T. B. Streatfeild.

Denbigh.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of "Elijah" at the Drill Hall, on the 7th ult. The solos were well sung by Miss Jennie Foulkes, Miss Annie Parry, Mr. T. Barlow, and Mr. Ivor Foster. Mr. A. H. Allen presided ably at the organ and Mr. J. H. Williams conducted.

Dudley.—The Dudley Choral Union performed Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Haydn's "Autumn" in the Public Hall, with full band and chorus, on the 1st ult. The soloists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Nellie Pritchard, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Henry Sunman. Mr. W. H. Aston was the able conductor of a very successful concert.

Filey.—The concert given by the Filey and District Choral Union on January 31 opened with Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," in which the solo was taken by Madame Goodall (Leeds), who gave to it an intelligent and sympathetic rendering, the choruses being sung with exactness and considerable attention to light and shade. Mr. W. H. Cass's violin solo, Polonaise in A, by Wieniawski, was executed in a thoroughly masterful manner, and the Misses Harvey were successful in their singing of two of Mendelssohn's duets. The second part of the concert consisted of Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen." In this the principals, orchestra, and chorus entered into the spirit of the music, and the result was a very creditable rendering of the pastoral. The soloists were Madame Goodall, Mr. W. Wilkinson (York Minster), and Mr. H. D. Larkin, all of whom did credit to their respective parts. Dr. Ely, of Scarborough, was an excellent conductor.

High Wycombe.—Sir Frederick Bridge's "Cradle of Christ" was given in the Parish Church, on the 10th ult., when the composer presided at the organ. The soloists were Miss Josephine Roden, and Mr. Bertram Mills, of the Westminster Abbey Choir. Mr. G. F. Anderson, organist of the church, conducted.

Horsham.—The Horsham Musical Society gave Handel's "Samson," on the 9th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. A. P. Whitaker. The principals were Miss Maggie Purvis, Madame Emily Himing, Mr. Otto Dene, and Mr. F. C. Moore, all of whom gave great pleasure to a crowded audience. Mr. R. Harris presided at the organ and Mr. E. Lardner was the leader of an efficient orchestra. The choruses were sung with vigour and precision and the concert was one of the most successful given by the Society.

Launceston.—The Launceston Choral Society gave its annual concert in the Town Hall, on the 10th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" received an excellent rendering. The soloists were Miss Bertha Wise and Mr. Charles Slater. Mr. W. Clotworthy presided at the organ and Mr. C. S. Parsonson conducted a very successful performance with marked ability.

Leighton Buzzard.—The Leighton Music Class gave a meritorious performance of Gounod's "Redemption," on January 26, in the Corn Exchange. Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Ingham Tucker, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. Dan. Harrison sang the solos; while Mrs. Horace Munday presided at the organ and Mr. Edmund Sear conducted.

Lichfield.—The Lichfield Musical Society gave a concert in St. James's Hall, on the 7th ult. Barnby's "Rebekah" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" were rendered very effectively by the excellent chorus and orchestra. The solos were taken by Miss Gertrude Lynes, Miss Worthington, Mr. E. Kemp, and Mr. J. W. Ineson. Mr. J. B. Lott, the conductor, is to be congratulated upon the success of the whole performance.

Llanelly.—The Tabernacle Choral Society gave its twentieth concert on the 7th ult., when Mozart's Twelfth Mass was performed. The choruses were given with great power and precision, while the solos were successfully rendered by Miss Gertrude Hughes, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. F. Pearce, and Mr. A. H. Gee. An efficient orchestra rendered invaluable assistance. The concert was a great success and reflected much credit on the choir and its talented conductor, Mr. C. Meudwy Davies.

Malpas.—The eighteenth annual concert of the Malpas Choral Society took place in the Jubilee Hall, on the 14th ult., when Anderton's "Wreck of the Hesperus" was very successfully performed, under the able conductorship of Mr. H. Edwardes.

Melksham.—An excellent performance of Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was given in the Town Hall, on January 31. The soloists were Miss Agnes Walker (who specially distinguished herself), Miss Florence Rich, the Rev. W. H. Kewley, and Mr. F. H. Noyes. German's "Henry VIII." Dances were played in the second (miscellaneous) part. Mr. C. H. Ogle conducted in his usual skilful manner.

New Barnet.—The Choral Society gave its first concert in the Wesleyan Schoolroom on the 2nd ult. Stanford's "Revenge" and Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" were the works performed. The solos were taken by Miss Margaret Cooper, Miss Mary Garland, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Donald King. Mr. Herbert Crimp, the conductor, is to be congratulated.

Plumstead (Kent).—The St. Margaret's Musical Club gave an excellent rendering of Spohr's "Last Judgment," in the Freemasons' Hall, on the 7th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. George Hudson. This young Society, which is only now in the midst of its second season, is to be congratulated upon having been able to give such a difficult work so successfully. The soloists were Miss Rina Middleton, Miss Dora French, Miss Grace Elliott, Mrs. Pinkney, Miss Fort, Mr. G. Hare, Mr. A. Kemp, Mr. S. Newman, Mr. Biddiscombe, and Mr. Chapman, all of whom discharged their duties with much success. The chorus was remarkable for its purity of tone and accuracy of attack, and a very good orchestra from a well-known military band in the neighbourhood contributed very much to the success of the concert.

Redhill.—On January 25 a successful concert was given in the Market Hall, by the Redhill and Reigate Harmonic Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. G. Bartlett. Handel's "Samson" was admirably performed, the soloists being Miss Ada Patterson, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. Trefelyn David, and Mr. Daniel Price.

Rugby.—The Rugby Philharmonic Society, on the 8th ult., gave a very successful concert in the New Big School. It opened with Mendelssohn's "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage" Overture, followed by a creditable rendering of Schumann's "Faust." The soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Annie Layton, Mr. W. Fell, and Mr. Foxton Ferguson. Mr. G. H. Hidden accompanied and Mr. Basil Johnson conducted.

St. George's (Shropshire).—The Choral Union gave its first concert of the season in the room of the Workmen's Dining Hall, on the 2nd ult., before a large audience. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from Handel's "Samson," which were admirably rendered by an efficient band and chorus. The principals were Miss Constance Yorke, Miss F. Dankey (a member of the Society), Mr. W. Molineaux, and Mr. C. F. Baines. Miss Mabel Brittain brilliantly played two violin solos and Mr. P. J. Dyche contributed a solo on the violoncello. The band was led by Mr. C. Watkiss, and Mr. J. Smart conducted.

Sellindge (Kent).—A very successful performance of Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" was given by the Sellindge Choral Society, before a crowded audience, in the Schoolroom, on the 14th ult. The solo parts were allotted to Mrs. A. Mowbray, Miss A. H. Robertson, Mr. Walter Clinch, and Mr. W. E. Hedgelong. Mr. A. L. Stevenson was the conductor and Mr. C. Dee Buss officiated at the pianoforte.

Southend-on-Sea.—The Cliff Town Church Musical Society gave an excellent rendering of Stainer's sacred cantata "St. Mary Magdalen," at the Congregational Church, on the 8th ult. The solos were beautifully sung by Mrs. Richards, Mrs. Popham, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. W. L. Booth. The choir and orchestra, numbering 100 performers, were conducted by the Rev. Edward Hamilton, the pastor of the church. A large silver collection testified to the appreciation of the music by the audience. Mr. Blennerhasset (of London) presided at the organ, Mr. Berry at the American organ, and Miss Barnard at the pianoforte.

Sutton Coldfield.—The Sutton Coldfield Choral Society gave its annual concert in the Town Hall, on the 2nd ult., when Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" was performed, with Miss Laura Taylor, Mrs. Tunstall, Mr. Charles Hyde, and Mr. Ernest Healey as principals. The solos were rendered very effectively and the choruses with much spirit. Miss Edwards conducted with vivacity and Miss M. Neville was an efficient accompanist.

Swansea.—On the 16th ult. the Cwmbwrla United Choir, under the conductorship of Mr. D. Griffiths, gave a fine rendering of Haydn's "Seasons," being assisted by Miss Drinkwater, Messrs. Ben Davies and D. Hughes, and Mr. Hulley's orchestra. The choir sang excellently throughout.

Torquay.—A recital of duets for two pianofortes was given by Dr. and Mrs. Orlando A. Mansfield, on the 8th ult., on behalf of the Belgrave Literary Society, to a large and appreciative audience in the Belgrave Lecture Hall. The perfect ensemble which characterised the performance, the taste and feeling displayed by the executants, and the total absence of unfeeling execution and mere personal display, were fully appreciated, and the recital was one of the most artistic performances ever given for charitable purposes in Torquay. The programme, which was annotated by Dr. Mansfield, included sonatas by Clementi, C. E. Stephens, and Anton Krause; a scherzo by Guilmant; a posthumous introduction and rondo by Hummel, &c.

Wetheral.—On the 2nd ult. the Wetheral and Corby Choral Society gave its annual concert in the Assembly Room. Somervell's cantata "The Power of Sound" was given with commendable efficiency, under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. Reid. The soloists were Miss Ling and Mr. C. C. Dargavel, and Miss Dalzell accompanied.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. Cyril G. Church, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Agnes', Kennington Park.—Mr. Alfred H. Allen, to St. Clement's Church, Ilford.—Mr. J. J. J. Marsh, Organist and Director of the Choir to the Church of St. Alban the Martyr, Upper Ventnor, Isle of Wight.—Mr. George Leake, to St. Mark's, Southampton.

Choir Appointment.—Mr. J. J. J. Marsh, Choirmaster to Parish Church of SS. Mary and Rhadagund, Whitwell, Isle of Wight.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. M. C. M.—Haydn's "Seven last words" were originally composed in the form of seven pieces for full orchestra. He substituted, however (as the original parts show), for the Bishop's voice (i.e., his exhortation on each "word") a long recitative for a bass after each of the seven "words." The work was published (in parts) in 1787 by Artaria, of Vienna, as "7 sonate, con un Introduzione, ed al fine teremoto," for orchestra (Op. 47), for strings (Op. 48). The orchestral score is probably not to be had, but the quartet arrangement is contained in the Peters' edition of Haydn's (complete) string quartets. In its quartet form it was played for the first time in England by the late Mr. Dando, at Crosby Hall, on April 10, 1843. In regard to the present form of the work, the statement that Michael Haydn adapted the words needs corroboration, although Haydn's own preface to the edition of 1801 ought to be conclusive.

Musicus.—Schubert's "Zauberharfe" ("Rosamunde") Overture may be played Andante, ♩ = 92; Allegro vivace, 𝅗𝅥 = 144. The "Zauberharfe" was a melodrama in three acts, the music of which is said to have been completed by Schubert in a fortnight. It was produced at the Theater-an-der Wien, August 19, 1820. The fine Overture in C, "original, characteristic, and full of beauty," was published before 1828 as Op. 26 under the name of "Rosamunde," to which it seems to have no claim. The remainder of the "Zauberharfe" music is said to consist chiefly of chorus and melodrama, with only a few solos, among them a romance for tenor solo which was highly praised.

Enquirer.—The vocal score of Wagner's "Parsifal" is published, with English and German words, at 15s. net. An analysis of the work, by Dr. F. Hueffer, is issued at 1s., and a book of the words, translated into English by H. L. and F. Corder, at 1s. It would be quite possible to give illustrations of the work in illustration of your lecture in the way you suggest—viz., vocally, with accompaniment of pianoforte and small organ.

Vera.—We regret that we have not space to print the examples you send. The grace note should invariably come with the beat. You will find excellent and full advice on the subject in Franklin Taylor's "Technique and Expression in Pianoforte Playing" (Novello).

J. F. R. (Toronto).—The instrument, so far as we can judge from your description, is a Serpentcleide, a connecting link between the serpent and the ophicleide. It is essentially an ophicleide, with a body of wood instead of brass.

Diapason.—It would be both quite correct and in good taste, as well as an agreeable combination, for the air "It is enough" (Mendelssohn) to be accompanied by the organ and violoncello.

E. H.—The setting of "The Sailor's Grave" about which you enquire is probably that composed by Mrs. R. Arkwright many years ago.

M. V.—"Time" would naturally refer to rhythmic accuracy, and "tempo" to the proper rates of speed; the observance of ritenutos, accellerandos, &c.

W. J. D.—See "The place of music in public worship," by the Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth (Elliot Stock).

A. W. G.—Reply next month.

⁎⁎ Notices of Concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded to us immediately after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot possibly be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. Crown 8vo, 1s.

"In the space of some fifty pages, the reader will find all that is necessary to be known about the pitch of notes, intervals, and scales, rests, time, and abbreviations; and will, we doubt not, also find how much there is of which he was ignorant concerning these subjects, although he had already flattered himself that he had mastered their elements a long time ago."—Saturday Review.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY & COUNTERPOINT. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

This work is intended to meet a growing demand for a more concise and simpler exposition of the Day theory. It includes as much of the science of Counterpoint as is necessary for students who enter for the Royal Academy, local, and other similar examinations.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S
PASSION SERVICE
NEW SACRED WORK
FOR THE SEASON OF
LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

The Chants contained in the above collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. II. (No. 23, by Lord Mornington), which is included on account of its great popularity.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

Verse by JAMES STRANG

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

CONTENTS.

Introduction and Chorus—"Toiling and toss'd on the restless sea."
Cradle Song—"Come, my baby, come away."
Chorus—"Oh, ho! for the winds that blow."
Ballad—"A mermaid dwelt in days of old."
Trio—"The twilight grey is falling."
Song—"O manly hearts that brave the sea."
Chorus—"Dark and darker grows the night."
Chorus—"A prayer for those at sea."
Intermezzo—"Break of day."
Duet—"Through golden mists of morn."
Cradle Song—No. 2.
Chorus—"Now let songs of gladness rise."

"This charming work bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. The libretto is of a high order of merit, and worth the music, which from first to last is attractive and without a dull page."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition. Taking the Cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

(WORDS FROM "SONGS OF TRAVEL," BY R. L. STEVENSON).

1. ONCE ONLY BY THE GARDEN GATE.
2. I WILL MAKE YOU BROOCHES.
3. TO YOU, LET SNOW AND ROSES.

Four Shillings each.

"The first, 'Once only,' has a splendid swing, and all are not merely melodious in no ordinary degree, but show real poetry and imagination, great skill, and knowledge of good effect."—The Times.

"'To you, let Snow and Roses,' has a fine sweeping melody that should make it popular with baritones. 'I will make you brooches' . . . has much to charm."—Scotsman.

"Ably and effectively written . . . most praiseworthy and very welcome."—Weekly Sun.

PER TE VIVE E PER TE MORE (sung by Miss Isabel MacDougal)	4s.
SE MAI GIUNGI (sung by Miss Esther Palliser)	4s.
O RENDIMI IL MIO CORE (sung by Miss Evangeline Florence)	4s.

"The beautiful 'Per te vive' . . . an exquisite piece. . . . 'Se mai giungi' is another charming song for soprano, and equally attractive is 'O rendimi.' All three of these tasteful examples of the old composer, as arranged with so much tact and judgment by Mr. Fuller Maitland, were heard in the concert-room last season, and all commanded in an equal degree the homage of amateurs."—Daily Telegraph.

"Three delightful Italian airs. . . . The arrangements are admirably done."—Manchester Guardian.

A CANTATA

FOR TENOR SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 30.)

Words only, 5s. per 100.
String Parts, 8s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 22s.; Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

. . . As clever, musicianly, and masterly in its way as anything its author has yet done. Moreover, it is full of a picturesqueness and a freshness that are rare even among much older composers. The part-writing is clear and eminently singable without ever being obvious, and the orchestration is vigorous and sometimes brilliant, though never too obtrusive. But it is even more in the invention of his themes than in his treatment of them, whether for voice or instruments, or both, that Mr. Coleridge-Taylor shines. Often and often again he happens upon a haunting theme or phrase, which clings to the ear because it is fresh and hitherto unheard. The first part of the tenor solo—the tenor being the only soloist employed—for example, is of exquisite beauty.

STANDARD.

Music which expresses with remarkable truth and force the wild environment of the poem. In its economic use of thematic material, reiteration of short and striking phrases, boldness of harmonic progressions and transitions, and picturesqueness of orchestration, the music has much in common with the style of Dvorák, but it also possesses a freshness and individuality which proclaim Mr. Coleridge-Taylor to be singularly gifted, and justify expectancy of works from his pen of great musical interest and value. "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" is set out for chorus and tenor solo, and the latter is the gem of the work. Tenor vocalists have rarely had a more beautiful and impassioned love-song written for them.

TELEGRAPH.

Reveals not only a remarkable gift of melody, but exhibits great variety and fertility of resource in handling his orchestra. . . . Let it suffice to note that a "motto" theme, heard both at the commencement and end of the work, is freely employed at various points on the journey. The narrative is carried forward by the chorus, one solo, for tenor, at "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" providing agreeable relief. The song is, indeed, charmingly melodious. . . . Just previously, the setting of the lines commencing "Then said they to Chibiabos" for chorus lightly accompanied, is quite pleasing, and a touch of humour illuminates the pages wherein is described the boastful character of Iagoo.

THE GUARDIAN.

We are free to express sincere admiration for his setting—by turns exhilarating and pathetic—of that portion of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" which describes the wedding-feast of the hero. The composer has managed, with singular insight, to convey the impression of primitive gaiety natural to such an occasion and to such dramatis personæ. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a genuine tune-coiner; he also shows a remarkable command of the orchestra . . . while of the bulk of the work it would be true to say that no one but Mr. Coleridge-Taylor could have written it. The reception of the cantata was most enthusiastic. Indeed, the whole cantata has the quality, rare in modern music, of appealing immediately to the hearer. . . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is richly endowed with one sovereign antidote to satiety in his hearers—the capacity of indefinitely varying his themes; also that, while he excels in the musical delineation of primitive or even barbaric emotions, his melodies are always redeemed from triviality by some unexpected yet unstudied deviation from the obvious. Best of all, he shows a sensitive appreciation of romantic beauty. Nothing is finer in Longfellow's poem than the simple touch of the departure of the guests, leaving the hero alone "with the night and Minnehaha," a passage which is set to the most tender and haunting strain in the entire work.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It has the same strong vitality, the same youthful energy that characterised the Ballade. Here, where the composer has had more scope, he has shown even more convincingly his resources as a melodist. . . . The tunefulness that is manifested in every page of "Hiawatha" has the great charm of spontaneity, the melodies abound with life and energy, indeed, a large proportion of them have a distinctly dance-like rhythm. . . . There is, however, no want of variety in the music, which sweeps along with a force that carries all before it. . . . "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" proves, as might be expected, the most prominent feature of the work. It is, indeed, a remarkably beautiful tenor solo, melodious, sensuous, charmingly coloured, and thoroughly vocal and grateful to the singer. . . . Throughout the work the music is distinguished by unfailing resource, by a spring of melody that never runs dry, and by a picturesqueness that is in perfect keeping with the subject; in short, it is long since we have come upon a young composer whose work is not only so full of promise, but is in itself so fresh and well sustained.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

*UNA

Sixth and Seventh Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"'Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Ninth and Tenth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twentieth to Twenty-fifth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

Fifth and Sixth Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

*ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

"Dr. H. Walford Davies's settings of Rudyard Kipling's 'Our Lady of the Snows' and 'Hymn before Action' are stirring and spirited in no ordinary degree; not only are the melodies of entire originality and their treatment worthy in all respects of the composer's high position among the younger generation of English musicians, but the songs have the splendid swing and force that make for universal and permanent popularity. 'The Farewell' and 'Ye Jacobites by Name,' set by the same composer to Burns's words, are gloriously gallant and vigorous songs, and in Blake's 'Little lamb, who made thee?' Dr. Davies shows that he can represent the tender mood of the 'Songs of Innocence' no less successfully than the martial vein of the modern poet."—The Times.

"The songs are one and all the work of a sound musician, with something of his own to say, and a most graceful and effective way of saying it. 'No Answer!' and 'The Dream of Youth' will perhaps be the most successful, but cultivated amateurs will find in the version of 'An die ferne Geliebte' distinction and beauty of a rare kind."—The Times.

(468 pp.)
OF

STAINER & BARRETT'S DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS

REVISED AND EDITED BY
SIR J. STAINER,
M.A., Mus.D., Oxford; Hon. D.C.L. and Mus. Doc., Durham.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

Cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

"Caractacus."—Cheltenham Festival Society.—"Mr. Charles Knowles, the rising baritone who took a prominent part in the Leeds production, made an excellent impression in the title-part, his work throughout being characterised by keen musical and dramatic perception. In his first solo, 'Watchmen, alert, the king is here,' he was both forcible and dignified, while the more sympathetic qualities of his voice were displayed in the 'Lament,' in which he was efficiently supported by the chorus, and also in his pleading with Claudius in the final scene. His most successful effort, both from the artistic and popular standpoint, was in the stirring 'Leap to the light,' which was given with great spirit and superb effect, and stirred the audience more than any other number."—Gloucester Echo, Feb. 14, 1899.

"Acis and Galatea."—Sheffield Musical Union.—"Mr. Charles Knowles, in 'O ruddier than the cherry,' and especially in the trio 'The flocks shall leave,' proved himself a dramatic and finished vocalist. His rendering of 'Honour and Arms,' in the second part of the programme, was a tour de force."—Sheffield Telegraph, March 15, 1899.

"Rose Maiden."—Barnsley Choral Society.—"Mr. Knowles sustained his reputation, which stood high."—Sheffield Telegraph, March 17, 1899.

ALEXANDER MUSGROVE

Address, 70, Berners Street, London, W.

MR. DANIEL PRICE

(BARITONE),
Westminster Abbey. Address, 5, Rutland Pk., Willesden Green, N.W.

MR. CHARLES TREE

Gounod's "Faust."—"His was a magnificent declamation. He threw himself heart and soul into the Mephisto part, infusing a tremendous amount of realistic spirit."—Tunbridge Advertiser.

"Gate of Life."—"Of Mr. Tree it is impossible to speak too highly. The possessor of one of the finest baritone voices ever heard in the Hartlepools, he was at once an immense favourite. His numbers were finely performed."—Hartlepool Daily Mail.

"The Prologue from 'Pagliacci' he gave with wonderful power and pathos, and a West country song with such unctuous humour that the audience fairly chuckled again. His quaint and jester-like manner in his encores were wonderful transitions from his earlier efforts. He was the favourite of the evening."—Accrington Times.

Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Address, 23, Clifton Road, Maida Vale, W.

MR. EDGAR ARCHER

(PRINCIPAL BASS, City Temple).

"I have great pleasure in stating that Mr. Edgar Archer has a fine bass-baritone voice, sings well, and with admirable effect."—William H. Cummings, Principal, Guildhall School of Music.

Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Apply, 153, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. GRAHAM SMART

(SOLO BASS (Decani), St. Saviour's Collegiate Church).
For Oratorios, Concerts, &c.
N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork St., W.; or, 19, Lidfield Rd., Green Lanes, N.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

L.R.A.M. (BASS),
Of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

Gaul's "Una," Barnstaple.—"Mr. H. Sunman, L.R.A.M., made his first appearance in North Devon. He possesses a robust bass voice of capital quality, and he sings with dramatic power. He won golden opinions on Tuesday."—North Devon Journal, Jan. 19, 1899.

"Mr. Sunman was a surprise to the audience. He proved to be what might be termed a 'bold' singer, his dramatic and artistic style and clearness of voice being much appreciated. . . . A duet, 'The Battle Eve,' by Mr. Collings and Mr. Sunman, was an exciting achievement, and the audience would not be content without a repetition."—Devon Gazette, Jan. 19, 1899.

Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Dudley.—"Mr. Sunman paid his first visit to Dudley, and in every way was a great success. He has a sound, robust, and splendidly trained bass voice, whilst his articulation is clear and distinct. The difficult and extraordinary leaps the bass has to make in the stave were negotiated without apparent effort. 'Through the darkness' was very fine, as also was the inter-chorus recitative, 'Thou, Lord, hast tried our hearts.' Mr. Sunman had repeatedly to bow his acknowledgments to the audience."—Dudley Herald, Feb. 4, 1899.

Elgar's "Caractacus," Cheltenham Musical Festival Society.—"The bass soli (Arch-Druid, Bard, and Claudius) were in the able and experienced hands of Mr. Henry Sunman, an old favourite in the county, who, it is hardly necessary to say, did full justice to them. . . . The other vocal item was contributed by Mr. Henry Sunman, whose rendering of the recit. and air 'O ruddier than the cherry,' from Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' was just what was anticipated from a vocalist with a voice at once so powerful and so completely under artistic control."—Gloucestershire Echo, Feb. 14, 1899.

"Mr. Henry Sunman's fine rendering of the recit. and air 'O ruddier than the cherry' recalled memories of Santley on the same platform."—Gloucester Citizen, Feb. 14, 1899.

Address, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

MADAME SINICO (late of the Royal Italian Opera), with her daughter, Miss CLARICE CAMPBELL, will take ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts and At Homes in London and the Provinces. Terms on application. 2, Queen's Place, Southsea.

EXAMINATION DEPARTMENT.—ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE SUMMER TERM, 1899.

EXAMINATIONS in PIANOFORTE PLAYING, SINGING, VIOLIN, ORGAN, MANDOLINE, &c., and in all Grades of Theoretical Music, will be held in London and at 350 Provincial Centres in July (June for Scotland and Ireland), when Certificates will be granted to all successful candidates without restriction to age. The latest date for receiving entries is June 15 for England, and May 15 for Scotland and Ireland.

THE VARIOUS GRADES, including the Elementary Practical Examination at 10s. 6d. (of which the Committee of Management of this College were the originators), will be found thoroughly and systematically arranged both as regards Practical and Theoretical Music.

SYLLABUS and FORMS OF ENTRY can be obtained of the Secretary, who will supply all particulars.

SILVER and BRONZE MEDALS and Book Prizes are offered for Competition in accordance with the printed Regulations.

APPLICATION for the FORMATION OF NEW CENTRES should be made to the Secretary, who will furnish all necessary information.

THE HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.), Associate in Music (A.Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate (L.L.C.M.), and Licentiate in Music (L.Mus. L.C.M.) are held in June, July, and December. The subjects for which Diplomas are granted are Pianoforte Playing, Singing, Organ, Violin, &c.; also Theory of Music.

EDUCATIONAL BRANCH.

In this Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects, under the best Professors, at Moderate Fees.

The NEXT TERM commences on April 24.

PRIVATE LESSONS are given and Classes held daily from 10 a.m. to 9.30 p.m.

SPECIAL FACILITIES are offered to Musical Students requiring a thorough training for the profession.

The COLLEGE CHOIR, ORCHESTRA, OPERATIC CLASS, and LADIES' CHOIR meet each week.

T. WEEKES HOLMES, Secretary.

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

"The great, the supreme merit of Mr. Smith's system consists in the fact that it involves the total abolition and disestablishment of all that terrible scale-practising and five-finger exercising."—Westminster Gazette.

"The excellence of his methods has been abundantly proved."—The Times.

TESTIMONY OF PUPILS.

"The first two exercises I found splendid for the cure of cramp in one of my pupils who was going up for examination. I was afraid she would have to give in."—A. K., Sydney, N.S.W.

". . . My doubts as to your being able to make your ideas clear per mail are dispelled."—J. H. S., Hamilton, U.S.A.

A Mus. Bac. says: "My touch is infinitely better; in fact, I am inclined to think it is nearly perfect. My hands are so much stronger, rarely ever getting tired with playing."

F.R.C.O. says: "I feel entirely a new man at the keyboard, although I have not had a single minute of keyboard practice. I feel better able to play than ever I did previously. . . . It would be impossible for me to fully express to you the wonderful change your exercises have made in me."

"Allow me to take this opportunity of thanking you for your attention and once again to testify to the marvellous improvement I have made under your system. It is worth any money to a teacher, and I sincerely hope for his own sake every professor will avail himself of it."—Ralph Horner, Mus. Bac.

"I was always a poor sight-reader, but now I can play at sight pieces that before would have taken hours of work to do as well. I notice my improvement in this more than anything, and it alone is worth to me the price of the lessons."

"Since last lesson I cannot find words to express myself. My playing has completely changed; I play with so much more certainty."—F. W. Sparrow, Leicester.

"I am fully satisfied that I never spent three guineas to greater advantage in all my musical life."—Joseph Leese, M.A., Mus. Bac.

The Board offers Six Exhibitions for 1899.

Every Candidate entering for the Local Centre Examinations (having previously passed a School Examination) has an opportunity of gaining a Two Years' Exhibition.

Full particulars are given in Syllabus A and B.

SAMUEL AITKEN, Hon. Secretary.
32, Maddox Street, London, W.

With this number are presented gratis Extra Supplements, consisting of a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D, by E. J. Hopkins, Mus.Doc., and a Portrait of Professor Ebenezer Prout, specially taken for this paper by Messrs. Russell and Sons.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
APRIL 1, 1899.

EBENEZER PROUT.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

This, the dominating influence of Professor Prout's life, may fitly furnish the key-note of the subjoined biography. The life-work of a self-made, self-taught man is one calling forth admiration and emulation. Such is the career of the Professor of Music in the University of Dublin. Its leading features cannot fail to be of interest to all true workers in the cause of music.

Ebenezer Prout, son of the Rev. Ebenezer Prout, a Congregational minister, was born at Oundle, Northamptonshire, March 1, 1835. The Prouts are a Devonshire family. Samuel Prout (the professor's uncle) was the eminent water-colour painter whose pictures now realize "four figures." Another uncle, John Prout, was an organ-builder and musicseller at Plymouth, where his descendants still reside.

EARLY YEARS.

Soon after the birth of his son, the Rev. Ebenezer Prout left Oundle and (in 1837) accepted a similar charge at Halstead: in that Essex market-town the young Ebenezer passed his early childhood. His father, through whose veins flowed Puritanical blood, was nevertheless well disposed towards music. He possessed "a little chamber organ" (said to have been made by Father Smith) having four stops and black naturals and white sharps. "I used to fumble upon an old square piano," his distinguished son recalls. "My father taught me my notes by writing their names on the keys. My feeling for music showed itself so early, that I have been told that, as a baby, I would hum the tunes my mother sang me to sleep with, before I could speak." From his earliest years the boy was gifted with a very quick ear and an unerring sense of absolute pitch. He used to be "shown off" to visitors as a "wonderful boy," because he could name the notes of any chord struck on the pianoforte without looking at the keys. When a friend said to his father: "You ought to make a musician of him," the good man replied: "I'd rather see him in his grave." "Although my father was very fond of sacred music," says Professor Prout, "he would not hear of my going into the profession: 'adopting music as a profession' and 'going to the devil' were synonymous terms in his mind. I believe that during his later years, after I had entered the profession, he was in a chronic state of surprise and thankfulness to find that I did not go to the bad."

The boy had a very few lessons on the pianoforte from a governess at a "young ladies' school" at Halstead, followed by a course of twelve more from "an old man"—William Ambrose—organist of a church at Sudbury. Young Prout very early developed his lightning methods of work. The only thing he can remember of those Ambrosian lessons was that he rushed on at such a pace that steady-going Mr. Ambrose would shout out: "Hullo! hullo! what in the world are you after now?" With the exception of twelve lessons in pianoforte technique received in later years from the veteran Charles Kensington Salaman—to whom he owes "a great deal"—Professor Prout has received no other instruction of any kind in any branch of music whatever. Therefore, he has practically been self-taught.

But to return to the boyhood period. His greatest delight was music: his severest punishment was the locking up of the pianoforte for a day or two. The first cheap folio edition of "The Messiah" was a precious birthday present. He played it through—as well as he could—over and over again, and his father had absolutely to drag him away from the instrument. He was brought up entirely on Handel. Thus, his early familiarity with the diatonic music of the great Saxon composer, upon which his taste was formed, has tinctured his own compositions. He well remembers the eagerness with which he would save up his scanty pocket-money in order to purchase the sixpenny monthly parts of "Samson" and "Israel" that were issued by Novello half-a-century ago. Benjamin Jacob's "organ voluntaries" were also treasures, as "they contained two arrangements of Bach." It may here be mentioned that the Professor of Music at Dublin University knew hardly any of Beethoven's Sonatas, and not one of his Symphonies, before he was twenty, nor did he drink from the pure stream of Bach until he was twenty-two!

Upon the removal of his father to London (in 1848) young Ebenezer went to the Denmark Hill Grammar School. He well remembers the boy who sat at the next desk to himself. The two were rivals—always racing each other for distinction in the school curriculum. How little those boys could forecast their future careers! One has become a University Professor and is now, perhaps, the most distinguished theorist in music, the other became a Lord Chancellor. Prout's old schoolfellow and rival was Farrer Herschell, who so recently and amid widespread regret died at Washington while in the service of his country.

A SCHOOLMASTER.

Prout left school in 1851, when he matriculated at the London University. From September in the Great Exhibition year he was a lay student and one of the first alumni at New College (Theological), St. John's Wood, where he remained one year. At the age of seventeen he became an usher at Priory House School, Clapton, kept by his cousin, Mr. Samuel Prout Newcombe. It was at this school for boys and girls that Professor Prout first became acquainted with the practical work of scoring for an orchestra—such as it was. He says: "I started a small orchestra of the pupils, but it was most grotesquely constituted. We had about 5 or 6 violins, 1 viola, 1 violoncello, no double-bass, 2 flutes, 2 flageolets, 1 piccolo, 1 cornet, 1 pair of kettle drums. None of the fiddlers (except the leader, one of the ushers who taught all the others) could play beyond the first position. I not only scored the music to suit the requirements of the instruments and the capacities of the players, but copied out all the parts with my own hand."

"CONSECUTIVE FIFTHS."

At this time he knew absolutely nothing about theory. His introduction to that subject came in the way of a reproof on a proof. Mr. Prout Newcombe asked Prout to arrange some tunes for "Pleasant Pages for the Young," a magazine on the Pestalozzian system which he was publishing. Usher Prout consented. When the proofs arrived he found that the proof-reader had marked in the margin "consecutive fifths"! He said to himself, "What in the world are consecutive fifths? I must find out something about this." "I was then seventeen or eighteen years of age," he says, "and those 'fifths' were my first start in the theory of music."

He was particularly fond of instrumentation. He looked with longing eyes on a full score of Handel's "Athaliah" (Arnold's edition) exhibited for sale in a second-hand book shop in Goswell Street. Part of his first earnings as an under-schoolmaster went in the purchase of that volume, which formed the nucleus of his fine library of full scores. But when he had acquired his long coveted treasure he discovered in its pages some clefs then quite unknown to him. He had had no experience of the C clefs. "I never saw such a tangle as this," he said to himself; but, nothing daunted, he mastered, all alone, the intricacies of that full score, which he played with genuine enthusiasm for many weeks in succession.

He took his degree of Bachelor in Arts at the London University in 1854. Two years later he became an assistant-master, at a salary of £80 per annum, at Joseph Payne's celebrated school at Leatherhead. Here he had what was very unusual at a school in those days—a singing class amongst the boys, who, under the young master's direction, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "Athalie." At Leatherhead (circa 1856-7, ætat 21) he, the son of a Congregational minister, wrote a "Requiem Mass for four solo voices, chorus, and orchestra," which remains in manuscript. For a short time he had a school of his own at Hackney, which was not altogether a success. The crisis in his life was rapidly approaching. Every spare hour was devoted to music, and the divine art soon claimed the young schoolmaster for her own. In the year 1859 (at the age of twenty-four) he entered the musical profession. His income when he started was at the rate of £15 per annum, derived from a singing class at a ladies' school in Hackney. His first pupil was the late John Gray, subsequently organist of Bombay Cathedral. In the meantime he worked steadily on at composition. A pianoforte quintet, afterwards published as Op. 3, was written in 1860, and later on he composed an overture and incidental music (unfinished) to Sir Walter Scott's drama "The Doom of Devorgoil." He worked hard at the organ, unaided by any teacher, and for a time took a special interest in the harmonium, for which, with the pianoforte, he wrote a "Concertante Duet" in A (Op. 6).

PRIZE QUARTETS.—JOACHIM'S KINDNESS.

A great event in his life occurred in 1862. The Society of British Musicians offered a prize of £10 for the best composition for a string quartet. Prout competed. One of the judges was Dr. Joseph Joachim, who, with that generous feeling towards brother artists so characteristic of him, not only adjudicated upon, but desired to "lead" the prize quartet in public. Moreover, he persuaded his friend Piatti to play the violoncello; and with Alfred Mellon as second violin and Webb (the most eminent viola player of the day), no composer could find fault with the personnel of the players. The place of performance was the Grosvenor Rooms. Prout was there. Neither he nor anyone else had the least idea who the successful competitor might be. Great was his surprise to hear his own quartet performed, and by four such splendid interpreters. Any suspense that he may have experienced was relieved when the late Charles Edward Stephens, the chairman, broke open the envelopes containing the mottoes, and said, "Is Mr. Prout here?" As Father Willis would say: "He was there—all there." It was a proud moment for the young unknown musician when he heard that he had gained the prize. Three years later he repeated this distinction with his Pianoforte Quartet in C major, Op. 2, the former work being in E flat and published as Op. 1.

APPOINTMENTS.

The following appointments have been held by Professor Prout since he entered the musical profession, forty years ago. And here it may be observed that all the posts he now holds have been absolutely unsought. He has never set in motion any "influence" that he may have had, much less would he intrigue in any way in order to obtain this or that advantage. The Dublin professorship furnishes an example of his independence. Upon the death of Sir Robert Stewart, Professor Mahaffy asked him if he would be willing to take the vacant post. "Yes," he replied, "but I shall not apply for it, or seek it in any way. If the authorities in Dublin like to offer me the appointment, I shall feel greatly honoured, and I shall have much pleasure in accepting it, but I make no application under any circumstances."

The organ appointments held by him have been as follows: St. Thomas's Square Chapel, Hackney (voluntary); Congregational Chapel, Kentish Town (1859-61); New Tabernacle, Old Street Road; St. Mary's, Newington Butts (the old church); and, in succession to the late Dr. Gauntlett, Union Chapel, Islington (1861-73). The minister of the last-named was the Rev. Dr. Allon, of whom Professor Prout has pleasant recollections during his twelve years' association with him. The reverend gentleman was the editor of the "Congregational Psalmist," and during the preparation of a new edition of the book, he said to Mr. Prout one Sunday morning, handing him some papers: "I wish you would look over these proofs during the sermon and give them to me after the service!"

PROFESSORSHIPS.

In 1873, feeling the great strain of having to work incessantly seven days per week, Prout relinquished all Sunday duty. At no time during his organistship period did his salary exceed £50. In 1860 he was made a Professor of the Pianoforte at the Crystal Palace School of Art, where he attended three days a week. This engagement he retained for twenty-four years. At the opening of the National Training School of Music in 1876 he was appointed Professor of Harmony and Composition, which he held till 1882, when the School was merged into the Royal College of Music. Among his pupils at Kensington were Eugene d'Albert, Frederic Cliffe, and Frank L. Moir, the song writer.

In the beginning of 1878 he acceded to the request of Sir Arthur Sullivan that he should act as his locum tenens at the Royal Academy of Music during his (Sir Arthur's) absence in America. A year later (1879), upon the resignation of Sir Arthur Sullivan, Mr. Prout was offered the vacant professorship at Tenterden Street, which he still holds. At the outset he had a very brilliant class. Amongst his pupils then and subsequently were Goring Thomas ("one of the most charming of men"), Ernest Ford, Myles Foster, Edward German (for five or six years), Harvey Löhr, Tobias Matthay, his son (Louis Beethoven Prout), his nephew (John Ebenezer West), and Miss Dora Bright. He recalls his first lesson at the Academy, and how he endeavoured to "produce an impression" and to do "a little bit of show off." He says: "When one of those big fellows placed a MS. full score of his own composing on the piano, I played it straight away, commenting upon it as I went along. It was a matter of policy, you know. I was determined to show them that their new professor was up to his work." In 1884 he joined the staff of the Guildhall School of Music as a Professor of Harmony, where he still teaches. In 1894 he was appointed to succeed the late Sir Robert Stewart as Professor of Music in the University of Dublin. When the Senate called for his testimonials, Professor Mahaffy produced four or five volumes of the theoretical works, saying, "These are Mr. Prout's testimonials." The degree of Doctor in Music (honoris causâ) was conferred upon him by Trinity College, Dublin, and the University of Edinburgh in 1895, and he is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music.

BOROUGH OF HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

By no means the least eventful period of his life as a practical musician was that covered by the fourteen years, 1876 to 1890, when he held the office of conductor of the Borough of Hackney Choral Association. When the committee asked him to undertake the conductorship, he said: "It is not a question of money to me, gentlemen; but if I accept the post I must have a complete orchestra at every concert." This condition was agreed to, and Prout naturally threw himself heart and soul into the work.

Performances of the highest artistic excellence were given under his régime, and the Association speedily became distinguished as a concert-giving institution. The concerts were given in the Shoreditch Town Hall. In looking through the bound volumes of the programmes one cannot fail to be struck with their eclecticism. All schools and periods, vocal and instrumental, were drawn upon. It would be impossible within the limits of our space to specify in detail even the important works that were performed. Of first performances in England there must be recorded: Schubert's difficult "Gesang der Geister" for male voices and strings (Op. 167); Mozart's "King Thamos" and Schumann's "Nachtlied" for chorus and orchestra (Op. 108); also the first performances in London of Schubert's Mass in F (at the first concert, November 27, 1876) and Mackenzie's "Jason." And amongst the revivals: Handel's "Joshua" and "O praise the Lord" (Chandos Anthem), and Weber's "Jubilee" Cantata, for which Dr. Troutbeck's English translation was specially prepared. The conductor composed two of his most important works for the Association he so ably directed—viz., "Hereward," produced at St. James's Hall, June 4, 1879, and "Alfred," Shoreditch Town Hall, May 1, 1882.

COMPOSITIONS.

Professor Prout has been a prolific composer, as the private thematic catalogue of his compositions abundantly testifies. "All works written before 1856, as well as some rubbish perpetrated since, I have destroyed," he records. The following is an attempt at a complete catalogue of his compositions, published and unpublished:—

ORCHESTRAL.

Symphonies.—No. 1 in C, MS. (1873); No. 2 in G minor, MS. (1876); No. 3 in F, Op. 22 (Birmingham Festival, 1885); No. 4 in D, MS. (1886).

Overtures.—"Twelfth Night," MS. (for George Riseley, 1880); "Rokeby" (Crystal Palace Concert, 1889).

Suites, &c.—Suite in D, MS. (for George Riseley, 1878); Suite de Ballet, Op. 28 (Westminster Orchestral Society, 1890); Minuet and Trio, Op. 14 (1877); Overture and Incidental Music to Scott's "The Doom of Devorgoil," MS., and unfinished (1861-2).

CANTATAS, &C.

Cantatas.—"Hereward," Op. 12 (1878); "Alfred," Op. 16 (1881); "Queen Aimée; or, the Maiden's Crown," female voices, Op. 21 (1885); "Freedom," ode, baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra, Op. 20 (1885); The 100th Psalm, soprano solo, chorus and orchestra, Op. 23 (1886); "The Red Cross Knight," Op. 24 (1886); "Damon and Phintias," male voices, Op. 25 (1888); "Hail to the Chief," chorus and orchestra, Op. 10 (Alexandra Palace, 1877).

Comic Opera.—"Love and Taxation," MS. (1883).

Requiem Mass, MS. (1856-7).

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Pianoforte Quintet in G, Op. 3 (1860); String Quartets, E flat, Op. 1 (Prize, 1862), and B flat, Op. 15; Pianoforte Quartets in C, Op. 2 (Prize, 1865), in F, Op. 18 (1881); Sonata, pianoforte and flute, in A, Op. 17 (1882); Sonata, pianoforte and clarinet, Op. 26 (1882); Romance, viola and pianoforte, MS. (1870). Pianoforte solos, Concertante Duet for pianoforte and harmonium in A, Op. 6 (1872).

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

Services.—Morning and Evening in F, Op. 9 and 13 (1876 and 1879); Magnificat in C, with orchestra, Op. 7 (1873); Evening Services in E flat, Op. 8 (1875); in D, Op. 19 (1883).

Anthems, &c.—"Happy is the man," Op. 11 (1877); "Arise, shine" (1884); "When the Lord turned" (Psalm cxxvi.), Op. 27 (1891); "Behold, my servant" (1891); "We give Thee thanks," eight voices (1895). Several smaller anthems, many hymn-tunes, chants, &c.

Organ.—Concertos in E minor, Op. 5 (1870), and E flat, MS. (for George Riseley, 1883); Sonata in D, Op. 4; Postlude in C minor (1870); and Organ arrangements, 44 Nos.

VOCAL MUSIC.

"Song of Judith," scena for contralto solo and orchestra (1887); various songs with pianoforte accompaniment, part-songs, &c.

Professor Prout has edited and supplied additional accompaniments to several of Handel's oratorios, and made many pianoforte arrangements of oratorios. His special edition of "Samson," made for the Leeds Musical Festival of 1880, has been extensively used. He has edited the "Psalmist" and some of the publications of the German Handel Society.

THEORETICAL TREATISES.

No biography of Professor Prout would be complete without full acknowledgment of his valuable contributions to the theoretical literature of music. His first venture in that direction was his excellent little treatise on Instrumentation, written in 1878 for the series of Primers edited by Sir John Stainer and issued by Messrs. Novello. This book (the only one of the fifty-six Primers) has achieved the distinction of a translation into German, in which language it is published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel. The story of his subsequent excursions in a region of which the air (as well as the bass) has usually been of a nature decidedly dry, is not without interest. "When I began to teach," he says, "I used Richter's book. Then I looked into Macfarren's theories and found that there was more in his system than I had imagined, and I adopted his book for nearly ten years. But as time went on I felt that something was required of a more practical and less dogmatic nature than that adopted by Macfarren, whose style was very crabbed and difficult for students, and sometimes even for professors to understand. Moreover, his examples were often horribly ugly. And therefore, in 1888, I began to write the first of my theoretical books, the last of which, thank God, I have just finished, after eleven years of hard exacting work. I originally intended to write only one volume; but the scope of the thing grew as I went on, and instead of only one book there are now nine." Their titles are respectively: "Harmony: its Theory and Practice"; Counterpoint: Strict and Free"; "Double Counterpoint and Canon"; "Fugue"; "Fugal Analysis"; "Musical Form"; "Applied Forms," and "The Orchestra," Vols. I. and II., in addition to "Additional exercises" to the first and second of the series. The "Harmony" volume bears the appropriate motto (from Milton's "L'Allegro")—

> Untwisting all the chains that tie
> The hidden soul of harmony.

In the preparation of this work Professor Prout was assisted by his son, Mr. Louis B. Prout, an excellent theorist, and "a chip of the old block," who is the author of a useful treatise, entitled "Harmonic Analysis."

A MUSICAL JOURNALIST.

Professor Prout, who possesses "the pen of a ready writer," was for many years connected with journalism. He was the first editor of the Monthly Musical Record (1871-4). He formerly contributed many valuable articles to The Musical Times, and, in fact, he was on the staff of this journal. He also wrote for Concordia and the Musical Review. Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians" contains no less than fifty-three articles signed "E. P." For fifteen years he discharged the arduous duties of a musical critic with conspicuous ability—from 1874 to 1879, first, on the Academy, and subsequently, from 1879 (in succession to Gruneisen) to 1889, he occupied a similar and more distinguished position on the Athenæum, now held by Mr. J. S. Shedlock.

PERSONALIA.

The personality of the subject of this biographical sketch is a very remarkable one and not easily described. One of its most striking features is the extraordinary enthusiasm and vitality of the man. The amount of work he gets through would put many to shame. His perseverance is as dogged as his energy is boundless. His method of work is out and out thoroughness, and this has been the ruling passion as well as the guiding principle of his whole life. An instance of his capacity for taking pains is to be found in the Preface to his treatise "Applied Forms." He says: "Before writing the three paragraphs on the Minuet, the author examined every minuet in the complete works of Handel, Bach, Couperin, Corelli, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert; the whole of Haydn's eighty-three quartets, all the symphonies (about fifty) which he possesses by the same composer, and a number of miscellaneous specimens by other writers." And then he almost pathetically adds: "The result of all this work occupies less than three pages." But what an immense advantage to the student. Again, to quote further: "Even more laborious were the preliminary investigations for the Sonata Form. About 1,200 movements were carefully examined before a line of the text was written, and this task occupied the whole of the author's spare time for nearly a month." No wonder. Such a herculean task would have occupied most men's spare time for many months, even if they possessed the patience and indomitable perseverance to undertake such an investigation. The speed with which he works is also a marked characteristic. For example, the Magnificat of his Evening Service in E flat (for solo quartet, chorus, and orchestra) was composed and scored between the 2nd and 11th of April, 1875, and the Nunc dimittis between the 3rd and 5th of September of the same year; "Hereward" was "begun 31st of August, finished 7th of October, 1878." Another instance of his industry is the delight he takes in the copying of music. He made a full score of Spohr's "Last Judgment" and four of Schubert's Masses from the orchestral parts with his own hand, and thoroughly enjoyed the task.

MEMORY AND TRANSPOSITION.

His memory is phenomenal. Dates, occurrences, and musical phrases he can instantly recall with the greatest ease. You may meet him in Oxford Street and fancy you have discovered an orchestral combination that is of special interest and not generally known; but amid the tumult of the traffic and the jostling of the passers-by he will immediately say: "Yes, it's in the introduction to Dunem's solo 'I'm no usurer' in Luker's cantata 'The Golden Calf.'" Many other instances of his marvellous memory, allied with his facility in transposition, could be furnished. When Schubert's Mass in F was about to be performed by the Borough of Hackney Choral Association, a friend, at whose house he was visiting, asked him if he could play it through from memory. "Yes," he replied. But when he sat down at the pianoforte he found that the instrument was a semitone below pitch. "I shall have to play it in F sharp," he said, "or the wrong pitch will put me out," and he did play it a semitone higher from beginning to end without the notes. Once in Norway he played Beethoven's Pastoral (so-called) Sonata, Op. 28, in D flat, and then he offered to play it in E flat, from memory. In 1858, at a rehearsal where they were short of copies, he played the whole of Mendelssohn's "Athalie" without book. He finds Bach's "48" most difficult to remember, but he can play many of them without having the notes before him. The transposition of them, however, does not cause him the slightest trepidation. He can play any prelude or fugue a minor third lower (or higher) than the key in which it is written as easily as in its normal tonality. "I don't see where the difficulty comes in," he says.

HOBBIES.

He is an excellent linguist. In addition to French, German, and a little Italian, he speaks Norse like a native. He is now learning Hungarian, which he thinks is the most difficult European language. He commenced Russian—which has thirty-six letters and they "are not what they seem"—but he means to "have another go at it." One of his favourite authors is Balzac, a complete edition of whose works occupies a prominent place on his bookshelves. Like Sir Walter Parratt, he is very fond of chess. His knowledge of the Bible is encyclopædic, and one cannot be in conversation with him for long before he uses a Bible quotation with an aptness totally unexpected. Since 1883 he has always spent his autumnal holiday in Norway, and his Norwegian diaries are of a very amusing description.

HIS FULL SCORE LIBRARY.

Professor Prout possesses one of the finest private libraries of orchestral full scores, if indeed, it is not unique. He will, with feelings of natural pride, show a visitor his complete editions of Handel, Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn, and Schumann. He has nineteen operas (in full score) by Auber, and "the British Museum has only ten, all of which (except one) I have here," he will say. Gluck, Rossini, Meyerbeer, Verdi, Berlioz, Liszt, Wagner, and even Perosi keep each other company in that plainly furnished room, but rich in its treasures of the literature of the orchestra.

BACH.

Mention must be made of his intense love for Bach, and especially the "48." It is more than probable that he would prefer to retire to his rest a hungry man than be deprived of his evening meal of Bach, served up from the "48." He not only plays the preludes and fugues assiduously, but he has invented a very amusing series of words adapted to each fugue. The words to No. 34 (in E minor) may serve as a vehicular specimen of Bach-Prout's "48 Fugues with words":—

As I rode in a penny bus, going to the Mansion House, off . .
. . came a wheel, down . . went the bus, all . .
. . of the passengers fell in a heap on the floor of the ricketty thing.

A FRIEND'S APPRECIATION.

No more appropriate conclusion could be made to this short biography of a very remarkable and many-sided man than the following "appreciation," which has been kindly furnished by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, the distinguished critic, and one of Professor Prout's oldest and most intimate friends.

"The text at the head of this article recalls an occasion on which the professor's right hand found something to do, and did it with its might. Many years ago I was playing Schubert's Pianoforte Quintet at a concert, and Professor (then Mr.) Prout was turning over for me. At that time my experience of the concert platform was slight, and through excitement, or it may be carelessness, I failed to notice a passage for the right hand. The Professor's eye, ever sharp as that of an eagle, at once detected the omission, and came to my rescue, like Berlioz, when Habeneck took a pinch of snuff instead of giving an important cue. I suddenly became conscious of sounds not produced by my own fingers.

"Both my father and mother were friends of Professor Prout's father, and when I first settled in London they gave me a special introduction to the Professor. I first saw him in the organ-loft at Union Chapel, Islington, more than thirty years ago, and from that day to the present I have found him a staunch friend in musical and in other matters. I have never met with a more industrious man, nor with one more enthusiastic in his art. From his advice and example I have profited much. Of his gifts as a musician and as a theorist there is no necessity for me to speak; I think, however, I may say that only those who, like myself, have been privileged to ask on the spur of the moment, in the course of general conversation, questions regarding some particular passage or bar in out-of-the-way works can have any real idea of his extensive knowledge of music, or of his wonderful memory.

"Of his love for chess I can speak from practical experience. I have played many games with him at his house, at sea, in trains, and, as a matter of fact, in the concert-room! In his early days, when Professor Prout sat among the gods at St. James's Hall and at the Opera, I frequently accompanied him, and we used to while away the time from the opening of the doors to the commencement of the performance by playing chess, for he then always carried about with him a pocket-board and men.

"Professor Prout's encyclopædic knowledge of the Bible has been mentioned. I feel sure he could write out whole chapters, if not books, from memory. At one time he had two favourite dogs—for, like most artists, he is fond of animals—and he gave them names which only one well versed in Biblical knowledge would have known—those of the cousins of Moses: Huz and Buz."

SOME RECOLLECTIONS.

VIII.—An Accident.

I have known people to show singular curiosity as regards the beginnings of musical critics. It is sometimes said by them: "Who are these anonymous judges? There is no school for training them; how then do they qualify for their difficult and delicate duties? What is the system which regulates their appointment, if there be a system? Are they tested by experts? or installed by men who know nothing whatever about the essential qualifications?" Please, good reader, excuse me from answering such queries. On the whole, I think, the present method of determining journalistic musical critics, though decidedly haphazard, works about as well as most operations of the kind. I am not going to approve it; I am not going to assail it. But I stand ready to state a case in which the genesis of a musical critic was brought about by what we call chance circumstances, unintended and unforeseen. The unintended and unforeseen are, so my dictionary tells me, the necessary concomitants of that which we speak of as an accident. I am the critic in question, and my story is true.

In the early months of 1865, a certain dovetailing of unconnected and independent circumstances seems to have been necessary to my evolution as a critic. As I look back upon the affair, I cannot imagine how any other than casual forces, touching each other by chance, could have brought about the result actually achieved. I had no connection with the press; I knew nobody "on" it; an editor was regarded by me as little more accessible than the man in the moon—that is to say, if I ever thought about him at all. I did not want him and, if I had given the matter a thought, I should at once have concluded most positively that he did not want me. Could there have been a more unpromising state of things just previous to a first step on the road which has led me to where I now am? But that was not all. I had had no experience, or next to none, in writing for the public eye. Like most bookish boys, I suppose, I was now and then conscious of an impulse towards pen and paper. At such moments, but on rare occasions, I had addressed letters to a country journal—letters which the editor sometimes inserted, when very hard up for copy, but much more often dropped into the waste paper basket. That was well, perhaps, because nearly all of them were "rote sarkastic," and had distinct reference to persons not unlikely to be annoyed. Such is the humour of human nature in the "cub" stage. Furthermore, if the choral society with which I was connected gave a concert, the editor of The Musical Times was sure to receive from me a glowing account—at least, I glowed in writing it—of what had been done. That editor, whose acquaintance I have since made, had one bad habit—he cut out all my opinions and inserted only the facts. I thought the result very bald. I remember also writing a play in three acts—a "woodland tragedy," carefully adapted to the possibilities of a grove which stood convenient. My first play (and my last) was acted! Not every dramatic author can say that. How well I remember the performance by Self and Schoolfellows, all of of whom (the Schoolfellows) perished ere the end, leaving Self (the remorseless villain) wickedly triumphant. We had an audience of one—a passing labourer, who, seeing an excuse for propping himself against a tree, stood out the representation. I observed that he smiled most audibly when he should have thrilled with horror. This did not like me, but I was young.

I put it to the reader that these literary achievements failed to forecast early eminence as a writer for the press. Indeed, they indicated so little in that direction that I abandoned them and set about composing musical works—wonderful creations in which I claim to have anticipated some of the characteristics belonging to music of the present day. My pieces were independent of all rule; my harmonies were what I pleased to make them; my melodies were not always there. I had one work tried over, and it sounded so strange that I began to suspect the existence in me of genius. Our organist laughed, but I had heard that musicians were notoriously a jealous people.

Reverting to the matter of the accident, with apologies for digression, I have to say that the conditions demanded, first and foremost, a musical critic who needed help. Such a man existed; so did such a want. He was a solicitor having an office in the City, and many claims upon his time and attention. This gentleman had a taste for artistic society, to indulge which, I presume, he became musical critic of the Sunday Times, in succession, if I rightly remember, to Mr. Lake, a once well-known and very clever journalistic hand. His weekly stipend for discharging the duties of this post was two guineas, and it could have surprised nobody that, having to fill two closely printed columns for that sum, he stood quite ready to accept gratis help. It now became essential to the ultimate issue that the critic of the Sunday Times should ask an acquaintance, an amateur musician, to attend a certain concert for him and supply a paragraph thereanent. Had that man been able to comply, the future, as regards myself, might, probably would, have been very different. But he could not grant the solicitor-critic's request, since the evening of the concert was that on which took place the practice of a choral society in a suburb whereto he belonged. Now it so happened that the conductor of the society in question was myself.

At that time it was usual for residents in the more distant suburbs to band together for musical purposes; friends, acquaintances, and properly introduced outsiders of a certain social standing, agreeing to meet at each other's houses in turn, and spend an evening with part-songs, madrigals, excerpts from larger works, and so on. Very pleasant occasions they were, and much enjoyed by the members, whose somewhat monotonous suburban life they helped to vary. It became my good fortune to act as conductor of several such organisations, and thus it happened that I was brought into relations with the amateur who could not leave his practice to do duty for the critic of the Sunday Times.

I recollect that, on the evening in question, our work being over, a few of the men lingered behind for a chat. The conscientious amateur was one, and I, another. Had either of us left, I should not now be telling this story. But there we were, face to face. Even then had the amateur kept silence about his conversation with the critic, the game would have been "up." He did not keep silence, and for that, possibly, I have to thank the little harmless vanity which sought to obtain credit for relations with a writer on the press, and for the confidence in his musical judgment which the request of that personage implied. Quoth the amateur, "I was asked this morning by the musical critic of the Sunday Times to report one of to-day's concerts for him, but I thought it my duty to come here." Upon this, the wag of the party (there is always a wag) observed that a sense of duty was much to be encouraged whenever it tended to keep men out of mischief. Nobody else took any apparent interest in the amateur's remark, and the matter passed. Later, however, I found occasion to inform the amateur that I should be happy to assist his friend when at liberty. The fact was that I saw a possible opportunity of hearing much music not otherwise audible to me, save at cost beyond my means. The amateur promised to advise his friend of my offer, which positively contemplated nothing more than a supply of free tickets. Upon this events marched rapidly. I met the critic; received at his hands a bundle of the greatly desired passports, attended one of the concerts, dealt with the matter as best I could, and forwarded the "copy" to my principal. There I was, at the giddy elevation of a deputy critic, very proud of my new position, and extremely anxious to see my first article in print.

When next I met the critic, my superior, he was good enough to express an opinion that the concert notice I had sent in was not a first essay in criticism. I did not dispute the point, because I remembered the old communications to The Musical Times. His remark, however, was none the less gratifying. Ah! but the pleasure I received from seeing myself in print, at full length, with not a word excised, transcended all. Charles Dickens—if I may speak of him in such a connection—tells us that, having purchased a magazine which he found to contain an article sent by him to the editor as a sort of balon d'essai, he walked down to Westminster Hall and there read and re-read it, pacing the floor beneath the august roof with ever swelling pride. Like literary or journalistic men generally, I know what the feeling is, and can quite understand the manner in which it found expression in Dickens's case. My superior on the Sunday paper was not much less gratified than myself. He sent me more and more tickets, till, presently, the fact was borne in upon me that I was doing nearly all the work in the musical department, to my own great pleasure, but scarcely to my profit. The solicitor, whom I cannot describe as a very brilliant journalist, was, however, not a bad sort of fellow by any means. He recognised the fact that an arrangement which gave him all the pay, such as it was, and myself nearly all the work could hardly be pronounced a case of perfect balance. So, one day, he said to me, "Let us divide the spoil. I will take a guinea; you will take the same, and no doubt we can run comfortably in double harness for a long time." Behold me, then, a professional critic, at a salary of twenty-one shillings per week, and in the curious position of a contributor who has no engagement with the proprietor and is utterly unknown to him. But this state of things did not long endure.

The then proprietor of the Sunday Times was a gentleman named Seale, who had a country house at Wargrave, and a "Bank" in Leicester Square, hard by where the "Empire" now stands. He was very proud of his position as the owner of a journal; had a high opinion of the influence exerted by the Sunday Times, and kept careful watch upon the doings at the office in Fleet Street. He was fond of small type and solid columns, allowed no wild shriek of liberty to be heard anywhere, and required all his staff to visit him in Leicester Square every Monday morning, to receive instructions, and, if necessary, reprimands. Thither at the time appointed would repair Henry Barnett, the leader writer; Joseph Knight, the theatrical editor; the gentleman with whom I divided the spoil, and, no doubt, others of lower grade. After a time it dawned upon Mr. Seale that the musical criticisms were not always up to the mark; varying so much, as a matter of fact, that the proprietor suspected the existence of two writers in that department. To suspect, with him, was to enquire; and, in this case, to enquire was to discover that he really had two musical critics, of whom one only was avowed and known. In the result he invited me to call upon him. The proprietor, who, during our interview, swelled visibly with dignity meant to impress me, then made an offer of the post held by my legal friend. He would give me the same salary, would Mr. Seale, and an extra guinea for a weekly column on some social subject. "Then," said he, with the air of one who confers wealth beyond the dreams of avarice, "you will have over three guineas a week"—a consideration which was evidently expected to settle the matter. Of course, he had my thanks for a proposal really thought by him to be generous. Equally, of course, I declined even to consider the issue until after satisfactory communication with the actual holder of the position. The proprietor agreed that I had taken the right course, and so we parted for the time. Not long after, my principal informed me of his resignation. He could not attend to the duties of the post, which I should be sure to fill better than he—so he was pleased to say—and accordingly I became his successor, with his entire acquiescence in the change.

I have told my story—at any rate, its first chapter—and the reader now knows how one musical critic was made. The new rôle came to me through an unforeseen combination which produced an accident, and changed the whole course of my life. "Man," I used to be told, "is the creature of circumstances." It would seem so.

A WAGNERIAN BOSWELL.*

"Heroism without risk" is all that is nowadays demanded from the admirers of Wagner's works; indeed, it may almost be said that it is his opponents—should any still exist—who need strength of mind to hold their own, so completely has the tide turned in his favour. Were Wagner alive now, there would be plenty of Boswells ready to record his most trivial sayings and doings; but in the fifties and the sixties his adherents were less numerous. For this reason the "Wagneriana" contained in a recent volume of Recollections by a German Kapellmeister, Wendelin Weissheimer, have more than common interest, as well as being exceedingly good reading. They have the ring of truth, and the author's claim to a close connection with the Wagner movement is borne out by the correspondence he quotes.

Weissheimer, who was born in 1836, was an early convert to the musical gospel preached at Weimar. As a schoolboy at Darmstadt, he was attracted by the music of "Tannhäuser," and tells how he witnessed the rehearsals for its production in that city, and in his enthusiasm copied for himself the whole of the pianoforte score. Consequently, when he went to study music at the Leipzig Conservatorium, in 1856, he soon became a "marked man," whom Julius Rietz, Mendelssohn's successor, thought it necessary to warn solemnly against his dangerous tendencies. Another illustration of the correct attitude of the musical folk of Leipzig towards their townsman is afforded by an amusing incident in the drawing-room of Frau Livia Frege, well known as one of Mendelssohn's intimate friends. Being asked by her to play, young Weissheimer began with a Beethoven sonata, and on a request for more, ventured upon the "Lohengrin" prelude.

"She became uncomfortable, fidgeted with her chair, till at length came the question: 'Pray, what is it you are playing?' When I told her, she sprang up, went hurriedly into the next room, and said to those present, so loudly that I was obliged to hear, 'Well! how dare this young man desecrate my drawing-room with Wagnerian music!'"

The author assures us that this was done innocently, and we may believe him; but it is harder to credit his plea of innocency when, being told by his instructor, Hauptmann, to write a fugue on a verse from the Psalms, he chose the text "I have more understanding than all my teachers." Perhaps that was not more than the worthy and amiable pedagogue expected from a Wagnerian heretic!

Weissheimer's first sight of Wagner was in 1858, when, with an introduction from the Darmstadt conductor, Schindelmeisser, he visited the exiled composer in his retreat near Zurich. Tichatscheck, the Dresden tenor, was there, and he and Wagner recalled the first performance of "Rienzi," while a pet parrot regaled them with snatches of Leporello's song, "Rest I've none by night or day." From 1859 to 1861 Weissheimer studied under Liszt, concerning whom he has much to tell that is of exceeding interest, but that does not concern us here. In the latter year there took place in Weimar the second "Tonkünstlerversammlung," during the rehearsal for which Wagner unexpectedly made his appearance, having just been accorded permission to return to Germany. At the Congress of Baden in the previous year, Napoleon III. is said to have buttonholed—if so familiar a term be allowable—King Johann of Saxony, and besought him to allow Wagner to come back to his native land. The rehearsal of Liszt's "Faust" Symphony was in progress at Weimar, but the score had been forgotten, and Weissheimer was sent to Liszt's house to fetch it. As he approached the house he suddenly came across Wagner, whose arrival was quite unexpected, though it was known that he was free to return. After the first greetings the author took him to the concert hall, and bade him wait outside for a moment.

"I rushed up the steps, into the hall, and straight to Liszt, with the words, 'Wagner is here!' Liszt immediately gave the word, 'Stop! Before we continue the rehearsal let us prepare a right good "Tusch!"' All looked expectantly at the door through which I had already again disappeared. The next moment Wagner stood at the entrance. On his appearance an indescribable tumult arose. The orchestra 'flourished' with all its might, Liszt rushed at Wagner, and hugged him with a long embrace. In many a friendly eye stood tears of joy and emotion. Of embracing with Bülow, Cornelius, Tausig, and many others, there seemed to be no end."

* "Erlebnisse mit Richard Wagner, Franz Liszt, und vielen anderen Zeitgenossen, nebst deren Briefen." Von W. Weissheimer. Stuttgart und Leipzig. 1898.

In 1861 Weissheimer became music-director at the theatre in Mainz, and during the next year or two he saw a good deal of Wagner, who in 1862 settled down for a time at Biebrich, only a few miles from Mainz, but on the opposite bank of the Rhine. It is of this period that Weissheimer's recollections have the most lively interest. An amusing incident is afforded by the picture of Wagner listening to a performance of "Orphée aux Enfers," then one of the lighter attractions at the Mainz Theatre. It was his first experience of Offenbach, whose "impudence" annoyed him, though he recognised his humorous conceptions. He often made a prominent figure at the receptions of Frau Schott, the wife of the famous publisher, and read to her guests the book of his "Meistersinger," the publication of which was secured by the house of Schott. It was at this time that he wrote the "Albumblatt" for Frau Schott, whose name the published copies of this little pianoforte piece still bear. In February, 1862, Wagner hired a little house in Biebrich, overlooking the Rhine and the Ducal Palace, and set to work in earnest at the composition of "Die Meistersinger." Weissheimer gives several interesting glimpses of the production of this masterpiece. He tells us, for example, that, contrary to the usual practice of composers, the overture was written first of all. One evening, as they were crossing the Rhine bridge together, Wagner, full of his work, kept humming the first four notes of the overture, and Weissheimer, ignorant of the context, supposed he was thinking of an identical phrase in "Robert le Diable." Wagner exploded with laughter at the idea. "This promises well," said he, "immediately after the birth of the first bar of the 'Meistersinger' a comic Intermezzo! Come to-morrow to Biebrich, then you shall see how differently my phrase continues!"

"By noon on the following day I was at his house. There he showed me written down the broad continuation of the first motive, and underneath it there stood already the second in E and the characteristic trumpet passage of the 'Mastersingers.' So that he wrote the introduction first, before he had composed a single note to the text! He created the themes freely from his imagination, and what was most surprising in reference to the second, which first appears in E, was the good luck by which later on the words of Walther's 'Preislied' exactly fitted this wonderful melody! Assuredly in his conception of the introduction he had not the remotest thought of that 'Preislied' in the third act."

Unless the author had other evidence in support of his view, one is inclined to think that there was more than blind chance in this apparent coincidence, for we know that with Wagner it was almost impossible to write the text without simultaneously evolving the chief musical ideas associated therewith. The picture of Wagner unpacking his numerous goods and chattels is a sufficiently humorous one, but too long for quotation. Of greater importance is a description of his method of working. He sat at a pianoforte, with the cover half closed so as to form a desk, and wrote the music in the form of a very exact and finished sketch, in appearance like a pianoforte score, but with indications of the orchestral parts. As Wagner said, "The more exact the sketches, the easier and more accurate the work of instrumentation. . . . Writing each couple of wood-wind instruments on a single stave is often very advantageous to the free development of the part-writing." He made constant use of the pianoforte in composition, and nothing was committed to paper until it had been tried by actual hearing. Once written down, however, alterations were rare. After such exactitude in the first sketches, the work of instrumentation went on all the more easily, and without exceptional exertion he could complete some six pages of the full score in a day.

"After the overture, which, in spite of its contrapuntal and polyphonic complexities, he wrote down in five days, he set to work at the first act. The short conversation of Eva, Magdalena, and the Knight came quickly (and how delightfully!) from his pen, whilst David, on the other hand, gave him more trouble. The enumeration of the many 'Tones' was no easy matter. His effervescent humour helped him through it, however. He amused himself right royally with the dancing apprentices, and it was most amusing to see him in his room going through the merry dances with grotesque springs, singing at the same time in the most liquid of falsettos the song of the apprentices with the words:

Das Blumenkränzlein aus Seiden fein
Wird das dem Herrn Ritter beschieden sein?"

In the midst of his labours Wagner was joined by his wife, "the good Minna," and it was soon apparent how little sympathy there was in artistic matters between the ill-assorted couple. She took but little interest in his new work, and when, with some little ceremony, the book of the "Meistersinger" was read aloud to her by him, she wearied of it after the first act. Her constant complaint was that "Richard" had not followed up the success of his "Rienzi" with "a few more such operas." For all this Wagner's obvious endeavour to assume the part of the loving husband and make himself "generally agreeable" to his matter-of-fact spouse was entertaining, though from another point of view it must have been pathetic.

Among the minor episodes of this time was an afternoon spent in the neighbouring town of Wiesbaden, where Wagner would not himself join in the play at the Kursaal, but pointed out to his companion the winning number four consecutive times. Weissheimer's illness interrupted the intimacy for some little time, but afforded Wagner the opportunity of showing his kindliness in many ways, one being the loan of a precious and indeed unique copy of "Die Walküre," in his own neat and precise handwriting. It was dated "Seelisberg, 1855," so that seven years had already passed without its being either performed or printed. Another mark of his friendship was the promise of a personal allusion to Weissheimer in the introduction to the third act of the "Meistersinger." This is mentioned in one of Wagner's letters that is quoted, and later on in the book Weissheimer tells us that the composer referred to it again at one of the final rehearsals of the "Meistersinger," six years later, and on the last occasion on which the two men came into personal contact. The curious thing is that Weissheimer never discovered the point of this mystic "Weissheimer-motive," which apparently still remains a problem for future commentators!

During the summer of 1862 Wagner received visits from two of his most famous disciples and their respective wives: Schnorr von Carolsfeld, the first Tristan, and Hans von Bülow. In view of this, Weissheimer arranged the "Meistersinger" Overture for pianoforte duet.

"When I had finished my arrangement, it took his fancy to play it with me, but he soon gave up the attempt, being much too unskilful a pianist. Again he bewailed having never had proper pianoforte instruction, adding that to that day it remained a puzzle to him how, during his theatre experiences, he had managed to get so far that the singers could somehow or other follow his accompaniment. This was indeed a wonder, for he played without the smallest technical powers. At the same time, I once heard him play the 'Lohengrin' prelude very beautifully. . . . Pieces without any rapid passages he could play very expressively."

The visit of the Schnorrs afforded an occasion for Wagner to hear, for the first time, the great duet from the second act of "Tristan." In the concluding portion of the same act Wagner himself sang the part of King Marke, and in portions of the "Ring" that were thus sampled during the visit of these famous singers we read of him impersonating Mime.

"Wagner truly excelled in this character. He bent himself, twisted about, and developed such a shrill falsetto, as might have softened (or pierced) stones. He could, besides, pull such a face, that one could almost see plainly the hateful dwarf with his watery eyes."

Soon after the Schnorrs came the Bülows, but before their arrival an accident had hindered Wagner's work at the "Meistersinger" score. Too confident of his well-known influence over dumb animals, he had endeavoured to make friends with a dog reputedly savage, and in his efforts to give it the pleasure of a Rhine bath on a hot July day, had been severely bitten in the right thumb. So all he could do was to bathe his thumb while Bülow played Beethoven's later sonatas and joined Weissheimer in the "Meistersinger" transcription. One evening, when the Master was in a communicative mood, he discussed the works he had planned to undertake so soon as he had completed the "Meistersinger" and the "Ring," and divulged in some detail his ideas concerning "Parsifal."

"Then he spoke of an Indian subject that attracted him, yet thought he should hardly get so far, for he always had a foreboding that 'Parsifal' would be his last work. He said this with some emotion. Tears stood in Frau von Bülow's eyes—a pause ensued. I slipped into the balcony; Hans von Bülow came quietly after me, whispering the prophetic words: 'Slight as the hope, and so faint the appearance of a realization of his plans, you will see, he will reach his goal, and bring even "Parsifal" into being.' These words made such an impression upon me that I have never forgotten them."

So far as the "Parsifal" time the author of these interesting reminiscences does not take us, for his last meeting with Wagner was at the production of "Die Meistersinger" in 1868. Among many other matters of interest, however, is a circumstantial account of how Wagner received the invitation from the King of Bavaria that so changed his outlook; but it would be unfair to extract too many plums from a book the interest of which may be inferred from the passages already quoted. Professor Stanford's String Quartet (Op. 64, No. 3) was produced a few weeks ago at Cologne, by the Gürzenich Quartet (Messrs. Hess, Seibert, Schwartz, and Grützmacher), and met with a very flattering reception. Indeed, after the slow movement the applause was quite enthusiastic. The Cologne Gazette, in a most appreciative notice, remarks, inter alia, that it was high time an important work by a British composer was introduced to a Cologne audience. "England," says the Gazette, "is never tired of showing the liveliest interest in German art and German artists, and yet we still labour under the impression that such a thing as English music does not exist. If any one work could remove this erroneous idea it was this quartet of Stanford's, which we count amongst the most enjoyable novelties of the whole winter season." As Cologne is one of the most musical cities in Germany, English musicians may perhaps hope that other works from their pens may help to enlighten its inhabitants as to the quality of music "made in England." As the Cologne Gazette very pertinently observes, "It is high time!"

The following interesting additions to the biographical sketch of Madame Albani that appeared in our last issue have come from across the Atlantic. The first is a copy of the advertisement, together with an account of the farewell concert given by Miss Lajeunesse before her departure (on April 1, 1868) from Albany to Europe. For this information we are greatly indebted to Mr. James C. Farrell, manager of The Argus (Albany), from the files of which journal he has kindly made the subjoined extracts:—

Amusements.

Grand Operatic Concert, given by Mlle. Emma C. La Jeunesse (Organist of St. Joseph's Church), and her sister, Mdlle. Cornelia La Jeunesse, at Tweddle Hall, Tuesday evening, February 25, 1868.

On which occasion they will be assisted by the following artists:—

Mrs. C. E. Hoyt	Soprano.
Miss Mary Hoag	Alto.
Mr. R. Robinson	Tenor.
Mr. S. Whitney	Basso.
Mr. W. H. Davis	Basso.
Mr. R. T. Yarndley	Pianist.

Tickets, 50 cents. Reserved seats, 50 cents extra. Can be secured at Campbell's Music Stores.—The Argus (Albany), February 25, 1868.

The concert of Miss E. C. Lajeunesse last evening was a very fine affair, largely attended, and in every respect a great success. The beneficiary, her young sister, Cornelia, and all the well-known talent announced, were enthusiastically received. It was an excellent concert.—The Argus (Albany), February 26, 1868.

The other supplementary matter is from Mr. George E. Whiting, the distinguished organist of Boston, who, it may be remembered, succeeded Miss Lajeunesse (Madame Albani) as organist of St. Joseph's Church, Albany. His "appreciation" of the great singer in the early days of her career speaks for itself. Under date, Boston, U.S.A., February 21, 1899, Mr. Whiting writes:—

My recollections of Madame Albani as a young and charming girl of fifteen are of the most pleasant description. What Madame Albani is now, she was then. Everyone who had the privilege of her acquaintance thought the world of her . . . . Before I was organist of St. Joseph's she played the immense organ in that church and sang the soprano solos. She also composed very prettily in those days. I remember an "Ave Maria" of her composition with great pleasure. She was also a good harpist. The fact is, Albani was one of those unspoiled musical prodigies, and to this day she has remained the same unassuming great artist.

The recent discovery of a hitherto unknown composition appertaining to "Die Zauberflöte" is a pleasant surprise indeed to Mozart-lovers the world over. We refer to a duet between Tamino and Papageno contained in an old manuscript copy of the score, which had formed part of the archives of the Theater-an-der-Wien, where "Die Zauberflöte" was first produced, and which is now in the possession of a Swiss collector. That so interesting a document, of the existence of which even Von Koechel was not aware, should have remained so long in obscurity seems strange; but there appears to be no reasonable doubt as to its authenticity. At any rate, the duet has been pronounced genuine by expert members of the Berlin Mozart Gemeinde, under whose auspices it will be published in the forthcoming number of their well-known Mittheilungen, a periodical to which students are already indebted for much out-of-the-way information concerning the master and his works.

The counterpoint question referred to in our last issue has brought forth some interesting comments on the pros and cons of the subject. Mr. E. A. Dicks has received a letter from Professor Rheinberger and one from Dr. Henry Hiles in regard to the definition "strict counterpoint." The German theorist says: "We in Germany do not differentiate so systematically between 'strict' movement and 'free,' for where is the line of demarcation between the two kinds of movements? Is the 'Ave Verum' of Mozart a 'free' or strictly formal movement? Neither one nor the other, because it is more than both." The Professor of Music in Victoria University writes:—

Evidently the contrapuntist's, like the policeman's, is not a happy life. Like the judges, the critics are unable to agree. In fact, like Macfarren, Cherubini, &c., they cannot work according to their own rules. . . . Somebody thinks that at least four pulses should separate 5ths; but, of course, he does not tell us why. No contrapuntist ever does give a reason. He could not. A suspended discord must not be longer than its preparation. (Why?) One man does not like a discord resolved upward. (Again, why?) A suspension must not be prepared by a dissonance. (Why?) What fun it all is! The first question to be decided is—What is strict counterpoint? Who perfected it, and when? Bach did not use it, who did? For they (the strict contrapuntists) profess to take their rules from the practice of the masters—what masters?

Take comfort: they will never agree.

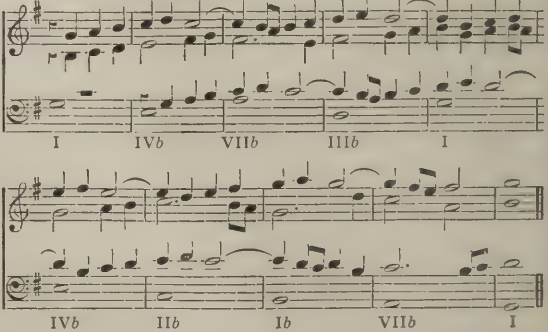
Yours truly,
H. Hiles.

Dr. C. W. Pearce, in the following letter, takes a diametrically opposite view:—

to the editor of "the musical times."

Sir,—As a believer in the merits of the good old school of Strict or Students' Counterpoint, may I venture to trouble you with two workings of the now famous Canto fermo which is occupying so much attention?—

Canon 2 in 1 Octave below.



The harmonic basis of these two exercises is precisely the same; but I have endeavoured to illustrate the amount of contrapuntal variety which is always possible in such studies, by giving to No. 1 a descending treble and to No. 2 an ascending treble; whilst the canonic imitation in No. 2 is but a very faint suggestion of what may be still further accomplished in this direction.

I maintain that it is possible to obtain musical results without breaking the rules which govern the art of counterpoint as taught by the late Mr. W. S. Rockstro, and by other musicians now living who are not ashamed to follow the "traditions of the elders." I believe that it is worse than useless for a student to attempt to make a good and artistic use of the chromatic and enharmonic genera until he has acquired a complete mastery of the vast resources of the Diatonic genus. History teaches us that the early studies of the greatest musical composers were cast in a severely diatonic mould, and is it too much to say that "true freedom is the result of patient obedience to necessary discipline, and devotion to hard work"?

Yours faithfully,
Craigmillar, Avenue Road, Charles W. Pearce.
Highgate, N., March 15, 1899.

Mr. Percy Pitt, a distinguished pupil of Professor Rheinberger's, writes as follows:—

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—From letters which have recently appeared in one of your contemporaries, a considerable amount of interest seems to be taken in the question of counterpoint and what is to be permitted or prohibited, this latter more especially.

Having studied for a considerable period with one of the foremost living theoreticians, it may, perhaps, interest your readers to know that this gentleman allows plenty of freedom, and regards counterpoint principally as a means to the end—this end being the acquirement of facility in handling and combining melodies. Again, the method adopted—that of teaching at a blackboard, and making every pupil work without a musical instrument—is invaluable as an aid to the development of musicianship.

In conclusion, I may add that the name of the contrapuntist referred to is Josef Rheinberger.

Yours truly,
March, 1899. Percy Pitt.

Professor Rheinberger has kindly sent nine more workings of the same Canto fermo, making twelve in all. We regret that space does not allow of their insertion, interesting as they would have proved to our readers.

The Lincoln and Peterborough Triennial Festival is announced to be held at Lincoln, on Wednesday and Thursday, June 7 and 8. The previous Festivals have occupied one day only. This year, however, a new departure is to be made. On the evening preceding the two oratorio performances in the Cathedral, an orchestral concert will be given, when Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," and Dr. G. J. Bennett's "Cymbeline" Overtures will be included in the programme. The works selected for performance at the "oratorio services in the Cathedral" are Gounod's "Redemption," Brahms's "Requiem," and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise;" also Tschaïkowsky's "Marche Solennelle," Wagner's Prelude to "Parsifal," and Elgar's "Imperial" March. The band, consisting mainly of the best London players (with Mr. Alfred Burnett as principal first violin), will number ninety performers, instead of sixty-three as at the last Festival, and the chorus will consist of about 400 voices. We understand that the guarantee fund has reached the sum of £1,600, exclusive of a gift of £100 towards the expense attending the orchestral concert. Dr. Haydn Keeton, of Peterborough Cathedral, will preside at the organ, and the arduous duties of conductor will be in the skilful hands of Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral.

Miss Sabilla Novello, an old and valued contributor to The Musical Times, prompted by the reference (in our last issue, page 161) to Mr. Edward Elgar's forthcoming "Symphonic Variations," sends us the following versions of a well-known nursery rhyme, in which she has portrayed "Humpty Dumptyism" in the styles of an ancient and modern poet. We understand, however, that Mr. Elgar's "variations" will reflect the personalities of his friends, not their styles, or mannerisms, using that word in no derogatory sense. As a matter of fact, the majority of those whose idiosyncracies he has musical-variationally simulated are not composers at all. However, Miss Novello's clever parodies are none the less welcome.

I'm told that Humpty Dumpty sat upon a narrow wall—
I know not why he should elect a seat so high and small,—
But as he did,—'twas natural that he should fall.
It matters little—nay, it matters not at all.
Then soldiers, or Centurions,—Heav'n save the mark!
Must needs run foolishly, to save his vital spark;
But all these Myrmidons, on chariot, horse or foot
(Mere dolts!) were impotent to execute this boot-
-less errand. What's the use of bolstering up again
A man that's dead? They had their trouble for their pain.

It has been customary to associate "the boy" with perpetrations of typographical eccentricities, presumably on the ground that they are the result of a want of "cunning" in his 'prentice hand. But as a recent specimen reaches us from Douglas, we may, in such an insular, though womanly example, assign its origin to "the Man." Some very interesting music competitions were to have been held at Douglas on the 22nd and 23rd ult., in connection with the "Isle of Man Fine Arts and Industrial Guild," a report of which we hope to give in our next issue. However, in a newspaper advertisement announcing the event, there appeared the following information:—

JUDGES:
W. G. McNaught, Esq.
Miss Due, F.R.A.M.

Paradoxical as it may appear, this plurality of names strikes us as being somewhat singular, as there was to be only one adjudicator, Dr. W. G. McNaught, the right man in that Isle of Man place. Who, then, is "Miss DUE, F.R.A.M."? As a matter of fact, this mysterious "Miss Due" is a misleading mistake for "Mus. Doc."! We have submitted the case to our master-printer, who is decidedly of opinion, after due consideration, that "Miss Due" is a misprint of a capital type.

Miss Esther Palliser made an interesting revival at the Gentlemen's concerts, Manchester, on the 13th ult., when she sang "Luther's Hymn," in which Madame Catalani and John Braham achieved great triumphs in the long ago. The following "historical notes" were printed in the programme:—

> "Luther's Hymn," so called in this country, is a mere title, as neither the words nor the music can be traced to the great leader of the Reformation. The original hymn is said to have been written about 1565, and to have been improved by Ringwaldt in 1581, the first line being "Es ist gewisslich an der Zeit." The origin of the English form of the first verse is unknown. The tune is found in a collection published by Joseph Klug in 1535, set to the words "Nun freut euch, liebe Christeng'mein," and afterwards adapted to the hymn "Es ist gewisslich" referred to above. It is very doubtful if Luther composed the tune. Both words and music are to be found in nearly every existing hymnal.
> "Luther's Hymn" attained great popularity in this country at the end of the last and the early part of the present century through its frequent performance at musical festivals and other occasions, of which a special feature was a trumpet obbligato played by Thomas Harper, the elder. This arrangement, which will be sung by Miss Esther Palliser this evening, was made about a hundred years ago by one C. F. Baumgarten, organist of the Lutheran Church in the Savoy and leader of the orchestra at Covent Garden Theatre. In this form it was originally sung by Incledon, the tenor, and afterwards by Braham. Madame Catalani, one of the greatest soprano singers, made an extraordinary effect with the simple melody at the York Musical Festival, held in York Minster, of 1828. Crosse, in his exhaustive "account" of that festival, thus refers to the event:—
> "This venerable and simple melody, which bears the name of the vigorous and intrepid reformer of Saxony as its author, may, without any question, be singled out as that one piece in particular, which, above all others of every age and style, will be most generally allowed to have produced the greatest impression during the whole of this extended festival; nor was there anything sung by Madame Catalani, to which the immense power of her voice, and the solemn majesty of her manner, were more admirably adapted, or in which she more thoroughly succeeded in awakening emotions of equal awe, pleasure, and surprise. The sound of the trumpet, proceeding from nearly the top of the orchestra, appeared as if it descended from the open space of the tower above; and the thrill of awe not unmingled even with terror, which it produced, was such as we shall not attempt to describe."
> Baumgarten's arrangement will be followed at the performance this evening, viz., the organ prelude, the tune sung by the soprano soloist, with the trumpet interludes, and repeated by the choir accompanied by the full orchestra.

Mr. Otto Goldschmidt has been the prime mover in the erection of a brass memorial tablet to the late Mr. W. S. Rockstro in the Roman Catholic Church of our Lady and St. Denis, St. Marychurch, Torquay, where that distinguished musician officiated for many years prior to his return to London. The inscription on the tablet reads:—

In pious memory of William Smyth Rockstro,
some time Master of Ceremonies of this Church.
Born January 5th, 1823,
Died July 2nd, 1895.

In music most learned,
In suffering most patient,
In life most devout,
In death most happy.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Professor Stanford addressed a long letter to The Times, of the 11th ult., on the subject of "A National Opera." It will be remembered that the London County Council have under their consideration the memorial presented to them on the subject of the municipal subsidisation of opera. The opening paragraph of Professor Stanford's letter is a sort of "Wach' auf" to "the powers that be" in Spring Gardens. We gather that he is not very sanguine as to the result of the Council's deliberations, as he, inferentially, makes an appeal for £150,000 from private sources. Here are his words:—

> Whereas in England the independent generosity of men of means has provided the sinews of war for contemporary painting, music has yet to wait for the man or men who will supply her wants. If the spirit moved any person to give £150,000 to-morrow for the establishment of a national opera-house, national opera would be ensured in England for half a decade at least, and once come it would never be allowed to go. The opportunity is a unique one for any Mæcenas of our time (and, happily for England, there are many such), and with careful safeguards it would be made the most of.

While we do not wish to depreciate in any way the efforts that are being made towards the establishment of a properly subsidised national opera, we must take exception to a mis-statement and its consequent inference made by Professor Stanford towards the close of his letter. He says:—

> The time is ripe, and all that is wanted is that the start should be made. To appeal to the State to apply a portion of some such grant as is now hopelessly wasted annually in paying for "singing by ear" in the schools (some £40,000 per annum), and thereby save £30,000 a year of public money, or to public bodies controlling technical education to apply that portion of their funds which is spent upon teaching a smattering of elementary music in the polytechnical institutions, would, even if successful, probably mean long delays and endless considerations and reports.

In the first place, the amount, "some £40,000 per annum," in the above quotation, is hopelessly wrong. According to the latest Blue-book returns, the amount of grants under the code in England, Wales, and Scotland for "ear singing" was £14,591—not £40,000. Moreover, the amount has been steadily decreasing during the last thirteen years, as in 1884 it stood at (in round figures) £50,000. And then the question arises, Is this grant (under £15,000) for "ear singing" really wasted? We think not. Better to have some music in a school than none at all. What would be the result if the grant for "ear singing" were withdrawn? In many schools up and down the country, consisting, for instance, of about eighty (or fewer) children under the tuition of only one teacher, not a single note of music would be heard in the school from one year's end to another. How many cottage homes would be deprived of much of their brightness if these schools were to be musically dumb! And with even the tiniest seed of music implanted within the heart of a child, is there not some reason to hope that it may bring forth and blossom as the rose? It is very gratifying to know that the "ear singing" grant is yearly getting less and less, and that the amount paid for "note singing" is increasing so rapidly. That is full of encouragement and an indication that the "waste" places will soon be made plain.

Herr Columban Rossi, whose ninety-fourth birthday was celebrated on February 19, is doubtless one of the oldest living organists. He has filled the positions of organist and schoolmaster at Andermatt for over seventy-six years and still continues in active service.

"A FORTY-FIVE years' subscriber to THE MUSICAL TIMES" writes as follows :—

> I have an old full score copy of Handel's "Messiah" (Dr. Arnold's type edition), and against most of the solos the names of the singers are pencilled in the margin—Elliott, Goss, Miss Hawkins, Mrs. Vaughan, Mr. Vaughan, Braham, and Master Buggins. Will you kindly tell me in your next issue ("Answers to Correspondents") about what years those ladies and gentlemen were singing, and was Goss a gentleman alto?

The name of Buggins gave the clue to the necessary research, it being associated in our memory with Birmingham. A glance through Bunce's "History" of the Birmingham Musical Festivals settled the point almost momentarily. Without doubt the old "Messiah" copy belonging to our "Forty-five years' subscriber" was actually used at the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1808, at which all the above-named performers took part—the young gentleman of the party being recorded as "Master Simeon Buggins (a local musical prodigy)"! John Jeremiah Goss (1770-1817) achieved a high reputation as an alto vocalist. He was an uncle of Sir John Goss.

SAMUEL WESLEY has an amusing reference to Mr. Buggins, probably the father of the Master Simeon Buggins referred to above. Writing to his friend Benjamin Jacob, organist of Surrey Chapel, from Birmingham, September 25, 1809, Wesley says: "I promised Buggins to conduct his Concert here (at Birmingham), which was very well attended at the Theatre, and the Fantazia I played on the Piano Forte I concluded with 'Roly Poly Gammon and Spinach,' which tickled the Tobies of the Button Makers at such a rate that I thought I never should have gotten off the Stage, at least till I had broken my Back with Bowing."

MR. FREDERIC H. COWEN has been the gratified recipient of a presentation, which took the form of a liqueur case, from the members of the Hallé choir at Manchester. The gift was handed to Mr. Cowen by Mr. R. H. Wilson, the chorus director, who, on behalf of the choir, expressed to their much esteemed conductor their earnest wishes for his prosperity as a man and an artist. Mr. Cowen, who was received with prolonged cheers, in acknowledging the presentation, said he was deeply touched at this mark of their friendship and goodwill. The inscription on the case was as follows :—

> Presented to FREDERIC H. COWEN by the members of the Hallé choir, Manchester, as a token of goodwill and appreciation of his eminent abilities as conductor.

THE Haydn house at Rohrau, on the Hungarian frontier, where the composer of the "Creation" was born, was, on the 1st ult., partially destroyed by a fire in which six of the adjoining cottages were completely burnt down. The modest thatched dwelling, in the vicinity of the Harrach'sche Schloss, was the property of a poor peasant, who, it is said, will be quite unable to afford the expense of rebuilding. It contained a few relics of the master, including his portrait, hung up in the room in which he was born, as well as a book in which many noted visitors have inscribed their names. The latter, together with the commemorative tablet, placed over the entrance in 1877, have been preserved; but all that which rendered the structure itself historically interesting has, unfortunately, been destroyed.

THE analytical programme seems to be spreading itself over the length and breadth of the land. All efforts, when rightly directed, towards interesting and enlightening those who listen to music call for hearty commendation. But we fear that there is a good deal of an inferior nature in such programmes when they are annotated by unqualified persons. A specimen of the how-not-to-do-it kind has recently come under our notice. It is the programme of a concert given in a London suburb. From seven annotations, if annotations they can be called, we select two of by no means the worst examples. The first refers to an arrangement for two pianofortes of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" March, which is thus described :—

> The full effects of this incomparable march cannot, of course, be brought out without much power in the shape of heavy drums and trombones. But the orchestral score is embodied in this arrangement for two pianos, which is full of vigour and melody.

The second example, upon Hubay's "Hejre Kati," for violin, is a delightful specimen of naïveté on the part of the "Analytical Editor." Here it is in all its unadorned comicality :—

> The analytical editor, not being acquainted with this particular piece, cannot offer any information in regard to it. But Miss —— and her work need neither introduction nor comment. Perhaps it may be considered impertinent to have written even this much.

O ALL ye musical critics South of the Tweed, ye who find it so hard to say anything fresh about Handel's "Messiah," hearken ye to the utterances of this your brother who dwelleth far North, in the land of kilts. We trow, sirs, ye canna' attain to such sublimities of metaphorical grandiloquence.

> The oratorio is a musical expression of the promise of Israel, and the libretto, chosen by a friend of Handel with exquisite taste, is a beautifully touching Mosaic of promise and prophecy, leading on through the ravishingly sweet Pastoral Symphony to the Advent of the Messiah, the Healer, and the Comforter, then by way of the intense pathos of the Alto Solo, "He was despised and rejected," through the Passion and the grave till you feel the Rock Tomb swaying, and the gates of glory opening, and the culminating clash of the music of earth and heaven rings out in glorious power in "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain," and in the absolutely triumphantly unique Hallelujah Chorus, which, since the first performance before the King and the Court, has always raised the listeners to their feet.
> Such is in brief the outline of the composition, and it is at once evident how much is demanded of any choir or soloists who set themselves out to render it in full and proper manner. We ourselves believe that a composition of such stupendous majesty will never be truly sung till it be given to the ingathered worlds in heaven itself.
> To enter fully into the rapture, to get down into the heart of the pathos, to rise to the fury, to catch the idyllic sweetness of this work, over which, through all its moods, the pillar of cloud and fire, the shadow and the wailing of Jewish prophecy and history, makes a great demand on insight, art, technique, passionateness of singers and players.

THE Mendelssohn Scholarship has been won by Mr. Percy Hilder Miles, a recent "old boy" of the Royal Academy of Music. Mr. Miles, who was born July 12, 1878, entered the Academy at the Midsummer term, 1893, and left at Christmas last. The violin has been his principal study, under Mr. Hans Wessely, and he has studied harmony and composition under Mr. Davenport and (during his absence in Australia) Mr. Battison Haynes. Mr. Miles's career at Tenterden Street has been very distinguished. In addition to obtaining the ordinary awards—bronze and silver medals—he took the following composition prizes: the Hine Exhibition, Christmas, 1893; the Macfarren Scholarship, January, 1896; and the Charles Lucas Medal, Midsummer, 1898. He was also the first winner of the Sauret prize (violin), Easter, 1897.

Mr. George Riseley has arranged to bring a large contingent of his Bristol Choral Society, numbering 350 voices, to London, on Saturday, the 15th inst., for the purpose of giving a performance of Brahms's Requiem and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" at the Queen's Hall. It will be the first appearance of this excellent Society in London proper, and this visit is being undertaken by those enthusiastic Bristolians in consequence of their being unable to give the usual concerts in the Colston Hall, owing to its destruction by fire. The management of the concert will be in the hands of Mr. Cecil Barth.

Dr. Henry Hiles, of the Victoria University, Manchester, will, on the afternoons of May 8 and 9, at 3 o'clock, at Trinity College, London, deliver the "Queen Victoria Lectures," founded in commemoration of Her Majesty's reign. Dr. Hiles's subject will be "The Music of the Ancient Eastern World," with a view to proving that a knowledge of harmony existed in very remote times.

Mr. Walter Macfarren is giving a course of lectures at the Royal Academy of Music on "Some Pianoforte Composers subsequent to Beethoven." The lecture on the 22nd ult. was devoted to Sterndale Bennett and G. A. Macfarren, with illustrations from their works played by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss Mabel Colyer, Mr. Welton Hickin, and Mr. Herbert Macfarren.

Mr. S. S. Stratton, of Birmingham, whose "British Musical Biography" (in conjunction with Mr. J. D. Brown) has proved to be a useful book of reference, has in preparation another work, entitled "Curiosities of Music and Musicians." The subject is not only an interesting one, but it is sure to be ably treated by Mr. Stratton.

Mr. Gilbert H. Betjemann, having resigned his position as principal first violin at the Royal Opera House, has been appointed a professor of the violin at the Royal Academy of Music. Dr. Arthur J. Greenish has been appointed a professor of harmony at the same Institution.

Mr. Edward Elgar's "Symphonic Variations" will be introduced at one of the Richter concerts, under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter.

Beethoven's Equale for four trombones was performed at Lord Herschell's funeral service in Westminster Abbey, on the 21st ult., by the members of the London Trombone Quartet (Messrs. George Case, C. Hadfield, A. E. Matt, and John Matt).

The Dean and Chapter of Bristol Cathedral, at a meeting on the 25th ult., appointed Dr. Percy C. Buck (of Wells Cathedral) organist, in the place of Mr. George Riseley.

MRS. KEELEY AND "OBERON."

Mrs. Keeley, whose death, at the great age of ninety-three, took place on the 12th ult., was a very remarkable woman. Although she was the doyenne of the dramatic profession, she has a strong claim to recognition in these columns by virtue of the part she took in the production of Weber's "Oberon" seventy-three years ago. Born at Ipswich on November 22, 1805, Mary Anne Goward (afterwards Keeley) was "endowed with a pure soprano voice of remarkable compass." She was apprenticed for seven years to Mrs. Smart, a well-known teacher of music. This lady was a sister-in-law of Sir George Smart and the mother of Henry Smart, the organist and composer. It is stated that Mrs. Keeley was also a pupil of Henry Smart, the elder, and that he met with his death in Dublin (November 27, 1823) when in the Irish capital superintending the début of Miss Goward, his pupil. Her subsequent experiences as a singer were at York, Ipswich (her native town), in June, 1824, and probably elsewhere, and in London, Lyceum Theatre, July 2, 1825.

But Miss Goward, like many young aspirants to fame, found her opportunity through the failure of another singer, though in her case it was the result of a double failure. Weber came to this country in 1826 for the production of his opera "Oberon." He arrived in London on March 5 and took up his abode at the house of Sir George Smart, whose guest he was, at what is now No. 103, Great Portland Street, where, on the morning of June 5, exactly thirteen weeks after his arrival, the composer of "Der Freischütz" and "Oberon" was found dead in his bed.

"Oberon" was produced at Covent Garden, under the personal direction of its rapidly dying composer, on April 12, 1826. One of its most popular and best known excerpts is the "Mermaid's Song," which has a history. Six years ago—the precise date was May 6, 1893—I received a cordial invitation from the veteran actress, Mrs. Keeley, to call upon her for a talk about "Oberon." It was a lovely spring morning, and the sun shone brightly into the pleasant sitting room of her house—10, Pelham Crescent, South Kensington—in which she had lived so long, and where she recently drew her last breath. She entered the room with all the sprightliness of a young girl. The French window was kept open by a large old-fashioned hassock. She said, "I think I'll close the window." "Allow me, Mrs. Keeley," I remarked. "No, no," she replied, and then she kicked the hassock right across the room with evident glee and all the energy of a schoolboy at football. She was then in her eighty-ninth year!

Mrs. Keeley vividly recalled all the incidents connected with the production of "Oberon." She said that two other singers of repute had tried to sing the "Mermaid's Song," but without success. The Mermaid had to sing at the very back of the stage, where it was extremely difficult to hear the soft accompaniment. There was some danger of the air having to be sacrificed, when Sir George Smart, Weber's host, said, "Little Goward will sing it," and "little Goward" did. "Weber came up to me afterwards," said Mrs. Keeley, "and, placing his beautiful hand on my shoulder, said: 'My little girl, you sang that song very nicely; but what for did you put in that note?'—which little note (said the octogenarian Mermaid to me in a whispered and confidential tone) I put in—on my own account."

When I placed before Mrs. Keeley my copy of "Oberon"—open at the "Mermaid's Song"—she became even more interested in the incident. She had evidently not seen the music for many a day. Sixty-seven years had passed away since she first sang that familiar "Mermaid's Song." It was intensely interesting and not a little amusing to watch her mobile and almost comically-expressive countenance as she hummed the air and played the accompaniment (in imagination) on the little table at which she was seated—the dear old lady swaying her head from side to side to the rhythm of the music. "Will you be so kind as to write your name in my book?" I ventured to ask. "With pleasure," she emphatically replied, and after the careful selection of a pen she very kindly inscribed her autograph as it appears in the accompanying fac-simile. The geniality of the warm-hearted actress, whose hand had clasped Weber's, no less than her genuine pleasure in recalling the incidents attendant upon the "Mermaid's Song" in "Oberon," will not easily fade from my memory.

"TRE GIORNI SON CHE NINA."

It is a rather curious fact that so little is known as to the origin of some of the most popular songs. Discussions as to the authorship of "God save the King" occur periodically in every well-conducted musical newspaper, and almost as frequently doubts are thrown on Bishop's claim to "Home, sweet home." No one knows who wrote the "Ave Maria" ascribed to Archadelt, the Twelfth Mass which passes as Mozart's, or the "Pieta, Signore," attributed to Stradella. The list might be almost indefinitely extended, but the purpose of the present article is to examine the very curious and involved history of the little air "Tre giorni son che Nina," by which the modern public now chiefly knows the name of Pergolese.

More than twenty years ago, in the Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung for August 18, 1875, Herr Bernhard Gugler drew attention to the song, which was then only known in Germany by an arrangement for violoncello. Herr Gugler says that some fifteen years previously he had found an English single-sheet version of "Tre giorni," probably dating from the sixth decade of the last century, in which it was entitled "Canzonetta, composed by Pergolesi." Of this version apparently no copy is now forthcoming. The oldest edition bearing the name of Pergolese which is to be found in the British Museum is so recent as 1857, and M. Weckerlin, the Librarian of the Paris Conservatoire, informs me that he has seen none older than 1847. In the now defunct Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft for 1887 there appeared an elaborate article by the late Philipp Spitta on the obscure Italian composer Rinaldo di Capua, the author of various forgotten operas and intermezzos. In the course of his article Herr Spitta devoted much space to the history and analysis of "La Zingara," almost the only one of the composer's opere buffe which has been preserved. This work was given at the Académie Royale de Musique, in Paris, in June, 1753, by a small company of Italian artists, who had already introduced Pergolese's "Serva Padrona" to a French audience. "La Zingara" was so successful that the score was published (under the name of "La Bohémienne") with Italian words. From a curious MS. "Avertissement," said to be in the handwriting of Jean Jacques Rousseau, which was first published in A. Jansen's "Jean Jacques Rousseau als Musiker" (1884), it would seem that considerable changes were made in Rinaldo di Capua's little work in order to suit it to French tastes. What these were it would be difficult to say, for no earlier version of the opera than that published in Paris can be traced; but the matter would not be of much importance except for its connection with Pergolese's song. In 1754 the company which had been playing in Paris returned to Italy and, during the Carnival of 1755, they appeared at Pesaro, where "La Zingara" was given in a new version, in which two additional characters were introduced. A copy of the libretto of this is to be found in the Liceo Musicale at Bologna. Shortly afterwards the work was adapted by Favart and produced in a French dress at the Théâtre Italien in July, 1755, with Madame Favart in the principal part. Its success must have been very great, for in spite of the fact that an Italian edition was already in the market, Favart's version was published in score. Prefixed was an announcement of some importance to the effect that the music was by Signor Rinaldo di Capua, with the exception of the duet at the end of the first act, which was from Pergolese's "Serva Padrona," and the ariette "Laissez mon cœur," which was "de Lesci des 3 Cigibées." Herr Spitta, not having seen a copy of "I tre Cicisbei ridicoli," was rather at a loss to explain the last paragraph of Favart's "Avertissement." As a matter of fact, the song is a version of "Madam lasciatemi in liberta," one of four songs published by Walsh from "I tre Cicisbei ridicoli," which were sung by Signor Laschi (a celebrated buffo singer) when that work was given in London.

From the various sources which have been mentioned Herr Spitta has attempted to reconstruct Rinaldo di Capua's opera in its original form, and in comparing the French and Italian scores he was not a little surprised to find that in one scene Favart had introduced the well-known air "Tre giorni son che Nina." In spite of the fact that the original Italian must have been known to the adaptor, since the first words are given as a heading to the French verses in the reprint of "La Bohémienne" in Favart's collected works, and though Herr Spitta allows that this being the case the song cannot have been originally composed for "La Zingara," yet on the strength of Rousseau's preface, the learned author claims it as a composition of Rinaldo di Capua's and concludes that from Paris it found its way to London, where it was attributed to Pergolese, as being the best known buffo composer of the day.

It is the purpose of this article to bring together certain facts with regard to the song which show that, whoever was its composer, Herr Spitta was quite wrong in attributing it to Rinaldo di Capua, although there is no doubt that from his work, as adapted by Favart, it found its way into various French publications of the last century. In Vol. IV. of Burney's "History of Music" (p. 458) we are told that in the autumn of 1748—

> A new company of singers was brought hither from Italy, for the first time, by Signor Croza. These performers, consisting of Pertici, Laschi, and Guadagni, then very young, for first man; Frasi, and afterwards Mellini, for serious woman; and the comic female parts by the wives of Pertici and Laschi, the two best buffo actors I ever saw, formed a very good troop; and in the comic operas of La Comedia in Comedia, Orazio, Don Colascione, Gli tre Cicisbei ridicoli, &c., composed by Latilla, Natale Resta, and Ciampi, who came over as maestro to the company, pleased the public, and filled the theatre, very successfully, during the whole season.

In a note Burney adds:

> Some notice seems due here to this new and ingenious species of dramatic Music; but as it is of the same kind as that of intermezzi, which have a distinct article elsewhere; and as the composers will be duly mentioned as masters of the Neapolitan School, I shall here only observe, that of the three first opere buffe, which have been mentioned, the music of Don Calascione, by Latilla, was much the best; the whole being truly characteristic and charming. Till the Buona Figliuola, nothing equal to it was produced, except Il filosofo di Campagna, which is less comic, though more elegant. Gli tre Cicisbei ridicoli had likewise great comic merit; but this species of composition was now so new, and the acting of Pertici and Laschi, so excellent, and so fully engaged the attention, that critics had little leisure left for a severe examination of the Music.

"I tre Cicisbei ridicoli," with which we have chiefly to do, was announced at the Haymarket in the General Advertiser for March 14, 1748-9, as "a new Comic opera, called Li Tre Cicisbei Ridicoli. With new Dances between the Acts, and other Decorations, entirely new." In the same paper the songs were advertised as published by Walsh on April 13, 1749. It had been originally given at the Sant' Angelo at Venice, at the Fair of the Ascension in 1748, and was revived at the San Moisè in 1752, as is recorded in the Supplement to Allacci's "Drammaturgia" (Venice, 1755), as follows:

> I Tre Cicisbei Ridicoli. Dramma per Musica rappresentata in Venezia nel Teatro di Sant' Angiolo l'anno 1748, in Venezia per Modesto Fenzo, 1748, in 12. Poesia d'Incerto Autore.—Musica di Natal Resto.—Replicato nel Teatro di San Moisè l'anno 1752—ivi, per il Fenzo, 1752, in 12.—Musica dello sterso Resta.

The references to Fenzo mean that he was the publisher of the book of words, and from Cav. Wiel's excellent "Teatri Musicali Veneziani nel Settecento" (1897) it seems that the principal parts were played in 1752 (the cast of the earlier production is not given) by Filippo Laschi and his wife Anna Querzoli Laschi. It is evident that the company which Burney describes chiefly came from Venice, where the same operas, performed mainly by the same singers, had been played just before the London performances. From London part of the troupe (not, however, including Laschi and his wife) went to Paris, where they made opera buffa for a time as popular as had been the case in England. Four songs in "I tre Cicisbei ridicoli" were published by Walsh in his great collection "Le Delizie dell' Opera" (Vol. VI., pp. 145-153), and, as was usual, copies were issued with a separate title-page, which runs as follows:

> The | Favourite Songs | in the Opera | Call'd | Li Tre | Cicisbei | Ridicoli. | London. Printed for I. Walsh in Catharine Street in the Strand. |

These copies bear a double pagination—viz., that of the serial publication and that of the separate issue. Each song is headed "Sigr. Laschi nei Tre Cicisbei," without any composer's name, this, of course, meaning that they were sung by Laschi, which accounts for the heading in Favart's version of "La Zingara." The songs are (1) "Fanciullina d'inamora," (2) "Tre giorni," (3) "Madam lasciatemi," and (4) "Croiez vu ma belle" (a burlesque French song). So far, it might be concluded that they were the composition of Natale Resta, an obscure Milanese composer of whom next to nothing is known; but the matter is complicated by a reference to the libretti of 1748 and 1752, copies of which are preserved in the Marcian Library at Venice, where they have been most kindly and thoroughly examined and described for me by Cav. Wiel and Mr. Horatio Brown.

From these it seems that between the dates of the two Venetian performances the work went through a complete course of remodelling, so that numbers to be found in the earlier version are omitted or transposed in the later, and vice versâ. The plot, briefly stated, is as follows:—

> The action takes place at Lugo, the home of Modulina, a singer, and her sister, Lidia, both of whom are in love with Lindoro, a vain and poor youth, who imagines that every woman is in love with him. Modulina has a rascally husband, called Cuccamondo, who passes as the sister's servant in order to make money out of his wife's admirers. The other "Cicisbei" are Giscone, a spendthrift, and Ottavio, formerly engaged to Bice, both of whom make love to Modulina. The plot turns upon Cuccamondo's plans for fleecing the three "Cicisbei," a chief comic scene of the piece being one in which Modulina, feigning illness, is visited by Giscone and Lindoro, who are disguised as doctors for fear of meeting Ottavio. Modulina, by Cuccamondo's suggestion, arranges an elopement with Giscone, who gives a large sum to the supposed servant to carry out the plan. An assignation is made with Lindoro, who serenades Modulina, but her place is taken by Lidia, and the two hurry off to be married. Giscone arrives to carry off Modulina, but the husband disguises himself in his wife's clothes and delays the elopement until they are discovered by Ottavio, who has been warned by Cuccamondo of the intended elopement. Finally, Bice arrives upon the scene, to the confusion of the faithless Ottavio, and the three Cicisbei are only reconciled by Modulina disclosing the fact that she is married already.

A curious point about this story is that none of the characters is called Nina, nor can it be taken as a probable abbreviation of the name of the heroine. Primâ facie, this would seem to show that the air "Tre giorni" is an interpolation, and it is therefore not to be wondered at that the words of it occur in neither version of the libretto. On the other hand, the second verse of the song, to be presently given, certainly points to the scene in the play where Modulina is visited by the two doctors, though this verse might well have been added when the song was introduced. As Cav. Wiel points out, the song might have been introduced as Lindoro's serenade, no words of which are given in the libretto. Of the other four songs printed by Walsh, "Fanciullina d'inamora" and "Madam lasciatemi" are in both versions, though in different places, and "Croiez vu ma belle" (like "Tre giorni") is in neither. It may be mentioned incidentally that besides the French words of "Croiez vu ma belle," a French refrain occurs to "Fanciullina d'inamora." It is pretty evident from what has been stated that "Tre giorni" was introduced into Resta's opera in London, where it and the other three printed songs were sung (as is stated in Walsh's edition) by Filippo Laschi. The original score, and with it the rest of the music of the work, has hopelessly vanished, but it is most improbable that the four songs Walsh printed were the composition of the obscure Milanese master.

The very fact of their having been printed alone, and the obvious similarity of style of the music of all four, point to their having been a feature in the London production, while the absence of the words of two of them from both versions of the libretto goes to prove that they did not form part of the original score. Rinaldo di Capua's claim must therefore be dismissed as without foundation. The question remains as to who was their composer. Tradition points to Pergolese, but there is no trace of the songs in any of his works that are generally accessible, and the style of the music is decidedly different from what might have been expected from him.

As it happens, however, a curious piece of contemporary evidence has come to light, which would seem to point to these additions to Resta's score being the work of Vincenzo Ciampi, who, as Burney states, "came over as maestro to the company" which introduced "I tre Cicisbei ridicoli" to the London public. In Signor Piatti's library there is a copy of Walsh's publication which formerly belonged to Cecilia Arne, who has not only written her name on the title-page, but has also added that of Ciampi as the composer. Without being conclusive evidence, it may be taken that Mrs. Arne, living in London at the time the opera was performed, wrote down what was probably the accepted opinion of the time. In the absence of any proof to the contrary, there seems no reason to assume that Ciampi followed Handel's example by appropriating the work of other composers, and he may well be allowed the credit of being the author of a song which in many respects is more akin to his style than to that of Pergolese. Fétis is not a very reliable authority, but it is worthy of note that he attributes the music of "I tre Cicisbei" to Ciampi, without, however, giving his authority for doing so.

A definite solution of the question must, until further evidence turns up, be left undecided; but there is one not unimportant point in the history of "Tre giorni" as to which there can be no doubt. A custom has lately sprung up of singing the little air as if it was of the most tragic character. Madame Viardot, in her "Ecole classique du chant," calls it "La chanson du Fou," and says: "Cet air, un des rares morceaux isolés qu'ait laissés Pergolèse . . . peut être chanté avec beaucoup de liberté comme changements de mouvements et oppositions de nuances; l'incohérence des paroles l'indique assez"; and it has been supposed by imaginative persons that the song is sung by a mad lover to his dead mistress—a story for which no authority whatever can be traced. The first ~~verse~~ of the song is so familiar that there is no occasion to reprint it, but the second verse, as printed by Walsh, has been invariably omitted in modern editions. It runs as follows, and conclusively proves that the air is comic and should be treated as such:

E mentre il sior dottore à visitarla và,
Ninetta per amore
in letto se ne stà
E timpani, &c.

In the face of this, it is to be hoped that the young singers with whom "Tre giorni" is such a deserved favourite will, in future, not continue to sing it with all the tragic expression of which they are capable.

CHURCH MUSIC.

The formation of that useful body, the Church Orchestral Society, has already borne good fruit, not only in setting up a high standard of church music under the most complete artistic conditions, but in leading the way towards the creation of similar local associations. The Kilburn Choral and Orchestral Union, under the direction of Mr. G. R. Ceiley and in connection with the church work going forward in the parish of St. John's, Kilburn, is one of the most recent efforts to make the orchestra a power in our religious services. In a sensibly worded circular Mr. Ceiley gives excellent advice in the way of urging the superabundant players of certain instruments, as the violin and the flute, to cultivate such unreasonably neglected instruments as the viola, oboe, bassoon, and horn, in view of securing fully equipped and properly balanced orchestras. He also indicates that one special function of the Kilburn orchestra will be that of brightening the Sunday afternoon services at St. John's Church.

In this same direction, the orchestral music of the Afternoon Sunday Services at the Parish Church, Brixton, has proved to be of distinct value, and as a natural result it has been greatly appreciated by large numbers of earnest listeners.

In connection with the advancement of church music, it is not without interest to note in the recently published correspondence of Lord Hardwicke that in a letter from King George III., dated May 10, 1801, addressed to the above-mentioned statesman on his departure for Ireland, the King recommends that the clergy of the Irish Church be encouraged to reside in Ireland, that the cathedrals be kept in good repair, and the choir services improved.

One of the annual functions of our great Metropolitan Cathedral, the Welsh Festival, took place on the eve of St. David's Day. The music was for the most part of a simple character, and well adapted for the display of that emotional earnestness which characterises every manifestation on the part of the Welsh people. The anthem, "Ye Kingdoms and Nations," by the late J. Ambrose Lloyd, was effectively sung. Mr. J. E. Davies, of St. David's, Paddington Green, directed the choir, and Mr. T. Vincent Davies, of St. Benet's, Queen Victoria Street, whose simple and effective Evening Service in B flat was a musical feature of the Festival, presided at the organ.

The worthy regard for Stainer's "Crucifixion" is still undimmed, and its use during Passiontide has been very general. One of the many renderings given was at All Saints', Hatcham Park, on the 12th ult., under the direction of the organist, Mr. C. T. Couch; the work being repeated on Good Friday. Mr. J. Maunder's "Penitence, Pardon and Peace" has been sung on alternate Sundays during Lent at St. Luke's, Nutford Place, under the guidance of Mr. A. J. Fry, the organist.

Bach's "Passion Music"—that is, the two accepted settings according to St. Matthew and St. John—gains year by year upon public attention. The usual performances of the St. John setting have been given at St. Anne's, Soho, under the charge of that life-long student of Bach, Mr. E. H. Thorne.

One of the most interesting church renderings of the setting according to St. Matthew was given at the Temple Church, on Passion Sunday, under the direction of Dr. Walford Davies. The most imposing and solemn presentation of the Passion Music is that annually given at St. Paul's Cathedral on the Tuesday in Holy Week, with Sir George Martin as conductor; a rendering, taking all conditions into account, which must be regarded as the most impressive musical service the world knows.

The Lenten music at the Parish Church, Marylebone, has again maintained its special character. Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" and Stainer's "Crucifixion" were the works performed. At St. Michael's, Cornhill, under Dr. W. Reynolds's guidance, an interesting series of English Church anthems has been given at the weekly Lenten services. These have included excellent specimens of the works of Farrant, Weldon, Nares, Attwood, Wesley, Goss, and Sullivan.

The season's music sung at the important Church of the Incarnation, New York, and directed by Mr. R. W. Hedden, has been characterised by the good taste and artistic care always evident in the musical arrangements there. At Holy Trinity Church, San Francisco, a well-matured scheme of seasonable Church music was given, under the guidance of Mr. Stewart, the organist.

Of special interest was the performance of Pergolesi's beautiful "Stabat Mater" at St. John's, Wilton Place, on Passion Sunday, and also as arranged to be repeated on Wednesday in Holy week. Originally written for soprani and contralti, this gem of the sacred art of the eighteenth century must be regarded as belonging to the large class of convent music of which we hear but little in this country. To the late John Hullah we may be said to owe our knowledge of this beautiful and artistic production. Its use at St. John's was doubtless a happy thought on the part of the Hon. Richard Strutt and others concerned in the musical work so admirably done there.

At the quarterly meeting of the Manchester Rural Deanery Association of Organists, fixed for the 24th ult., that learned musician and able lecturer, Dr. Henry Hiles, was announced to give an address which would deal partly with the vexed and difficult subject, the pointing of the Psalter.

ORGAN MUSIC.

The artistic interest of the excellent organ recitals given under the control of Dr. J. Warriner, at the Royal College of Organists, has been admirably maintained. A most interesting programme was that of Mr. H. L. Balfour, whose playing was in every respect admirable. His selection included Bach's Fourth Organ Sonata, Prelude and Fugue in B, Saint-Saëns; Fantasia Eroica in F minor, F. Kühmstedt; Trios, Book I., Rheinberger; Minuetto, Third Symphony, Widor; and Choral with variations, H. Smart. One feature of the excellent scheme was the eloquent recitation by Mr. Charles Fry of Longfellow's "King Robert of Sicily," with Mr. J. E. West's highly picturesque and artistically written music played by Mr. Balfour. The connection of a well-modulated speaking voice with the varying, expressive, and even tones of the organ, yields a new form of artistic eloquence which should suggest further scope for composers, and, for that matter, poets also. Mr. Charles Fry also recited Adelaide Procter's "The story of a faithful soul," with Mr. Stanley Hawley's music. Mr. Harry G. Flint gave songs by Purcell, Gounod, and Leoncavallo. Dr. Botting's scheme, on the 14th ult., included a Fugue in C by S. S. Wesley, Fantasia by W. S. Hoyte, and other good things. Dr. H. A. Harding was announced to play on the 28th ult.

A series of recitals has been given at St. Clement Danes by Messrs. W. Hedgcock, G. Pinches, J. Dear, and H. A. Wheeldon, whose programmes contained such excellent specimens of English organ music as Air Varié, by W. G. Wood, and Fantasia in F, by F. E. Gladstone. Dr. Warriner's recitals, given at St. Matthew's, Denmark Hill, after Sunday evening services, have reached the large number of 360, and maintain a high level of artistic excellence. Mr. E. H. Lemare, on the 9th ult., and Mr. W. S. Hoyte, on the 16th ult., gave admirable recitals in connection with the opening of the effective new three-manual organ built by Mr. A. Gern for Queen's Park Congregational Church. Mr. Lemare gave a recital recently on the admirable new organ built by Messrs. Norman and Beard for St. Saviour's, Walton Place. On the 10th, 17th, and 24th, Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne gave recitals at St. Dunstan's, Fleet Street, a church with musical memories of the once famous organist, Thomas Adams. One of his programmes contained Dr. Creser's Variations on a Sarabande by Handel, an excellent recital piece, and Rheinberger's fine Sonata in A. Another scheme included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Rheinberger's Pastoral Sonata, and Wesley's Choral-Song and Fugue.

Mr. Ernest H. Smith recently gave a recital at the Parish Church, Wateringbury. Mr. A. J. Lancashire's programme, played at St. John's Church, Clee, on the 12th ult., included Dr. A. L. Peace's admirably written Sonata da Camera (No. 1), and also movements for organ and violin and organ and viola. Mr. Ashworth gave a recital recently at the Shore Baptist Chapel, his selection including T. Carter's old-world, quaint variations, the "Carillons de Dunkerque," and Andante with variations by J. Lemmens. At the Public Hall, Preston, Mr. James Tomlinson gave a recital on the 11th ult. His selection included J. F. Barnett's musicianly Offertoire and one of W. T. Best's strikingly effective Fantasias, written specially for popular concert use.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

WAGNER'S "HOLY SUPPER OF THE APOSTLES."

Peculiar interest was attached to the concert given by the Royal Choral Society, on the 9th ult., at the Royal Albert Hall, owing to the first performance being given in London of Wagner's "The Holy Supper of the Apostles" ("Das Liebesmahl der Apostel"). Much information concerning this work has already appeared in The Musical Times—notably on pages 165 and 171 of last month's issue—and consequently it is now only necessary to comment on the performance and the impression created. The male choir was divided, according to the directions of the composer, into three sections, the second and third choirs of equal strength and the first of less numbers. The representatives of the twelve Apostles occupied the position usually taken by the soloists. The present tenors and basses of the choir are exceptionally good, and they sang the opening chorus with magnificent precision and wealth of tone. The first striking effect was noticeable at the point where doubt and anxiety are expressed, the rapid changes from forte to piano and the faltering character of the music giving realistic emphasis to the fears of the Disciples. Another dramatic effect is secured by the entrance of the first choir with words of encouragement to their brethren. This body sings in unison, while the other two choirs respond respectively in four parts each, the music continuing in nine independent parts until the end of the number. This is followed by the greeting of the Apostles, who sing in three and four parts and are answered by the full male choir. The music here is more declamatory in character, consistent with the nature of the text. To this succeeds a celestial assurance of help, which was delivered with impressive effect by five voices shut up in the swell-box of the organ. After this the soft roll of a kettle-drum in C, to which three more are severally added as an imposing crescendo is gradually worked up to a stirring fortissimo, with which the orchestra enters for the first time with magnificent effect. From this point the music becomes increasingly strenuous and expansive, until the work concludes with a majestic climax. To musicians a remarkable feature of the work is the way in which the music seems to reach back and stretch forward from suggestions of "Rienzi" to a notable anticipation of a theme in "Parsifal." Above all, the coming "Tannhäuser" music may be said to be felt. But these reminiscences do not affect the dignity and noble loftiness of the music, the most appropriate home for which would be the Cathedral or, where sufficient means were available, the Church. Save that the pianissimos were seldom attained and that the Apostles were not always as unanimous as they should have been, the interpretation was excellent and the work manifestly made a deep impression. Sir Frederick Bridge, who had taken the greatest possible pains in the preparation of Wagner's difficult and complicated music, deserves all praise for the success attending the performance under his able direction.

The subsequent performance of the Prelude and part of the first act of "Parsifal" was disappointing, but the selection from the third act of "Tannhäuser" was finely rendered.

The soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Helen Jaxon, and Messrs. E. Branscombe, Hedmondt, Daniel Price, Alec Marsh, and Harry Dearth.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The opening concert of the eighty-seventh season of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 8th ult., at the Queen's Hall. Its most pleasurable feature was a fine interpretation of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's rich and imaginative orchestral ballad "La Belle Dame sans Merci." Next in point of enjoyment was the rendering of Schumann's first Symphony in B flat. Miss Leonora Jackson was heard to advantage in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto and Herr Dohnányi delighted his listeners by his brilliant rendering of the solo part in Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. Cherubini's picturesque "Ali Baba" Overture concluded the concert, which, as usual, was conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

The second concert, on the 22nd ult., was opened with Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's Orchestral Ballad in A minor. This original and striking work "wears" extremely well, the most intimate acquaintance with its every note failing to lessen the delight with which the ear receives the young composer's utterances, nor the strong impression that these alternately fierce, impassioned, and tender strains well from his heart, a fresh fount of original melody, such as it is only given to the chosen few amongst composers to pour forth. The work, which has had such an extraordinary success, was most heartily applauded, and the audience actually cheered the young composer on his appearance on the platform. A very fine interpretation was given of Brahms's severe but noble Fourth Symphony in E minor (Op. 98). The performance, indeed, may be placed amongst the best Sir Alexander Mackenzie has conducted. M. Basil Sapellnikoff gave a legitimate rendering of the pianoforte part of Beethoven's G major Concerto and subsequently played with exquisite finish Liszt's poetical "Liebestraum." Miss Ruth Lamb sang meritoriously the recitative and aria "Mi parea," from Verdi's "Otello."

MR. NEWMAN'S SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Emil Sjögren's orchestral episode descriptive of the desert journey of the three Holy Kings, which Mr. Henry J. Wood produced at the penultimate concert at the Queen's Hall, on February 25, is an unspeakably dreary and pointless effusion that we may safely assert will never be heard again. The event of the concert was the performance of Brahms's Symphony in F (No. 3, Op. 90), which glorious work has too long been excluded from Mr. Wood's programmes. Though the orchestra was evidently none too well acquainted with it, the performance was worthy of the work on the whole. Mr. Wood's tempi are not those of Dr. Richter; ergo, they cannot be Brahms's. Nevertheless, to hear this fine orchestra revel once more in a modern masterpiece of abstract music was such an exhilarating experience that we forgive Mr. Wood even the infliction of the Sjögren novelty. M. de Pachmann played Chopin's F minor Concerto in his most perfect manner. Miss Isabel McDougall sang the air "Chiamo il mio ben così," from Gluck's "Orfeo," and her sympathetic voice and artistic method did full justice to the beautiful strains. Schubert's Overture to "Rosamunde" and the popular "Tristan" Selection completed the programme.

There was no novelty at the last concert, on the 11th ult., the promised Suite (Op. 9) by A. Taneieff having been for some reason or other withdrawn. Tschaïkowsky's "Nutcracker" Suite, perfectly played (if we except a little unsteadiness in the pretty overture), and Schumann's D minor Symphony; Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia, Spohr's eighth Concerto (Op. 47) (Gesangscene), and Wagner's "Waldweben" ("Siegfried"), constituted an excellent programme and attracted a large audience. A dignified yet spirited performance was given of the Symphony, though in this superb work also some of Mr. Wood's tempi were open to objection. M. Johannes Wolff gave a sentimental reading of Spohr's concerto and Miss Adela Verne attacked Liszt's Fantasia boldly and successfully, her performance lacking neither power nor brilliancy. Miss Clara Butt's glorious voice did the fullest justice to Delilah's hypocritical song, "Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix," from Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," which she sang with the most intense expression. She was less successful in Liszt's exquisite "Es muss ein Wunderbares sein" and Tschaïkowsky's beautiful "Nun wer die Sehnsucht kennt." But why did she choose somebody's arrangement of the accompaniment for pianoforte and violoncello instead of Tschaïkowsky's own most expressive pianoforte accompaniment to his finest song?

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

MR. W. WALLACE'S SYMPHONIC POEM "SISTER HELEN."

The Saturday afternoon concerts were resumed on February 25. The occasion was distinguished by the first performance of a Symphonic Poem in D minor, entitled "Sister Helen," by Mr. William Wallace. As this was the fifth work by this composer performed during the last six years in the Sydenham concert-room, it furnished further and pleasing evidence of Mr. Manns's willingness to assist British writers. "Sister Helen" has a past, which Mr. C. A Barry relates as follows: "A few years ago, at the suggestion of Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, Mr. Wallace wrote some music, which was intended to accompany a stage representation of Rossetti's Ballad, to be given at a Matinée in aid of a charity, when it would have taken the form of a duologue, continuously accompanied by music, the refrain which complements each verse being sung by a contralto behind the scenes. Though Mr. Wallace completed his share of the work, this projected stage representation was deferred. As there was no immediate prospect of another . . . he set to work and arranged the principal material, with some additions and subtractions, as an orchestral piece for concert-use." Sister Helen, it will be remembered, is a spinster who has been "crossed in love" and causes the death of her faithless swain by melting his waxen image before a fire, in accordance with a mediæval superstition. Malignant hatred is thus the keynote of the poem, and consequently that of the music. This being so, no loftiness or nobility of expression or treatment would be compatible with the subject-matter; but its absence none the less prevents Mr. Wallace's music attaining a high level of artistic value. In its entirety the work is masterly, virile, powerful, but leaves a wish that the composer had elected to be inspired by a damsel of more civilised sentiments. The music was finely interpreted, under the direction of Mr. Wallace, who was much applauded and recalled to the platform. The remainder of the concert was conducted by Mr. Manns, who secured excellent renderings of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony in F and Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture. Herr Dohnányi made a most successful début at these concerts in Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, and the vocalist was Mr. Ben Davies, who sang Cowen's "Dream of Endymion."

TSCHAÏKOWSKY'S THIRD SYMPHONY.

Distinction was given to the concert on the 4th ult. by what was probably the first performance in England of Tschaïkowsky's Third Symphony in D (Op. 29). This was composed in 1875 and is more Western in character than those subsequently written. It possesses five movements and has acquired the title of "Polish," the only justification for which, however, would appear to be that Tschaïkowsky did not object to the name when it was mentioned to him. The work is opened by an Introduction in D minor, consisting of seventy-eight bars based upon a pedal point and in Tempo di marcia funèbre. This is succeeded by an Allegro brillante in D major, the principal subject of which is assertive and martial in character. The first two bars of the second subject are identical with the opening phrase of "It is enough," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The orchestration of the movement shows the influence of the West, but it also contains much that is distinctive of its composer, and possesses towards the close a fiery exuberance suggestive of the false glitter and glory of war. The following movement, Alla tedesca, provides a strong contrast to the foregoing. It is an old-fashioned German slow waltz, and the music charms by its languid grace, which is enhanced by deft employment of the wood-wind. To this succeeds an Andante elegiaco, romantic and tender in expression and overflowing with tunefulness. The fourth number is a Scherzo. The strings are muted throughout and are chiefly employed in arpeggi, which, so to speak, provide the background to the themes given out and "talked about" by the horn and wood-wind. The last movement, in Tempo di polacca, is very vigorous, and in the course of the development the principal subject is submitted to fugato treatment. Much care had manifestly been bestowed in the preparation of the work, and the interpretation reflected great credit on Mr. Manns and his forces. Dr. Joachim was subsequently heard in Beethoven's Violin Concerto and Miss Beach Yaw sang.

A magnificent performance of Brahms's Fourth Symphony in E minor (Op. 98) and the début in England of a Mr. Schelling, a young American pianist, in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, were the chief features of the concert on the 11th ult. Mr. Schelling gave a highly intellectual and finished reading of his share in the concerto, and proved himself a masterly executant with a legitimate style. A new Concertino for violoncello and orchestra, by the late Jean Renard, the solo part of which was ably played by his brother, M. Jacques Renard, proved commonplace and uninteresting. Signorina Giulia Ravogli was the vocalist.

"CREATION" CENTENARY.

The concert on the 18th ult. was made memorable by its being the centenary performance of Joseph Haydn's oratorio the "Creation," first performed in public on Tuesday, March 19, 1799. Many interesting particulars were given on page 161 of last month's issue of The Musical Times concerning the history of this work, and consequently it is only necessary to chronicle that the interpretation of the widely esteemed composition, under the direction of Mr. Manns, may be placed amongst the best of the century. The choruses were rendered by the Crystal Palace choir with unfailing precision, intelligence, and appropriate expression, and, of course, full justice was done to the orchestral portion. The soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Santley. Mr. Santley's dramatic power was strikingly shown in his delivery of the recitative, in which "The flexible tiger appears," not a promising number for the vocalist, but it was invested with a dignity and impressiveness that aroused the large audience to enthusiasm. The freshness, beauty, and expressiveness of the music formed a striking object lesson of the longevity of works of art, the outcome of noble aspiration and conscientious endeavour combined with skilled craftsmanship.

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND.

Abundant evidence of the perfect understanding between Cavaliere L. Zavertal and his efficient band was afforded at Queen's Hall on the 17th ult. With so many good performances of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, it was somewhat daring to include this familiar masterpiece in the programme, but the result was eminently satisfactory. There was also a remarkably good performance of Liszt's first Hungarian Rhapsody. The Overture to Stanford's "Shamus O'Brien" opened the programme, which also included Massenet's Overture to "Phèdre" and "Scènes Napolitaines," and a "Serenade Venetienne" by Burgmein.

MR. RICHARD MANDL'S QUINTET IN G.

The dictionaries are silent concerning Herr Richard Mandl, and probably very few of those who attended the Elderhorst chamber concert on the 1st ult., at the Steinway Hall, had heard any of his music, although he has written a considerable quantity, including an opera, produced at Prague. He was born at Brossritz, Moravia, and received his musical education at the Vienna Conservatoire, but for many years past has resided in Paris. The Pianoforte Quintet in G heard on the 1st ult. is a very pleasing work in three movements. The first, Allegretto con grazia, is built upon extremely melodious subjects, which are developed with great fluency and an expression of graceful pleading, which imparts to the music feminine charm. The Adagio (quasi-fantasia) in B minor contains several passages of poetic significance, and the Finale, Allegro con fuoco, starts in a vigorous manner, which is well sustained throughout. The Quintet was excellently interpreted by Messrs. Fœster, Elderhorst, Kornfeld, Hobday, and Whitehouse. Subsequently the composer, assisted by Messrs. Elderhorst and Whitehouse, played five "Intermezzi" for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. These proved to be agreeable, short, and unpretentious pieces, the first three in waltz rhythm, and the fourth and fifth respectively a mazurka and minuet.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ORCHESTRA AT OXFORD.

OXFORD was favoured with a musical treat of a very high order on the 3rd ult., when the pupils of the Royal College of Music gave an orchestral concert in the Town Hall. This concert proved to be one of the best ever given at that ancient seat of learning. A guarantee fund of £50 was raised in the University; but as the expenses of the concert were about £135 and the sale of tickets a little over £25, the pecuniary result was not so satisfactory as might have been wished. But money is not everything in an artistic enterprise, such as this proved to be. The orchestra numbered eighty performers, all of whom, with the exception of eight, were past or present pupils of the College. A special train conveyed the young people to and from Oxford.

The concert opened with an excellent performance of Beethoven's ever-welcome "Coriolan" Overture. To this succeeded the "Africa" Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra, by Saint-Saëns, in which the rendering of the solo portion by Miss Maud Gay was very good, in spite of the fact that the orchestra was somewhat too obtrusive. Mr. Ivor Foster, the possessor of a first-rate voice and excellent "elastic" method, distinguished himself in Handel's fine air from "Ottone," "Del minacciar." The pièce de resistance was Schumann's Fourth Symphony in D minor, which was performed in first-rate style. Miss Muriel Foster gave a very dramatic interpretation of Purcell's "Mad Bess" scene, notwithstanding that the gifted young singer was recovering from indisposition. Professor Stanford's orchestration of the scene was exceedingly interesting. Max Bruch's Romance for violin and orchestra in A minor was capitally played by Miss Kitty Woolley, a very young performer, who reflected the greatest credit upon the College that claims her as its pupil. Miss Delia Mason, who possesses a phenomenal soprano voice, achieved an undoubted success in the celebrated air "Gli angui d'inferno," from Mozart's "Flauto Magico," sung in the original key. As the compass of this air extends to F in alt, Miss Mason had every opportunity for the display of her exceptionally high flute-like notes—moreover, the pitch was that which is known as "concert pitch." Smetana's brilliant Overture "Die verkaufte Braut" brought the concert to a worthy conclusion. It was splendidly played. The rapid passages in the strings were so delicately rendered, and with such perfect unanimity, that a sightless person might almost have imagined that they were being played by an experienced quartet instead of by an orchestra of students.

The orchestral playing was throughout of a very high standard of excellence, and reflected great credit not only upon Professor Stanford, who skilfully conducted, but upon the players themselves. The enthusiasm which characterised the entire performance was a marked and delightful feature of a task which was evidently a labour of love.

The audience included Mr. Charles Morley, M.P., the Honorary Secretary of the College; the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton, C.B.; Sir John Stainer, Mr. Lionel Benson, Mr. Frank Pownall, Registrar of the College; Mr. Paul Mendelssohn Benecke, Fellow of Magdalen College (Mendelssohn's grandson); and Sir Hubert Parry, the indefatigable Director of the College, who was the guest of the Professor of Music, Sir John Stainer.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

BACH'S VIOLIN SONATA IN E MINOR.

THE excellent concerts under Mr. Arthur Chappell's experienced direction continue their high artistic career. During the past month many masterpieces of chamber music have been presented.

On the 6th ult. Dr. Joachim played, for the first time at these concerts, Bach's Sonata in E minor, using the edition with pianoforte accompaniment prepared by Ferdinand David from the composer's autograph in the private library of the King of Saxony. The work comprises four movements, of which the first is a moto continuo and the second one of those long-drawn-out melodies which show Bach's consummate mastery of development.

The "Joachim Quartet" made its first appearance this season in a familiar programme on the 18th ult. Since Herr Kruse now resides in England the party is not exactly what it is commonly supposed to be—i.e., a band of executants in the constant habit of playing together. The pianists have been Herr Dohnányi, Mdlle. Ilona Eibenschütz, Herr Schönberger, and Mr. Leonard Borwick; and the vocalists, Mr. Ben Davies, Misses Hilda and Muriel Foster, Florence Shee, St. André, and Isabel MacDougall, and Madame Lilian Sanderson.

DR. H. WALFORD DAVIES'S NEW TRIO.

THE organist of the Temple Church is one of the few native composers who devote their creative gifts largely to the production of chamber music. We look forward to his works with eagerness, since his previous achievements warrant the expectation that they will prove full of interest and beauty. The Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, produced at the second of the Walenn series of chamber concerts at St. James's Hall, on February 21, is one of Dr. Davies's ripest works, in which his sound musicianship goes hand in hand with an unaffected and wholesome directness of expression that is quite refreshing. He dares to be simple, lucid, and concise and his melodious strains have the true ring about them. Simple as they are they come from the heart and go to the heart; of nervous excitement there is nought, nor of ranting loquaciousness. It is an eminently sane work, which is more likely to speak lovingly to a few intimate friends in the chamber, for which it was written, than to the crowd in a large concert-room. There is a tender melancholy about the graceful and expressive themes of the first movement which is touching in its naturalness. The bright, vivacious Scherzo is an exceptionally tuneful and effective piece, the trio being almost worthy of Schubert in its spontaneity. The Andante pleases less on a first hearing, for its long-drawn principal subject does not easily reveal its secrets, and its seriousness is such as to suggest some brooding grief. Vigorous life and brave endeavour seem to be depicted in the Finale, with its bold and original opening theme. The movement is full of energy and strength, and rounded off a fine work in the happiest manner. The performance, by the composer and Messrs. Gerald and Herbert Walenn, was a little timid, and did not altogether do justice to the music; nevertheless the composer scored a gratifying success. Professor Stanford's song cycle from Tennyson's "The Princess," for quartet of solo voices with pianoforte accompaniment, first produced at one of the People's concerts last year, was sung by Miss Maggie Purvis, Madame Marie Hooton, Messrs. Edward Branscombe and Arthur Walenn; and Mr. Gerald Walenn gave a brilliant performance of the very original "Rhapsody" from Sir A. C. Mackenzie's "Pibroch."

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC FOR WIND INSTRUMENTS.

FIVE works, new to London, and by little known composers, were produced at the first of Mr. Albert Fransella's chamber concerts, which took place on the 13th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. They were as follows: Quintet in D minor (Op. 3) for pianoforte, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, by Mr. David Stephen, born in Dundee in 1869. The work gained the prize offered in 1896 by the Glasgow Society of Musicians. "Nocturne" and "Gigue" for flute quartet, by Mr. A. Cœdès-Mongin, born in Paris in 1871, and now chief organist at the Church of St. Len, Paris. Pastorale Variée (Dans le style ancien) for flute, oboe, clarinet, trumpet, horn, and two bassoons, by M. Gabriel Pierné, born in Metz in 1863. This is an air and six variations in which every instrument is sympathetically written for, the result being a fascinating work and a gem of its kind. Romance for cor Anglais solo, by Mr. Joseph Speaight, born in London in 1868, now a professor at the Guildhall School of Music. A poetically conceived piece, romantic and tender in expression. All these compositions were beautifully interpreted, Mr. Fransella's party consisting of masters of their several instruments, and manifest care having been bestowed at rehearsal.

Two songs, also new to the Metropolis, deserve mention. They were settings of Björnsen's "Abendstimmung" and "Klein Venevil" by Fritz Delius, who, we believe, hails from Yorkshire, and who manifestly possesses more than average ability. The vocalist was Madame Minna Fischer.

SIR HUBERT PARRY'S INCIDENTAL MUSIC TO "A REPENTANCE."

Incidental music to plays may be said to have developed into a distinct branch of musical art, and Mrs. Craigie's one-act drama, "A Repentance," produced on February 28 at the St. James's Theatre, has brought forth a very fine example of such music by Sir Hubert Parry. The Overture (in D) will probably soon find its way into concert-rooms, for it is a striking and imaginative composition. Its form has apparently been dictated by the sequence of events in the play, of which indeed it would seem to be a kind of musical epitome. It is opened with a distinctive theme, given out by the horns and bassoon in unison unaccompanied, this subject being afterwards associated with the cause of the Carlists. The two chief personages each have their Leitmotif, that of the heroine possessing great tenderness and yearning, and that of her renegade husband having, in its full development towards the close of the Overture, a noble dignity, perfectly reflecting his resolution to die for the cause his wife has espoused. These themes are worked with consummate skill, and a happy touch is the blending of the hero and heroine's themes in the concluding bars. The music played during the action of the drama may be said to be felt rather than heard, so unobtrusive is it, and so perfectly at one is it with the situation it accompanies. Higher praise than this can scarcely be given. It was conducted on the first night by the composer, but since then full justice has been done to it under the direction of Mr. W. A. Robins.

MR. CORDER'S TRAGIC OVERTURE IN C MINOR AND M. SAURET'S "RHAPSODIE SUEDOISE."

Those musically inclined who witnessed Messrs. Louis N. Parker and Murray Carson's four-act play "The Termagant," produced on September 1 last, at Her Majesty's Theatre, will doubtless remember the charm of the incidental music written by Mr. Frederick Corder and the subsequent welcome announcement that the composer was arranging a portion of it for concert use. The promise thus made was fulfilled on the 8th ult., when Mr. Corder conducted, at the forty-second concert of the Westminster Orchestral Society, the first performance of a Tragic Overture in C minor chiefly derived from the Prelude to the fourth act of the play. The burden of the new Overture is the funeral march which so impressively accompanied the entrance of the dead hero, but the impulsive, passionate nature of the heroine, and the expression of her love and grief, with other associative themes, are deftly woven into the Overture, which, apart from its origin, is "music in which the imaginative soul might discern hints of tears and folly, love and madness." If it were not by an Englishman one might hope to hear it at the Queen's Hall. Perhaps the Philharmonic Society may get knowledge of it and permit Sir Alexander Mackenzie to include it in this season's programmes.

Another novelty at this concert was M. Emile Sauret's "Rhapsodie Suedoise" for violin and orchestra (Op. 59). This is based upon Swedish folk-tunes, and these, together with some brilliant writing for the solo instrument, impart interest to the work. The solo part was well played by Mr. F. Frederiksen. Owing to the indisposition of Mr. Stewart Macpherson, the entire concert was conducted by Mr. Frederick Corder.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Herr Dohnányi gave his second pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall, on February 27, when he may be said to have been heard at his best. His rendering of Bach's "Italian" Concerto was delightfully crisp and warm in sentiment. Schubert's Sonata in A minor (Op. 42), which followed, was magnificently interpreted. A very fine rendering was also given of Brahms's Variations and Fugue (Op. 24) and some of his smaller pieces, and three examples of Liszt completed the programme.

Miss Eibenschütz gave her second recital, at St. James's Hall, on February 28, when her programme included Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 111), the second part of which was beautifully played, as were also pieces by Bach, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Brahms.

Mr. Franz Lieblich may be credited with artistic intention when he arranged to give a recital chiefly of Chopin's music, on the 1st ult., at St. James's Hall, In Memoriam of the composer's birthday, "March 1, 1809"; but, unfortunately, recent research has proved that the auspicious event occurred on February 22, 1810. Mr. Lieblich was, however, heard to greater advantage in some pieces by Liszt than in the Chopin selection.

Mr. Arthur De Greef, the Belgian pianist, re-appeared on the 2nd ult., at St. James's Hall, and played a well varied but conventional selection with taste and skill. He was most happy in pieces by Chopin and Grieg, which were rendered with poetic fancy.

MERTHYR AND DOWLAIS CHOIR.

This well-known body of Welsh choralists, to the number of about 250, together with their conductor, Mr. Dan Davies, gave a concert at Queen's Hall, on the 6th ult., in aid of the Castle Street Welsh Baptist Church. They fully sustained their reputation by finished performances of such widely differing compositions as Handel's "Wretched Lovers," the "Dies Iræ" from Cherubini's Requiem, Barnby's "Sweet and low," Leslie's "How sweet the moonlight," and some Welsh pieces. These performances were interspersed with solos by Miss Gertrude Hughes, Miss Thorney, Miss Eleanor Jones, Miss Llewela Davies (pianoforte), Mr. Emlyn Davies, and Mr. Griffiths (flute). Mr. Ben Davies, though altogether out of voice, loyally endeavoured to fulfil his promise to appear for the choir, but he had only sung a few bars of "Deeper and deeper still" when he was compelled to stop. Addressing the audience he declared his regret and asked Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, who was in the stalls, to take his place on the platform. Amid cheers the request was complied with, Mr. Humphreys singing with much fervour the Welsh air, "Land of the harp."

PEROSI'S "THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST" IN PARIS.

Don Lorenzo Perosi's oratorio "The Resurrection of Christ" was produced, for the first time in Paris, at the Cirque d'Eté, on the 1st ult., under the direction of the young composer, whose speedily attained and almost phenomenal success in his native Italy had attracted one of the largest and most fashionable audiences ever assembled in that popular concert hall. The performance, in which the celebrated choir of the Schola Cantorum and the orchestra of the Lamoureux concerts took part, was an excellent one; the demands made by the work upon the executive powers of these experienced musical bodies being, moreover, by no means exorbitant. The solo parts also were in efficient hands, the more important of them—those representing the Virgin Mary, Mary Magdalene, and the narrating Evangelist—being interpreted respectively by Mesdames Jenny Passama and Eléonore Blanc and Signor Reschiglian—the latter a tenor brought over from Italy by the composer, and who acquitted himself with much ability in his somewhat arduous task. The oratorio is divided into two parts, each being preceded by a prelude, while the words are taken partly from the Gospel of St. John and partly from that of St. Matthew, the first part dealing with the death of the Saviour and the second with the Resurrection. As regards the impression produced by the performance upon the audience, there can be no doubt that it was, on the whole, a very favourable one; the second part more especially, with its impressive choral numbers, the highly dramatic treatment of some of its episodes, and the general note of triumph pervading it, being accorded a very hearty, albeit not altogether enthusiastic, reception. The composer, whose unconventional and somewhat extatic manner of conducting was the subject of much interest, received quite an ovation at the conclusion of the performance of his work.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The authorities of the Royal College do not encourage frequent performances of students' compositions, but when they do distinguish a pupil by including one of his efforts in their programmes it is generally worth listening to. We make a mental note of the work and its composer's name, just to wait and see whether at some future time other products from the same pen will prove the child to have indeed been father to the man, or, lest the young composer should object to be called a "child," whether the pupil was father to the "master" (or the Mus. Doc.!) The Quintet for pianoforte, strings, and wind by Thomas Dunhill (scholar), produced at the College concert of the 10th ult., is one of those promising works which are heard with pleasure and may be prophetic of much good work in the future. It is in three movements only. The opening Allegro is a set of variations on a simple but tuneful theme; the variations are clever without being abnormally ingenious, and they increase in interest and charm as they progress, which is a point in their favour. A passionate Allegretto, built on a melodious subject and rising to a strenuous and exciting climax, is followed by a very spirited, almost jovial prestissimo, into the Coda of which the opening theme of the work is introduced with excellent effect. There is much good writing in these last two movements and an easy continuity about the composer's flow of ideas. The combination of instruments—pianoforte, clarinet, horn, violin, and violoncello—is unusual, if not absolutely new, and it proved very effective in the capital performance secured by the composer, Arthur Leonard, Herbert Thornton, William Read, and Robert Grimson. Saint-Saëns's more peculiar than beautiful Pianoforte and Violoncello Sonata in C minor (Op. 32) was ably and successfully interpreted by Edgar Bainton and Edward Mason; William Reed created quite a storm of applause with a remarkably finished, not to say brilliant performance of Bach's monumental Chaconne, and Schubert's lovely A minor string Quartet was well played by Kitty Woolley, Philip Lewis, Edward Behr, and Edward Mason. Esther Valentine and Ivor Foster sang.

Borodine's First Symphony (in E flat) was produced at the orchestral concert on the 23rd ult. The audience received the strange and utterly uninspired work very coldly and we heartily endorse their verdict. A duller piece of musical make-believe we have rarely heard. A Valse-Fantasia for flute and orchestra, by Thomas Dunhill (scholar), and a set of Variations on a Hungarian theme, by William Hurlstone (ex-scholar), were two further novelties. The former is a tuneful piece, full of swing and gaiety, which would appeal to almost any audience, especially as the solo part is brilliant and showy. It was played with great fluency by Eli Hudson. Mr. Hurlstone's work aims higher. His variations display both ingenuity and fancy, and in some of them the young composer reaches a degree of beauty and dignity which is a good augury for his future. There is not one without its point of interest, while others compel admiration on account of their effectiveness, emotional warmth, and even originality. The clever composer had an enthusiastic reception. Edgar Bainton played Schumann's Concertstück for the pianoforte (Op. 92); Esme Atharden sang "Una voce," from Rossini's "Barber," with a good deal of vocal agility; and Rosina Beynon was heard in the strange mixture of melodrame and operatic air, beginning "Dark is the night," from Marschner's "Hans Heiling," in which the German composer seems to have forestalled Gounod's bouche fermée effect in his favourite "Ave Verum."

The final examination for nine Free Open Scholarships at the Royal College of Music took place on February 23, 24, and 25. The total number of candidates throughout the United Kingdom applying to attend the preliminary examination was 340. Of these, 299 were examined by the honorary local examiners at 83 centres, and reduced to 115, and 103 were ultimately brought up for final examination at the College in London on the above dates.

The following are the names of the successful candidates:—Composition—Frank Bridge (Brighton), Aubrey C. Read (London); Organ—William H. Harris (Fulham); Pianoforte—George H. Gage (Darlington); Singing—Samuel F. Epstein (London); Cicely R. Gleeson-White (Hammersmith); Violin—Evelyn Hunter (Chiswick); Violoncello—Harold Smith (Kendal); Horn—George Manners (Pimlico).

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Gounod's opera, known in England as "The Mock Doctor," was an excellent choice wherewith to exercise the talents and abilities of the pupils at the Guildhall School of Music. Its performance, on February 24, the first in the new theatre, reflected much credit on all concerned. Mr. W. H. Cummings conducted the suggestive Overture, but afterwards resigned the baton to Mr. Ernest Ford, the operatic director of the school, who piloted his inexperienced forces with notable care to a successful issue. The performance gave abundant evidence of good training, earnestness of purpose, and conscientious endeavour on the part of the pupils; these commendable features being specially shown in the rendering of the concerted numbers, which testified to long and careful rehearsal. The chief female parts were sustained by Leonora Ellerton (Martine), Ida Norbury (Lucinda), and J. Lane Featherstone (Jacqueline); and the male characters were personated by Wyatt Keith (Géronte), Abel Hustler (the Mock Doctor), George Dawson (Lucas), H. J. Corner (Valère), and Edwin Preston (a Villager). E. Gwynne Kimpton was the principal violin of the orchestra, which was largely composed of students.

VIOLINS, OLD AND NEW.

At the monthly meeting of the Musical Association, held on the 14th ult., at the Royal College of Organists, Mr. Towry Piper read an interesting paper on "Violins and violin manufacture, since the death of Stradivari to the present time." The lecturer pointed out as a proof of the marvellous skill of Antonio Stradivari that, save for the length of neck and base, the violin remained the same to-day as developed by this master of his craft in 1737; and said it should not be forgotten that the instrument was never designed to produce a volume of tone sufficient to fill large concert-rooms. The poor results of English makers in the eighteenth century were attributed to their having adopted inferior models. The French might be accredited with having kept alive to a certain extent the traditions of the old Italian makers, and were the real upholders of the Stradivarian ideals in the present century. Some of Vuillaume's violins were described as fine instruments, but the majority of them were of inferior quality.

Some very fine specimens of violins by the makers referred to were exhibited by Mr. Piper, of which several, together with modern copies, were kindly lent by Mr. Hart.

At the conclusion of the paper Sir John Stainer, who occupied the chair, Mr. Cobbett, Dr. Warwick Jordan, Mr. Southgate, and others joined in the discussion.

REVIEWS.

L'Arte Musicale in Italia. Luigi Torchi. (XIV. Secolo al XVIII.) Volume Primo. Composizioni sacre e profane a più voci. Secoli XIV., XV., e XVI.

[Milan: Ricordi and Co.]

When, over a hundred years ago, Dr. Burney set to work on the preparation of his "History of Music," by way of preliminary he journeyed through the length of Germany, France, and Italy in search of materials. The results of his labours in foreign libraries are to be seen in the copies he made which are preserved in the British Museum, and it is mainly owing to his industry in thus going to the fountain-head for information that, in spite of its obvious defects, his work may still be read with interest and profit. Signs are, however, by no means wanting that a new history of music, based on a more complete knowledge than Burney possessed, is seriously needed. The present generation has seen a revolution in historical methods, and the judgments of last century will have to be revised by the light of a more thorough knowledge of the documents of the past. For such a task the present is essentially an era of preparation. Germany has shown the way in the excellent work done by men like Chrysander and Eitner and the little group that constitutes the "Gesellschaft für Musik-Forschung"; the Austrian government is doing something by bringing out a superb series of volumes of the works of forgotten composers; the Netherlands has its Historical Musical Society, which is publishing a complete edition of the works of Sweelinck; England has revived the fame of its early instrumental music by the publication of the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and in Mr. Arkwright and Mr. Davey has found two of those patient explorers whose pioneer work is so useful; Spain has its Pedrell, who steadily goes on printing the early music of the Peninsula; and in France M. Expert has made a good beginning by publishing a series of vocal compositions of the Renaissance period. In Italy, the classic home of music, very little has yet been done, and so far the only Italian town to show much interest in its musical past is Bologna, where the splendid library of the Liceo Musicale has been catalogued with an almost excessive degree of minuteness. The three volumes of which this monumental work consists appeared some years ago, and now the present Librarian, Signor Luigi Torchi, comes forward with a series of documents illustrating the growth of Italian music, the first volume of which has been recently published by Messrs. Ricordi at the very low price of ten francs. In his preface Signor Torchi explains that his intention is to bring out a series of volumes dealing successively with the sacred and secular vocal music, the instrumental music, and the lyrical and dramatic compositions of Italy between the fourteenth and the eighteenth centuries. The first instalment of this work consists of seventy-six numbers—extracts from masses, motets, madrigals, "frottole," "villanelle," etc., by some twenty-four composers, chiefly of the sixteenth century. In his selection of examples, made principally from the Bologna Liceo Musicale, but also from libraries at Rome, Milan, Florence, Paris, and Munich, Signor Torchi claims to have been guided by two considerations—viz., the intrinsic merits of the compositions or their value as illustrating the evolution of musical form. Unfortunately, the editor has left it to his readers to discover which principle is to be applied in each individual case. Beginning with a certain Jacobo da Bologna, whose date is assigned to the fourteenth century, a wide leap is made to the composers whose works were printed by Petrucci at the beginning of the sixteenth century. The rest of the book is arranged roughly in chronological order, but anyone who has studied early music will recognise that such a classification is practically of no historical use. The only scientific plan would have been to have grouped secular and sacred compositions into schools, instead of mixing them up in haphazard fashion. But Signor Torchi's design did not allow of the admission of foreigners into his collection, so the great influence of the Netherlanders remains unrepresented, and the musical history of Italy during the fifteenth century is practically unillustrated. It does not take much study of "L'Arte Musicale in Italia" to establish the conviction that the book, in spite of the admirable intentions expressed in the preface, is one which could have been prepared by any enthusiast who is in the habit of putting old part-books into score on the chance of something good turning up. The occupation has a certain amount of fascination, but the prizes are few and far between, and for every pearl rescued from the deep sea of Italian sixteenth century music, only too many empty oyster shells are brought to light. The explorer among these forgotten composers works more or less in the dark, though sometimes certain names serve as guides to good results. But Signor Torchi, neglecting such aids, seems to have been mostly attracted by such minor composers as Jan Gero, Baldassare Donato, Vincenzo Ruffo, Pietro Vinci, and Claudio Merulo, and though he has not overlooked more important men like Festa, Animuccia, Porta, Zoilo, and Striggio, the omission of the two Gabrielis, Giovanelli, Nanino, Marenzio, Stabile, Palestrina, Gastoldi, Croce, Vecchi, and many others from a work professing to illustrate the great period of Italian polyphony certainly needs explanation. In the great mass of the works printed in this volume there is a singular sameness of phrases and treatment. The minor composers from whose works Signor Torchi has drawn so largely had but little originality and few individual ideas; for the most part, they were contented to go on making use of the same few stock formulas, just as the poets who supplied them with words rang the changes on a very limited supply of poetical imagery. In a few cases, of course, there was a real advance made, and some of the motets in this volume, especially those by Festa, Animuccia, and Porta, are fine and solid pieces of choral writing. But, on the whole, the selection has been made with too liberal a hand and too little discretion, and the mediocrity of many of the examples is such that it is hardly worth the trouble of reading them in the obsolete clefs in which they are printed. In only one instance does the editor make any concession to modern ignorance, and then he certainly does it thoroughly. On p. 183 he prints a transposed version of Baldassare Donato's familiar villanella, "Chi la gagliarda," so well known to English madrigal societies, in G and F clefs, arranged for solo voices and chorus, with the addition of various grace marks not to be found in the original! This proceeding hardly bears out the statement of the preface to the effect that the editor "has scrupulously left in their original shape both form and substance of the compositions" he prints. And why is not the date (1507) or printer's name given of Petrucci's Seventh Book of Frottole, from which two compositions are printed? These are but small points, but in a work with such claims to historic utility they should not occur.

Novello's Part-Song Book. Nos. 783, 800-813.

Nothing more stimulating to part-singing can be imagined than the steady stream of music which is issued for this purpose in Novello's Part-Song Book. No. 783, entitled "The Daisy," by Hamilton Clarke, sings in dainty fashion of the relative charms of "daisies pied, and violets blue," and other floral gems, and the music is as pretty as the flowers in praise of which it flows. "The Countryman," No. 800, the words anonymous, but ascribed to the year 1588, and the music by Charles Wood, is a four-part song, wherein the mode of life of the peasant is compared favourably with that of the king. Those who possess the good things of this world generally find enjoyment in singing about the advantages of being without them, and to such Mr. Wood's composition may be commended, for the music is very singable and its directness of expression admirably reflects the spirit of the text. The words of No. 801, "Love is enough," are by William Morris, and they have been set with great felicity and skill by Gustav von Holst. The part-writing is flowing and interesting for each voice, the three penalties of loving, "pain," "fear," and "change," are admirably accentuated, and the contentment of the "Love that led home" is beautifully set and impressively concludes the part-song. The music of Nos. 802 to 809 is by Josef Rheinberger (Op. 186), and the English text has been furnished by the Rev. J. Troutbeck. The first of these, entitled "All Souls' Day," is fairly representative of this composer's vocal style. The music is melodious, graceful, richly harmonised, and closely knit. The inner parts, for the most part, proceed by small intervals, and the conclusion is very effective. No. 803, "Sunday Morning," is written much in the same manner; but the music is brighter in spirit, as befits the text. No. 804, "St. Mary's Chapel," possesses lofty dignity and a suavity in accord with the legend of the appearance of the Virgin Mary at the lonely chapel. Sung by a well-trained choir, this part-song would be very impressive. A very different note is struck in the next number (805), "Messengers of Spring," the music of which is appropriately bright and gay, albeit the composer makes his cuckoos sing a minor third, which they do not usually do until later in the season, when presumably they have acquired a greater knowledge of life. No. 806 is a "Rhapsody," and a pleasing one, which is more than can be said of many rhapsodical effusions. The precise meaning of the text is not always clear, which, however, is a proof of the justice of the title, and where the words fail to satisfy the music steps in with gentle and persuasive harmonies. No. 807 is entitled "Rhineland." The poet begins by declaring "My heart's on the Rhine," and the composer's would seem to be there also, judging by the manner in which he has wedded the words to his music. There are excellent opportunities for effective choral singing in this part-song. "The peace of God," No. 808, is a smoothly written Adagio of expressive nature. No. 809, "The last prayer," is similar in design and character. An unpretentious but suggestive part-song will be found in No. 810, entitled "The flower that smiles to-day," the words by Shelley, the music by H. Elliot Button. Special interest is attached to No. 811, "Let Erin remember the days of old," by T. Moore and Leopold Dix, as it gained the prize offered by the Feis Ceoil of last year for the best original part-song. The strains to which the patriotic words have been allied are vigorous and also characteristic of the music of the "distressful country," and there is a decidedly dramatic, if somewhat melodramatic, ring in the concluding bars. "To Sylvia," No. 812, provided by Francis Thompson and Gustav von Holst, is a cleverly written glee, such as practised singers will enjoy exercising their skill upon. "The merry bells of Yule," No. 813, is a setting of somewhat ambitious nature, by E. W. Naylor, of cantos 29 and 30 of Tennyson's "In Memoriam." The opening is impressive, and at the words "Peace and good-will" each of the four voice parts are divided, and some rich and fine effects are subsequently secured in eight-part harmony. The line "Rise, happy morn, rise, holy morn," is set in a triumphant and grandiose manner that forms a most effective conclusion.

Music and Manners, from Pergolese to Beethoven. Essays by Henry Edward Krehbiel.
[Archibald Constable and Co.]

Mr. Krehbiel is one of those writers on music who is always readable and therefore he is interesting. This, his latest book (dedicated to Sir George Grove), has five main divisions—viz., (1) A poet's music; (2) Haydn in London; (3) A Mozart centenary; (4) Beethoven and his biographer; (5) Reflections at Weimar. By the way, the title on the cover of the book is "Music and Manners in the Classical Period," and thus it differs from that on the title-page. The opening chapters pleasantly treat of the manuscript music collected by Thomas Gray, the poet and author of the "Elegy written in a country churchyard." This collection is contained in nine volumes that are now the property of Mr. Krehbiel. It is interesting to find that thirteen of the Italian composers whose music Gray caused to be copied are not to be found in Grove's "Dictionary." The extracts from Haydn's diaries during his visits to London (1791 and 1794) are tolerably well known, though they are none the less interesting on that account. The letters from the old Papa's lady-love, Mrs. Schroeter, printed in full in this volume, speak more for her heart than her head. Mr. Krehbiel makes a slight mistake in saying that Mozart was seven years old when he visited London. The master-child had really reached the age of eight when he arrived in the Metropolis in 1764 and bought that package of "The Genuine Court Plaister, London." A very interesting chapter, by reason of its fresh information gathered by the author from documentary evidence in New York, is that relating to Lorenzo Da Ponte, the Italian poet, who was Mozart's friend and collaborator with him in three operas—"Le Nozze di Figaro," "Don Giovanni," and "Così fan Tutte." Da Ponte, who had experienced a varied and chequered career, died in New York, August 17, 1838.

The chapters on the late Alexander Wheelock Thayer are full of interest and rich in Beethoveniana. Mr. Krehbiel has had access to Thayer's note-books, from whence he has extracted many plums of a very tasteful flavour. Thayer was a ceaseless and enthusiastic collector of facts, sayings, and reminiscences of Beethoven from original sources, and the many extracts here given from his (Thayer's) diaries are of genuine and often of highly amusing interest. For instance, in 1860, Frau Salis informed Thayer that her father had often told her that Beethoven was "visibly in love with the beautiful songstress (Wilmann), and offered her his hand; but she refused him, he (unlike his C minor Symphony) being 'ugly and half crazy'"! Herr Mähler, who knew Beethoven, told Thayer (also in 1860) that "at the grand rehearsal of 'Fidelio' the third fagott (bassoon) was absent, that Beethoven fussed and fidgeted about it, but that Lobkowitz treated the matter lightly—two fagotts were there, and a third could make little difference, &c. Whereat Beethoven was enraged, and after the rehearsal, on his way to his lodgings in the city, as he passed over Lobkowitz-Platz, he could not resist going to the great door and calling out, 'Lobkowitzcher Esel!' (Lobkowitzian ass)."

We give a cordial welcome to this companionable and pleasantly written book by the distinguished musical critic of the New York Tribune, which we feel sure will be read on this side of the Atlantic with keen enjoyment and not a little profit.

The Orpheus. (New Series.) Nos. 313, 318-323.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

"Lightlier move the minutes fledged with music," sang the late poet Laureate, and certainly the moments devoted to "The Orpheus" series of part-songs will not linger. Recent additions comprise No. 313, a graceful setting by C. Lee Williams of Sir Philip Sidney's familiar lines "My true love hath my heart"; but to choose this poem for male voices seems to demand a change of the gender of the personal pronoun of "My true love," In No. 318 Mr. Herbert W. Wareing has provided vivacious music in four parts for the Clown's Song from Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night." It requires nimble singing, but effect will repay the effort. Longfellow's arch little poem "Beware" has tempted one more composer to wed it to music, in this instance Mr. John E. West, who, in No. 319, has set it in a piquant and humorous manner. Well sung, only an audience of mummies would be content with hearing it once. The words of Nos. 320, 321, and 322 are respectively Browning's three cavalier songs, "Marching along," "Give a Rouse" and "Boot and Saddle," and they have been allied to most stirring and excellent music by Mr. Granville Bantock. No male-voice choir can be accounted up to date unless these fine and virile part-songs are in its repertory. In strong contrast to the foregoing is No. 323, an arrangement for male voices, by Sir H. S. Oakeley, of Mendelssohn's Volkslied "Partings," a fine example of how much may be accomplished by simple means.

Lili-Tsé. A Japanese tale in one act. By Wolfgang Kirchbach. Music by Franz Curti.
[Breitkopf and Härtel.]

This is a little operetta apparently designed for the use of amateurs, but which makes considerable demands upon the vocal abilities of its exponents and also, for its effective presentation, on scenic arrangements. The author has based his libretto on the supposition that the inhabitants of a certain Japanese village have never seen a mirror, although the period of the play permits the presence of an English tourist and the ubiquitous Baedeker. This being accepted, however, the consequences can be met with resignation, and there is some humour in the heroine abusing the reflection of her own face, thinking it to be the portrait of a hated rival. The work requires six principal characters, comprising a soprano, two mezzo-sopranos, a tenor, a baritone, and a bass, and a chorus which is written for in four, five, and, in the Finale, six parts. It should be added that the orchestral portion has been effectively arranged for the pianoforte by Herr Hugo Röhr, and that, owing to its independent nature, it possesses considerable musical interest.

Novello's Parish Choir Book. Nos. 375 to 380.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

There is no diminution of interest observable in the numbers of this popular series now before us. In No. 375 choirmasters will find a somewhat festive, but by no means difficult setting of the Te Deum, by Boyton Smith. For the most part the music is laid out for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass in chorus, but many passages are written for these voices in unison, affording effective contrast, and the verses beginning "When Thou tookest upon Thee" and "When Thou hadst overcome" may be sung respectively as a bass and soprano solo. The sequence of keys used sustains the musical interest, and a particularly good point is made by a bold transition from the tonality of A to that of F at the words "Thou art the King of Glory," this verse being set to a march-like melody which enforces its meaning. The adoption of a very slow tempo for the last verse, and the diminuendo and termination pianissimo form an impressive ending thoroughly in accord with Christian confidence and reverence. No. 376 gives in convenient form on a card the grace "For these and all Thy mercies," from the "Laudi Spirituali," A.D. 1545. An effective but by no means difficult setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat, by E. Townshend Driffield, provides No. 377. In a considerable portion of this the voices are in unison, which results in the usual impressive contrasts being obtained when four vocal parts are written, a notable instance occurring in the passage beginning "He rememb'ring His mercy," where the beat is changed from common to triple time, and the voices, in four parts, are unaccompanied. With the exception of the Gloria, the Nunc dimittis is written in four-part harmony for the voices, and an effective point of contrapuntal character is made at the words "For mine eyes have seen." The accompaniment is simple and chiefly doubles the voice parts, although here and there it has some independence. In No. 378 will be found a setting of the Te Deum in E flat, by G. F. Huntley, that is worthy of being widely known by well trained church choirs. It contains no passages for solo voices, but the vocal part-writing is interesting and very singable, and the most impressive verses are set with keen appreciation of their solemnity. The jubilant character of the great Eastern hymn, however, forms the key-note of the music, which for the most part is bright and vigorous in conception and treatment. A well known and stately hymn tune by Gounod forms No. 379. It is printed on a card capable of triumphantly resisting for a considerable period the assaults of choir boys, and the melody is applicable to any hymn written in 8.7.8.7.7.7. measure. It is admirably suited for a processional. A re-issue of Dr. C. Warwick Jordan's arrangement of the fifth Gregorian tone for the Te Deum will be found in No. 380. In this setting the plain-song is always in one of the vocal parts, so that, if necessary, any set of voices may sing the plain-song only, leaving the harmonies for the organ.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

On February 20 the Amateur Orchestral Society gave a concert to the members of the Midland Institute, playing in good style Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Smetana's "Lustspiel" Overture, and excerpts from Tschaïkowsky and Wagner. Mr. G. H. Manton gave an able rendering of the solo part in Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor. Mr. G. Halford conducted.

The last choral concert of the Festival Choral Society took place in the Town Hall on February 23. Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" formed the programme. In the first the soloists used Dr. Troutbeck's text, while the chorus sang the older version, which was also adopted in the book of words, causing the audience some perplexity. The principals were Miss Alice Esty, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Charles Knowles, who all did well. Mr. Davies was afterwards seized with sudden hoarseness, and his place in Mendelssohn's work was taken by Mr. S. Roper, a member of the Society, who sang so well as to receive a perfect ovation. Miss Alice Lakin joined Miss Esty in the duet, "I waited for the Lord." The chorus sang with fine effect throughout. Dr. Heap conducted.

Of the cheap Saturday evening concerts in the Town Hall, mention should be made of that given on February 25, by the Choral and Orchestral Association, conducted by Mr. Joseph H. Adams. Barnett's cantata "The Ancient Mariner," was very creditably performed, with Miss Edith Knott, Miss Minnie Richardson, Mr. Trefelyn David, and Mr. William Evans as principals. The choir sang well, and the orchestra, mainly amateur, was good, but too heavy in tone.

The annual visit of the Hallé orchestra took place on February 27, at the last Harrison concert. A fine performance was given of Cowen's "Scandinavian" Symphony and Beethoven's "Namensfeier" Overture. Miss Ada Crossley and Mr. Andrew Black sang Goring Thomas's charming duet "Sous les Etoiles," being heartily applauded and recalled. Mr. Cowen conducted most ably, and Mr. F. T. Watkis was an excellent accompanist.

Mr. Halford's eighth and ninth concerts were given on February 28 and the 14th ult. Beethoven's Symphonies, No. 7 and No. 8, came to a hearing in due rotation. The first of these was magnificently rendered, and the Eighth was only just below it in point of execution. At the first of these concerts Dr. Joachim gave a grand performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and in his unequalled manner played Bach's Chaconne in D minor. At the other concert Miss Marie Olson was the soloist, and was delightful in the G minor Concerto of Saint-Saëns, showing further brilliant execution in the G minor Rhapsody of Brahms and the Variations by Liszt on a theme of Paganini. Mr. Halford always introduces something new, and at these concerts presented the Suite Symphonique "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakoff, Moussorgsky's Fantasia, "Une Nuit sur le mont chauve," and Massenet's Overture "Phèdre." The last-named made a great effect, and all the pieces were exceedingly well played.

On the 2nd ult. a new cantata was produced at the Town Hall. The subject of the work is "The Pilgrim Fathers." The book is written by the Rev. J. M. Gwynne Owen and the music by Thomas Facer. It is altogether on popular lines, and with a choir of 800 voices, to the able organ accompaniment of Mr. C. W. Perkins, the performance was very effective. The soloists were Miss Annie Smart, Miss Nellie Pritchard, Mr. Hamlyn Crimp, and Mr. Ingram Evans. The composer conducted and came in for an ovation at the close of the performance.

Dr. Winn gave his last orchestral concert in the Town Hall on the 9th ult. Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor conducted capital performances of his Ballade in A minor and the "Danse Nègre," from his "African" Suite. The young composer had a most enthusiastic reception and was recalled after each performance. The programme contained three Overtures: Beethoven's "Egmont," Wagner's "Tannhäuser," and Dvorák's "Carnaval," all of which went well, the last-named especially. Miss Clara Butt was the vocalist, and created a great effect in the air "Divinités du Styx," from Gluck's "Alceste." Dr. Winn conducted with ability.

On the 16th ult. the Festival Choral Society's last concert was given. Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony headed the scheme and was beautifully played. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade for orchestra was heard here for the second time, Dr. Heap directing a fine performance. Mdlle. Gabrielle Wietrowitz was heard to great advantage in Beethoven's Violin Concerto, her playing evoking enthusiastic applause. The choir sang in grand style Pinsuti's "The sea hath its pearls," Gaul's "The Silent Land," and Webbe's "When winds breathe soft."

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On February 24 the Æolian Male Choir had a concert in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. This, the most recently formed of the societies for the practice of unaccompanied part-singing in Bristol, shows vigour, and, under Mr. G. A. Sleigh, who is an enthusiastic conductor, the members have attained considerable proficiency. They now gave a budget of old and new glees with considerable spirit, and at intervals there were songs nicely rendered by Mrs. W. G. Harrison and Miss Maude Bryant of the Mayor's Chapel Choir.

The third recital of modern music by Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Otto Milani (violin), and Herbert Walenn violoncello) was given on the 2nd ult., at All Saints' Hall. Arensky's Trio in D minor (Op. 32) and Eduard Schütt's "Walzer" were agreeably rendered. The most exciting feature in the concert was a vigorous performance by Mr. Parsons of Liszt's Sonata in B minor. Miss Minnie Chamberlain was the vocalist and sang with effect songs by Edward German, Sterndale Bennett, and Henschel. Miss Ethel Long accompanied.

For some years Mr. J. H. Fulford has acted as deputy-organist at Bristol Cathedral, and he has been concerned in many musical ventures organised by others, but not until the 6th ult. did he give a concert on his own behalf. He was supported by vocalists and instrumentalists favourably known in the city, Mr. Fulford himself being at the pianoforte. The greatest interest appeared to be taken by the hearers in glees sung by a male-voice choir, many of whom are members of the Bristol Royal Orpheus Society, under the direction of Mr. Fulford, who is librarian of the Society.

A gratifying performance of "Elijah" was given on the 11th ult., at the Victoria Rooms, there being a band and chorus numbering 300 and Mr. G. Herbert Riseley, nephew of the well-known conductor, directing the concert. Mr. Watkin Mills impressed favourably in the music of the Prophet. The other principal vocalists were Miss Mabel Berrey, Miss Jessie King, and Mr. Braxton Smith. Mr. H. Lewis held the post of leader of the band, and Mr. New, of Bath Abbey, was at the organ.

Some members of the local postal and telegraph services demonstrated that they possess excellent vocal qualifications in a concert held on the 14th ult., at Redland Park Hall, in aid of the Rowland Hill Benevolent Fund.

On the 14th ult., at the Church of All Saints, Clifton, Haydn's "Passion" was impressively rendered, the choir being slightly augmented, Mr. G. W. Brierley, tenor of Bristol Cathedral, lending his assistance. Mr. Cedric Bucknall accompanied effectively on the organ, augmented by cornets played by Messrs. Webb and Carey.

The Spring Exhibition of Pictures at the Fine Arts Academy has been rendered additionally attractive by musical afternoons. On Mondays, pianoforte recitals with vocalists have been arranged by Mr. J. L. Roeckel, and on Wednesdays, performances of chamber music, under the management of Mr. W. E. Fowler, draw large audiences.

Undue haste cannot be charged against the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral in respect to filling the post of organist. The following have as candidates played at afternoon services:—Dr. Wilson, of St. Asaph; Dr. Buck, of Wells Cathedral; Mr. Hunt, organist at St. Jude's, South Kensington; and Mr. F. J. Crowe, organist at St. Mary Magdalene, Upton, Torquay.

MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE.

This has been a "Parry" term. Three important works by Sir Hubert have been performed, and at two functions he has appeared to conduct in person. On February 1 his English Symphony, No. 3, in C, was played at a concert given by the Ladies' Orchestral Society. The programme also included Sterndale Bennett's "Naiads" Overture, and, with the exception of the Symphony, was conducted by Mr. Liddle.

Sir Hubert's next appearance was at a Glee and Madrigal concert given by Dr. Mann's choir, on the 9th ult. The title of the concert was somewhat of a misnomer, for it is hardly possible to describe the massive "De Profundis" or such a trifle as Tallis's Forty-part Motet as either a glee or a madrigal. Dr. Mann has made a special study of the last-named work, and its production is an event of such rarity as to call for special notice. In addition, there were no less than five other smaller compositions by musicians directly connected with the University, and Doctors of Music to a man, most of whom conducted their own works. The composers so honoured were Messrs. C. H. Lloyd, Alan Gray, Charles Wood, E. T. Sweeting, and E. W. Naylor. Compositions in four parts were rather at a discount, as the programme included in addition Samuel Wesley's "In Exitu" and Pearsall's "Sir Patrick Spens." Certainly a notable concert.

Lastly, the University Musical Society gave that broad and bright work, "St. Cecilia's Day" (Parry), on the 15th ult. That rising vocalist, Mr. William Higley, sang a part admirably suited to him in splendid style. The programme also included Beethoven's C minor Concerto, with Dr. Sweeting at the pianoforte.

Three of the Wednesday popular concerts have been given. At two of these the Gompertz Quartet appeared, and Mrs. Montagu Fordham and Mr. Francis Harford were the vocalists. At the third, Lady Hallé and Mr. Borwick gave an altogether delightful violin and pianoforte recital. Dr. Joachim paid his annual visit on February 21. The great violinist led quartets by Beethoven and Schubert and played Bach's Concerto in A minor in his inimitable manner. Mr. James McInnes, the vocalist, created an excellent impression in Brahms's "Ernste Gesänge."

Although not strictly coming under the head of Cambridge music, a notable achievement of Dr. H. P. Allen at Ely should be noticed here. Dr. Allen, during his short residence, has so worked up the local society of this sleepy little "city" that, with the aid of contingents from Cambridge and Bury St. Edmunds, they undertook, on the 14th ult., a performance of the St. Matthew "Passion" in the Cathedral. The principal vocalists were Miss Fillunger, Mr. J. Reed, Mr. F. Harford, and Mr. William Higley, and it is difficult to think that their parts could have been better rendered. Mr. Reed in particular distinguished himself by undertaking the whole of the tenor music and singing it with unabated taste and beauty of voice to the end. Considering the magnitude of the task and the difficult conditions, the efforts of the chorus and orchestra (mainly amateurs) were highly creditable, and if, as is to be hoped, the event becomes an annual one, it may be anticipated that great success will attend it in the future. The Cathedral was crowded.

MUSIC IN CORK.

The Cork Harmonic Society was organised five years ago in a small and semi-private form by Miss F. A. Meade. It has now attained a most prominent position in the ranks of Southern societies, and, moreover, proved its vitality and vigour by a splendid performance of Gounod's "Redemption," which took place on the 21st ult. before an immense and most appreciative audience. Local orchestras are seldom satisfactory, and much trepidation was felt as to the possibility of a Cork orchestra mastering difficulties such as are presented in Gounod's oratorio; but in the hands of so experienced a musician and conductor as Dr. Marks, failure was improbable.

Dr. Marks confined his unprofessional players chiefly to strings, and drew upon the resources of the band of the King's Royal Rifles for the wood-wind and brass. The result, on the whole, was eminently satisfactory. The brass was, perhaps, a little too predominating; but we quite realize the difficulties of subduing a section in the orchestra, the players of which are accustomed only to outdoor and military music. High praise must be given to the chorus, who sang throughout with enthusiasm and due attention to expression.

The part of the tenor Narrator was rendered by Mr. Dan Jones, Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, whose sympathetic voice and refined style were eminently suited to the religious character of the music. The other soloists were all from the ranks of the Society's own members, which in itself speaks well for the talent and resources of the Society. The performance altogether was a remarkably fine one, and reflects great credit upon its talented conductor, Dr. Marks. Under his able baton we may look for still greater things in the future of the Cork Harmonic Society.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

The event of the month here has undoubtedly been the first performance of the Dublin Orchestral Society, on the 1st ult. A detailed account of the conditions and circumstances of the foundation of the Society has already appeared in the pages of The Musical Times. The committee, who worked indefatigably in securing the funds of the Society, are to be congratulated upon the artistic triumph which was achieved at the first concert. The programme included Wagner's "Faust" Overture, some numbers of the first "Arlésienne" Suite by Bizet, Gluck's Overture to "Iphigenia," Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture. Mr. Harry Charles, a pupil of the conductor, played the pianoforte part of Mendelssohn's Serenade and Allegro Giojoso. A great future lies before the Dublin Orchestral Society. In one night the reproach of years has been removed from musical Dublin, and the credit of having done so is due to Signor Esposito, who conducted throughout with marked ability.

The performance of "King Saul," on the 15th ult., by the Dublin Musical Society was full of interest, as the composer, Sir Hubert Parry, conducted the work himself, and we hope he was pleased with the reception he and his work received. The performance was only a fairly good one. A matter for very serious criticism was the absence of the harp in the orchestra, the part for that instrument being played on a very metallic cottage pianoforte, placed in front of the platform on the ground floor. This very inartistic arrangement may have been unavoidable, but it was evidence of the worst form of provincialism. The solo singers were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Mrs. Ward Moriarty, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Gordon Cleather, and Mr. Watkin Mills, who specially distinguished himself. For the work itself, if we make exception of its extreme length, we have nothing but the profoundest admiration. It is dignified, dramatic, thoughtful, and in places extremely beautiful. The choruses are colossal, almost as big as some of Bach's in the cantatas and the St. Matthew "Passion."

Dr. Culwick's Orpheus Society gave a concert on the 8th ult., when we heard glees and part-songs well sung. But we must complain of the rubbishy music on which a good choir and conductor were wasted. With such admirable voices Dr. Culwick could do a great deal in purely vocal music, but the selection of such as was performed on the 8th will never do more than satisfy the most frivolous audience.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Lowestoft Musical Union gave a vocal and instrumental concert on the 2nd ult., under the conductorship of Mr. H. D. Flowers. The choir sang several part-songs and the band, led by Mr. A. S. Coote Suggit, played with notable precision a Haydn Symphony, Nicolai's Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and Elgar's Imperial March. Among other violin solos Mr. Suggit played Wieniawski's "Souvenir de Moscow" with success. Miss May Seiber contributed several songs in good style.

On the 2nd ult., under the management of Messrs. Howlett and Son, the Meister Glee Singers visited Norwich, accompanied by Mrs. Helen Trust, Mr. Antonietti, and Mr. Edgar Hulland.

A meeting called by the Mayor was held at Southwold recently, when it was decided to form a Musical Society which should embrace both vocal and instrumental performers and be called the "Southwold Musical Society." A provisional committee was appointed and instructed to select a conductor and make all needful arrangements. The residents of this rising seaside resort are to be congratulated upon the step taken, and we hope their efforts will be crowned with success.

A large and brilliant audience gave Paderewski a warm welcome in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on the 16th ult.

A highly instructive lecture on "Oratorio" was delivered at the Norfolk and Norwich School of Music, on the evening of the 21st ult., by Dr. Edward Bunnett.

Since the popular organ recitals given by Dr. Bunnett in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on Saturday evenings during the winter season were last noticed in these columns, increased interest in them appears to have arisen, for the attendances have shown better results—in fact, on several occasions lately the large hall has been quite full. That they are a help towards fostering a love for good music is evident. Dr. Bunnett generally includes an organ concerto by one of the great masters in the programme, and it is noticeable that such compositions, and also classical works, whether instrumental or vocal, are received with marked appreciation. Naturally variety is principally aimed at, and the willing assistance of all able to help in the immediate locality is supplemented by the engagement of professional assistance from London. During the month Miss Maggie Purvis, Mr. Raymond Langley, and Mr. Montague Borwell, as vocalists, have been down; also Mr. Charles Fry, whose clever elocutionary efforts always draw a large audience once in the season. At the recital on the 18th ult. Mr. Fry gave "The Dream of Eugene Aram," with Sir Alexander Mackenzie's incidental music, which, admirably played on the organ by Dr. Bunnett, considerably added to the dramatic effect of the recitation.

The Ipswich Philharmonic Society gave its seventh annual concert on the 21st ult., conducted by Mr. Charles Cooke. The programme included Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, the Overtures to "La Sonnambula" and "Athalie," as well as an instrumental selection from Gounod's "Faust." Miss Nellie Palmer played one of Goltermann's violoncello concertos in good style and Miss Mildred Harwood and Mr. G. King Smith contributed songs.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

The University Musical Society has taken a new lease of life under its recently appointed conductor, Mr. J. A. Moonie. Its membership this session jumped from sixty to over 170, and there seems to be a corresponding increase in interest and enterprise. The twenty-ninth annual concert, on the 3rd ult., was combined with the third of a series of four organ recitals which have been arranged by the University authorities. The inordinately long programme included Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" and Mendelssohn's "Come, let us sing." Miss Gordon Pillans took the solos at very short notice in place of Miss Marguerite Simpson; Miss Tweedie sang "Che Farò" as well as the part of Oluf's mother in "The Erl-King's Daughter"; and Mr. Burnett, besides taking the bass solos in the choral work, sang the "Pagliacci" Prologue very well. Mr. Moonie always bestows great care on his orchestral accompaniments, and a capable body of instrumentalists on this occasion, under Mr. Dambmann's leadership, gave effective support to the chorus. Mr. Collinson, the University organist, contributed an Overture in F minor by Morandi.

At the fifth meeting of the Edinburgh Bach Society, held in the Freemasons' Hall, on the 9th ult., the choir of St. George's Church, under Mr. Hartley, sang the cantata "Sleepers, wake," as recently edited by Professor Stanford. In accordance with the educational aims of the Society, the work was sung twice—at the beginning and at the close of the concert. The duets in the cantata were sung by Miss Fillunger and Mr. J. H. Kennedy. As an entr'acte Mr. Maurice Sons played the Introduction and Fugue from the Violin Sonata in C in a masterly way, and Miss Fillunger also delighted the large audience with an aria from the St. John "Passion." A small orchestra, led by Mr. Winram, supplied the accompaniments.

Miss Fillunger also provided the main part of the programme at the last of the Historical Concerts arranged by the Professor of Music in the University Music Class-room. These concerts, five in number, were of the same high educational value as in former years. The programmes this session included Mr. Dolmetsch's recital of Louis XIV. French music (November), Mr. Willy Benda's recital of virtuosic violoncello music (January), Mr. Clinton's recital of clarinet music (February), and two delightful recitals of German songs by Miss Fillunger (December and March).

The Choral Union brought its active season to a close, on the 20th ult., with a performance of the "Hymn of Praise," Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," and Beethoven's "Mount of Olives." Owing to the absence of Mr. Collinson from illness, Mr. Dambmann, the leader of the orchestra, at very short notice, conducted the performance with conspicuous care. The chorus is in fine condition and the volume of tone was most satisfactory. The soloists were Madame Estey, Miss Marguerite Simpson, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Burnett.

Mr. Pentland's choir has won an honourable place among the junior choral societies, and its performance of Elgar's "King Olaf" (for the first time in Scotland), on the 15th ult., in the Queen Street Hall, further established its claims to rank among the most important and enterprising organisations. The soloists were Miss Martini, Messrs. Stronach and Burnett. Mr. Pentland received a mounted baton before the concert from the members of his choir and a warm recognition after the performance from his audience.

The most notable visitor to our city last month was Mr. Borwick, who, assisted by Mr. Maurice Sons, gave a recital in the Music Hall, on the 4th ult., before a good and most friendly audience.

Mr. Brodsky was the violinist at Mr. Denhof's fourth chamber concert, and lent quite characteristic distinction to Tschaïkowsky's interesting "Elegiac" Trio in A minor. Mr. Denhof sustained his part in the concerted music admirably, and Miss Pillans was the vocalist.

At the third and last of his chamber concerts this season, on the 16th ult., Mr. Peter was assisted by M. Rieu and Dr. Pudor. Madame Janson was the vocalist.

The choir of St. Paul's Episcopal Church sang the first part of Gounod's "Redemption," on the 11th ult., under the direction of the choirmaster, Mr. Prendergast, who supplied the accompaniments on the organ.

The handsome travelling Bursary—the Bucher Scholarship of £100 a year for three years—open to male students at the music classes in Edinburgh University, was awarded, on the 4th ult., to Mr. J. Dunn. The examiners were Professor Niecks and Mr. Franklin Peterson.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

March was, as usual, identified with numerous miscellaneous concerts, the result of the close of the choral and orchestral season. It is only needful to record a successful performance, by the Coatbridge Choral Union, of Haydn's "The Seasons." The genial "Papa" was also well represented by the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, whose reputation was fully sustained by its performance of the first and second parts of the "Creation." The last Harrison concert for the season secured the usual popular favour. Messrs. Leonard Borwick, Maurice Sons, and Hayden Bailey strove bravely to create an interest in chamber music, and, later on, Mr. Elkan Kosman and party also essayed Mozart, Schumann, &c. Recent performances at the Fine Arts Institute, under Mr. W. H. Cole, have included a familiar Mozart Symphony and several attractive examples of Gounod, Cherubini, and Schubert.

The ninth annual concert by the students' orchestra and pupils of the Glasgow School of Music was announced to take place on the 24th ult., when the programme was to include Sir A. C. Mackenzie's Overture to "The Little Minister," Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's four Characteristic Waltzes (Op. 22), Weber's Concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra (Op. 79), and Maurer's Concertante for four violins and orchestra (Op. 55). On the same evening the Paisley Choral Union gave its last concert for the season, when Handel's "Samson" was chosen for performance. The soloists were Misses Medora Henson, Hannah Jones, and Messrs. Iver McKay and David Hughes. The Paisley Philharmonic Society, assisted by a contingent of professional players, led by Mr. Cole, supplied the accompaniments.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

Foremost among the works introduced to this locality during the past month must be noted S. Coleridge-Taylor's delightful and graphic setting of the wedding scene from Longfellow's "Hiawatha"; and for this thanks are due to Mr. Lea's Mount Pleasant Choral Society and that which, under the style of the "St. Cecilia," in Birkenhead, has for a long period past done yeoman service under Mr. Appleyard, the dates being respectively the 17th and 18th ult. Two days later Mr. Pemberton's old-established Society at Rock Ferry gave Elgar's "Banner of St. George," and carried forward that exploration into the newer fields of art which has for an honourable period been a feature of each recurring season's programme. It is only a pity that Liverpool and its district should be so hard to move in the same direction, for, with the exceptions named, those many cantatas which have appeared during the past year or two have been to us as it were sealed books. Welcome revivals have, however, taken place of Gounod's "St. Cecilia" Mass, which fittingly brought the season of the Sunday Society to a close, and has been excellently given by Dr. Reynolds at Runcorn, on the 23rd ult., and the same conductor, on the 25th, presented Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" and Mendelssohn's "Christus" to the patrons of the Oxton Choral Society.

The Philharmonic ended its sixtieth season on the 21st ult. with Rossini's "Stabat Mater," under Mr. Cowen, and the doings of other societies have comprised performances of Stainer's "Crucifixion" by the St. Columba's, under Mr. J. W. Miller; of Haydn's "Creation," at Garston, under Mr. Coller; of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" by the St. Hilary Society, under Mr. Frank Dibb; and of Gounod's "Redemption" by St. Mary's Society, under Mr. J. W. Harries, the two last-named having taken place at Liscard, which locality is to be congratulated upon once more looking up in choral work, though in this connection, be it regretted, that the New Brighton Society, under that clever musician, Mr. Granville Bantock, has made no further sign.

At Southport, Mr. J. C. Clarke has given Sullivan's "Light of the World" and Handel's "Messiah," but Mr. H. Hudson's Society is being held in hand till November next and is in the meantime diligently rehearsing Berlioz's "Faust." Mr. F. H. Crossley gave Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," at Warrington, on the 22nd ult., and announced Gounod's "Redemption," at Liverpool, for the last day of the month.

Turning to another side of art, congratulations must be tendered to the promoters of the Schiever and the Lawson Chamber Concerts, for at last there would appear to be an awakening to the due reception of such things in Liverpool, and the performances under this head on the 14th—with Dr. Joachim—and on the 18th ult., by the two entrepreneurs named, have gained it a distinct impetus. At the last-named recital was performed the clever Trio for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte with which the prize recently offered by the Incorporated Society of Musicians was brought home to the parent section of the Society by Mr. F. W. Austin. Both series of these concerts are, it is expected, to receive a far larger measure of support than hitherto next season.

Performances have been given on the 17th and 25th ult. by the Società Armonica and the Orchestral Society, with Mozart's "Jupiter" and Cowen's "Scandinavian" Symphonies respectively. At the first in order Mr. Akeroyd conducted and Mr. Rodewald played principal double-bass. At the other Mr. Rodewald conducted and Mr. Akeroyd was leader, a truly delightful interchange of positions between two accomplished musicians.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

The conclusion of Mr. Cowen's connection with the Hallé concerts, into which he has, during his three years' direction, thrown a new life, demands a more elaborate and calm record than may, in the hurry and excitement left by the brilliant closing performances, be fairly given. Never has there, in the Free Trade Hall, at the close of any musical performance, been such a demonstration of respect and admiration as stirred the vast audience on the 16th ult. The retiring conductor was, amid ringing cheers and waving of 'kerchiefs, three times recalled, and Mr. Cowen is certainly never in haste to appropriate to himself the applause of an audience. Throughout the evening it was clear that the feelings of the packed auditors were strongly stimulated, for it was some time before the performance of the opening Overture—the "Faust" of Wagner—was allowed to commence: and, at the close of the first part of the programme the demonstration of gratitude for an exceptionally fine rendering of the "Grail" music was moderated evidently only through a fear lest it might be supposed to be in any way excited by love of a work which, although it appealed by all kinds of unusual accessories short of actual theatric realisation, yet failed to stir any deep emotion. Only one man ever yet lived who, had he been spared to this world for twice his allotted span of years, might possibly have risen to such a task as Wagner assumed; and he would certainly modestly have shrunk from such an attempt, as utterly beyond human power. I have heard many interpretations of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, under the direction of Richter and other notable conductors, amid the excitement of a festival week and with various pleasant surroundings, but I have never listened to a rendering so nearly flawless. Especially did the choir rise to the responsibilities of the situation, and never has the fine body of singers drilled by Mr. R. H. Wilson so positively vindicated its claim to consideration. That either Beethoven or Wagner treated choralists with favour nobody would be so absurd as to declare; but the choir grappled with the difficulties imposed with a success only dimmed by the listener's consciousness that they never ought to have been imposed upon human throats.

At the previous concert we had a fine interpretation of the Eighth Symphony, which might be classed with the "Pastoral," only on a slightly lower level; and of Dvorák's Symphonic Variations. Dr. Joachim made his customary second visit; and Mrs. Helen Trust sang in place of Madame Alice Lamb, who, on the 2nd ult., similarly varied and lightened the programme.

Other choral performances—which we always note with pleasure—have, during March, included a creditable rendering of Haydn's "Creation" (to mark the centenary of its first public performance), by Mr. Blacow's Pendleton Choral Union; a presentation of Handel's "Judas" at Heywood, on the 15th; on the 20th, at Altrincham, of "The Gate of Life," and a successful competition on the afternoon and evening of the 4th ult., at Stalybridge, when Dr. Allison awarded the first prize to the Golcar Prize Choir, after a close struggle with the Mill Hill Prize Choir, which missed the premier place by only one mark.

At the concluding concert of Mr. Lane's Ninth Subscription series we had an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's most melodious and pathetic Thirteenth Psalm, together with the Manchester prize glee of Dr. Hiles, "Hushed in death," Eaton Faning's delicate part-song, "The night is still and holy," and Henry Leslie's madrigal, "My love is so fair," and there were so many soloists provided that even to mention their names would absorb more space than could be spared. Especial interest was excited by the first appearance on the Free Trade Hall platform of one of the young students of the Royal Manchester College of Music. Master Edward Isaacs plays the pianoforte with that clearness and distinctness of touch which characterise many of the pupils of Miss Néruda. At the Harrison Subscription concerts, also, there is always a liberal provision of soloists; but on Wednesday evening, the 8th ult., there was the additional attraction of the Harrison orchestra, under the direction of Mr. G. Jaeger, a very capable body of instrumentalists.

The pianoforte recital, on the 6th ult., of Mr. Isidor Cohn should have attracted the general public more than it did; but it proved highly satisfactory to a select and critical audience. Mr. Fuchs has again engaged the Böhmische Streich-Quartet, which was so delightful last spring, for his concluding chamber concert.

Mr. Pennington's meeting at Stretford on Saturday, the 11th ult., was rendered specially interesting by the first performance of the new string quartet of Mr. Charles Fogg—a decidedly interesting work; its shortcomings, if it has any, being such as greater experience and mastery of form must rectify, there being plenty of evidence of fertile imagination.

The annual public examinations are not yet completed and a proper record of the progress made during the year must, therefore, be deferred.

Mr. E. Sachs deserves commendation for his continued exertion on behalf of male-voice choral music, previously strangely neglected in this district, and the performance of Cherubini's Mass by his choir, on the 21st ult., was extremely interesting and instructive. On the 22nd ult., Dr. Watson very agreeably closed the season of his vocal society by an admirable rendering of a number of part-songs and madrigals, relieved by Mr. John Wrigley's Sanctus Motet, and vastly enlivened by S. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," a work brimful of melody and sparkling with life and fun.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

The Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society gave its first concert of the season in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on February 21, the principal work performed being Henry Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron." The soloists were Madame Goodall, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Charles Knowles. A capable orchestra, with Mr. J. H. Beers as leader, was engaged, and the work was performed in a very creditable manner. This concert was the first given by the Society under its present conductor, Mr. J. E. Jeffries, recently appointed to succeed Dr. William Rea, who held the position of conductor for many years.

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union gave its second concert of the season in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 10th ult. The programme consisted of Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night." Both works afford excellent opportunities for the display of good singing on the part of the choir, admirably made use of. The soloists, Miss Alice Simons, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Douglas Powell, were eminently satisfactory in their respective parts. Mr. T. Wilkinson presided at the organ, Mr. J. H. Beers was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. James M. Preston conducted.

Another excellent Society is the Sunderland Philharmonic, which gave its final concert of this season in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, on the 15th ult. The works performed were Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" and Verdi's "Stabat Mater," the latter being given on this occasion for the first time in the North of England. Both works had been carefully prepared and were very successful in performance. The soloists were Miss Lilian Coomber, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. William Green, and Mr. David Hughes. A very efficient orchestra was engaged, with Mr. W. W. Lax as leader, and Mr. N. Kilburn conducted as usual. It is a matter of regret that these very excellent concerts are not supported by the people of Sunderland as they should be, but some allowance must be made for the fact that the only hall available for such concerts is a most uncomfortable one. A movement is on foot to remedy this, and in the interests of good music it is sincerely to be hoped it will be successful.

The Gateshead Vocal Society gave its second Subscription concert in the Town Hall, Gateshead, on the 2nd ult. The principal work performed was J. F. Barnett's cantata "The Building of the Ship." The soloists were Madame Goodall, Miss Ida Williamson, Mr. Charles Blagbro, and Mr. William Riley. Considering the difficulty of satisfactorily performing a work of this character without the aid of an orchestra, the performance was very creditable to all concerned. Mr. J. E. Hutchinson presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Newton Laycock conducted.

At the fourth concert of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society, given on the 21st ult., in the Assembly Rooms, Newcastle, excellent performances of Brahms's Quintet in F minor (Op. 34) and Cherubini's Quartet in D minor were given by Dr. Joachim, Messrs. Kruse, Wirth, and Hausman, and Miss Fanny Davies.

The Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society gave very praiseworthy performances of Cowen's cantata "St. John's Eve" and Schubert's "Song of Miriam," in the Albion Assembly Rooms, North Shields, on the 21st ult. The soloists were Madame Marie Duma, Miss Mimi Beers, Mr. Herbert Stansfield, and Mr. Charles Knowles. A small orchestra, led by Mr. J. H. Beers, was engaged, and Mr. W. Bird conducted.

The South Shields Choral Society closed its fifteenth season, on the 22nd ult., with a very satisfactory performance of Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," with Madame Marie Duma, Mr. William Green, and Mr. David Hughes in the solo parts. Mr. J. H. Beers was principal first violin and Mr. W. Fairs conducted. The choruses were sung with every attention to detail, and the whole performance reflected considerable credit upon the Society and its painstaking conductor.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The second concert of the City Orchestra, which took place on the 2nd ult., before a large and appreciative audience, proved a considerable step in advance of its first attempt, and gave evidence of a promising career for this Society. The programme, which was most exhaustive, included works by Weber, Wagner, Beethoven, Brahms, Tschaïkowsky, and Gounod. Mr. Henry J. Wood is to be congratulated upon the careful and musicianly manner in which he guided his forces through the "Pastoral" Symphony, but in no case did his exertions show to better effect than in the intricate tempi of Brahms's Hungarian Dances or the orchestral trickeries of the "Casse-Noisette" Suite. The vocalist was Miss Beatrice Tattersall, who seemed rather overpowered by the orchestra in Elizabeth's Greeting, but was heard to greater advantage in Schubert's "Wiegenlied." Gounod's "Hymn à Sainte Cecile" gave Mr. Arthur Payne, the leader, an opportunity to exhibit his powers as a soloist, and his efforts created a most favourable impression. With Mr. Wood as conductor the City Orchestra has a brilliant career before it, though we confess to having felt the programme to have been overloaded.

Mr. W. Wright gave an organ recital at Christ Church, New Radford, on the 12th ult., including works by Bach, Selby, and Lemmens.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Lent term is not supposed to be a time of great musical activity in Oxford, but the art has by no means been neglected. The University Musical Club gave two public concerts. At the first, on Shrove Tuesday, Schubert's Octet, under the leadership of Mr. Alfred Gibson, was the chief piece, and songs were contributed by Mrs. Hutchinson, who was in excellent voice. At the second concert, on the 15th ult., we had the pleasure of hearing the famous Joachim Quartet. The programme included Beethoven's Quartet in A minor (Op. 132), which was played in a style as near perfection as possible. The Ladies' Musical Club continues to flourish. It gives no public concerts, but at the private meetings some excellent programmes were performed. At the first, Miss Donkersley and Mrs. Hobday were the instrumentalists, and Madame Hope Glenn the vocalist. At the second, Dr. Taylor, of New College, and the Misses Leila and May Taylor were the chief performers. At the third, a quartet of ladies, led by Miss Arkwright, contributed chamber music, and vocal duets by Schumann and Brahms were sung. At the last concert Mozart's Clarinet Quintet in A major, led by Miss Thomas, was the chief feature. The Musical Union Invitation concert was given in the Hall of Christ Church, on February 25, when a large audience enjoyed the delightful playing of the Schiever Quartet. At the production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by the University Dramatic Society, Mendelssohn's Overture and incidental music were performed by a small but efficient orchestra of London players, conducted by Mr. Charles Hargitt.

The Sunday evening concerts at Balliol College have been continued and are as popular as ever. At the concluding concert an excellent rendering of Brahms's "Song of Destiny" was given by the Balliol Choral Society, conducted by Mr. John Farmer and accompanied on the pianoforte by Dr. Ernest Walker. On the last Monday of term the Bach Choir, conducted by Dr. Harwood, gave a satisfactory performance of sacred music at All Saints' Church, the chief feature being Bach's Motet "My spirit was in heaviness."

SIR JOHN STAINER'S LECTURE.

Sir John Stainer gave one of his admirable lectures on the 8th ult., which was attended by an audience of about 700 persons. The subject was "Madrigals of the Gallo-Belgian School," which proved to be a discourse brimful of interest from beginning to end. The illustrations included madrigals in four parts by Jannequin (first published in 1529), by Sermisy (1500), by Verdelot (1490), and, amongst others, a very beautiful specimen by Jacotin (1450), entitled "Moan, music, moan!" In listening to the last-named it was a little difficult to imagine the music as being the production of so early a date—in fact, some of its curves, modulations, and suspensions almost suggested the work of yesterday. We believe we are correct in stating that no copies of the beautiful specimens forming the illustrations at this lecture are to be found in the British Museum, but Sir John discovered them at Oxford in the Bodleian Library. It should be mentioned that most of the words to the madrigals sung on this occasion were either adapted from the originals or expressly written by Mr. J. F. R. Stainer (one of the Professor's sons), who must be congratulated on his signal success, as in every instance they were charmingly appropriate. The illustration choir, ably trained and conducted by Dr. Mee, sang con amore. It is much to be wished that some means could be devised whereby these important lectures might reach a larger audience than is possible in Oxford. The amount of time spent upon them in the way of research, transcription, and getting them up to the high standard of excellence to which they have attained must be enormous.

The excellent concert given by the orchestra of the Royal College of Music, on the 3rd ult., is noticed in another column.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The Sheffield Musical Union gave a successful concert in the Albert Hall, Sheffield, on the 14th ult., the programme consisting of works by Handel. "Acis and Galatea," which has not been performed in Sheffield for some years, occupied the greater portion of the programme, which was completed with a selection of solos and choruses from "Samson," "Israel in Egypt," and other works. Under the direction of Dr. Coward, the popular serenata was excellently performed, the fine singing of the chorus being an enjoyable factor in the success attained. The principals were Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Mr. T. H. Brearley, Mr. W. H. Burrows, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. J. H. Parkes led an efficient orchestra, and Mr. G. F. Cawthorne was organist.

The Chesterfield Harmonic Society gave a concert in the Stephenson Memorial Hall on the 14th ult. Mr. G. A. Seed conducted an admirable performance of Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," and in this work, as in several miscellaneous pieces, the well-trained choristers sang excellently. The performance throughout bore testimony to great care in preparation. Mr. John Dunn played violin solos, and Miss Edith Lee, Miss Hannah Jones, and Mr. Joseph Lycett also took part in the programme. Mr. J. H. Gaunt accompanied.

The Doncaster Musical Society performed Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" in the Guildhall, on the 8th ult. Mr. H. McKenzie's choral forces acquitted themselves with great credit, and a capable orchestra, led by Mr. C. Reasbeck, played the score and miscellaneous pieces correctly and well. The soloists were Miss L. Brooks, Mr. Charles Blagbro, Mr. J. Lycett, and Mr. H. H. Sharp.

The Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society gave a subscription concert on the 9th ult. Bennett's "Naiads" and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overtures, a selection from "Masaniello," and Chopin's Grand Polonaise in E flat, the pianoforte solo capitally played by Mr. E. R. Reynolds, were the leading features of an interesting concert. Dr. Coward was the conductor.

In connection with the choir festival at St. Mary's Church, the sixth of a series of oratorio performances was given on the 13th ult., when "The Messiah" was performed to a crowded congregation, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The soloists were Madame Norledge, Miss A. Whitehead, Mr. R. Thompson, and Mr. T. C. Fagg.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society performed Cowen's "Rose Maiden," on the 16th ult., under the direction of Dr. Coward. The chorus, which now numbers nearly 200 voices, sang the work con amore. The principals were Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Emily Grimshaw, Mr. Henry Norbury, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. G. W. Buckley was leader and Mr. W. H. Jones accompanied.

On the 18th ult. the Eyam Choral Society visited Bradwell and gave an admirable performance of Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," under the direction of Mr. J. W. Froggatt.

Molique's "Abraham" was performed by the Chapeltown and District Sacred Harmonic Society on the 21st ult. That so fine a work should be so rarely performed is regrettable, for the oratorio is a masterpiece and its acceptability was proved at the concert referred to. Under the conductorship of Mr. Thomas Bool, the work was rendered in a highly satisfactory manner. Many of the choruses are elaborate and difficult, and in view of this fact the choristers are to be complimented on their admirable singing. The principals were Miss Kate Shields, Miss Amy Skerritt, Mr. Edwin Kellett, and Mr. Dan Billington. A capable orchestra was led by Mr. H. Parker and Mr. Frank Senior was the organist.

On the 27th ult. the Hanover Choral Society, a new organisation formed in Sheffield, gave a concert under the direction of Mr. Thomas Morton. The principal feature of the programme was Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus."

Stainer's "Crucifixion" retains its position as a favourite work for Good Friday services, a number of local churches announcing its performance on that date.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society was responsible for an excellent rendering of Haydn's "Creation," in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on the 9th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. James Garner. Vocal principals of undoubted rank, a full and efficient band, a choir about which it would be difficult to be too enthusiastic, and a conductor able to make the most of these forces, combined to provide a representation of Haydn's first oratorio calculated to bring distinction to any district. The trio of principals, Miss Palliser, Mr. Humphreys, and Mr. Watkin Mills, sang admirably. The second part of the concert was of a miscellaneous character. The choir again distinguished itself in "The parting kiss" (Pinsuti), "There rolls the deep" (Hubert Parry), a happily conceived programme being concluded by a brilliant rendering of the grand choral number from "Tannhäuser," "Hail, bright abode." Mr. Shaw was leader of the band and Mr. T. Johnson presided at the organ.

The Meakin concert given in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on the 16th ult., was a brilliant finish to a successful series. The artists were Dr. Joachim (violin), Miss Fanny Davies (pianoforte), Miss Osborne Williams (vocalist), with Mr. W. Sherratt as accompanist. The programme included Sonata for violin and pianoforte in A major (Op. 100), Brahms; song, "O had I Jubal's lyre," Handel; and pianoforte solo, Rhapsodie in G minor, Brahms.

The North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Sullivan's "Light of the World," on the 23rd ult., in Victoria Hall, Hanley, under the conductorship of Dr. Swinnerton Heap. The principals were Madame Ruth Lamb, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. Ivor Foster. The band and chorus numbered 300.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

The joint concerts of the Philharmonic and Subscription series at Leeds have this season been unusually interesting, and that of the 1st ult. was no exception to the rule. The programme, which consisted chiefly of orchestral music, was peculiarly representative of current ideas on art. Brahms's Third Symphony had as its pendant the strongly contrasted "Romeo" Overture of Tschaïkowsky, finely played by the Hallé band under Mr. Cowen. Modern Italy was represented by Verdi's beautiful "Stabat Mater," and another choral piece served as a becoming tribute to local art, being an eight-part chorus, "From Harmony, from Heavenly Harmony," by Mr. F. K. Hattersley, the Philharmonic Society's able chorus-master. It is certainly a specimen of well-wrought vocal counterpoint, learned, but without smelling too much of the lamp, and was well, if not brilliantly sung under the composer's conductorship. Orchestral pieces by Beethoven, Wagner, and Grieg completed this very representative programme, which was apparently enjoyed by a large audience. On February 25 the Board School Choral Society gave a most creditable performance of "Elijah." The principal soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Enid Grimshaw, Mr. T. Child, and Mr. C. Knowles, all capable artists. The orchestra, though small, was well manned. The interest of the performance, however, centred in the chorus, which consists of former students at the Board Schools of Leeds. Composed to a large extent of young voices, it showed a certain want of stamina, evidenced by an occasional failure to keep the pitch; but it had pluck and intelligence, and Mr. Godson, the conductor, managed to secure performances characterised by much spirit. On the 7th ult. the Messrs. Haddock attempted on their own account a solution of the local orchestra difficulty, introducing to Leeds a band of nearly ninety players. As the programme was not exacting, and the work of preparation had been going on for some months, the orchestra having been actually formed last November, it is impossible to say how the new organisation would stand the test of a series of concerts with less opportunity of rehearsal. It may, however, be said that they played with considerable expression and unanimity under Mr. Edgar Haddock's expressive and exceedingly painstaking conductorship. Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto was very artistically played by Mr. F. Ellis, and three movements of a suite by Mr. J. F. Barnett, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," afforded a novelty to Leeds. The vocalist was Miss Clara Brooke. Other Leeds concerts that must be passed over with bare mention are one of chamber music given by Mr. Christensen, on the 15th ult., and a song and violin recital by Miss Marie Lummert and Miss Edith Robinson, on the 16th ult. A series of lecture-concerts on National Music that are now being given at the Art Gallery, by Mr. C. Wilkinson, also deserves notice, as does one of Messrs. Ross and Moore's clever "Ensemble Recitals," which took place on the 14th ult.

At Bradford the last of the Subscription Concerts was on the 3rd ult., when, with the aid of the Bradford Festival Choral Society and the Hallé band, Mr. Cowen's "Water Lily" and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" were given. The "Water Lily" is not by any means the most spontaneous of Mr. Cowen's works, but it must be said that the Bradford chorus placed its beauties in a clearer light than was cast upon it at Norwich in 1893. As for "Hiawatha," its freshness and naïve charm were as apparent as ever, in spite of a performance that was not remarkable for great point or finish. The soloists were Miss Palliser, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills. On the 14th ult. the Bradford Old Choral Society gave a programme venturing as far into the region of the unknown as public opinion will permit. They introduced to Yorkshire Dr. Stanford's admirable symphony "L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso," to which a fair measure of justice was done, and gave a spirited rendering of Sir Arthur Sullivan's popular Te Deum, to which the Black Dike Brass Band added a very stirring effect in the last movement. The soloist was Miss Esty and Mr. Robertshaw conducted with discretion. On the 11th ult. the Permanent Orchestra closed its season with a programme of rather ordinary character, to which Mr. Santley, who was in unusually good form, gave an element of popularity.

The Huddersfield Subscription Concerts cater chiefly for "popular" tastes, but on February 28 an interesting programme of orchestral music was submitted by the ubiquitous Manchester orchestra. Mr. Cowen gave a very finished performance of his "Scandinavian" Symphony, and Mr. Carl Fuchs played a violoncello concerto by Haydn, while Mr. Ranalow made a distinct success as baritone vocalist. The concert on the 14th ult. was of the ordinary miscellaneous character, Miss Clara Butt being the popular "star" of the evening. On the 7th ult. the Glee and Madrigal Society gave one of its concerts of vocal music under Mr. Ibeson's conductorship. The Huddersfield Choral Society chose for its final concert, on the 17th ult., Costa's "Eli," a choice somewhat difficult of explanation when so much that is worthier awaits a hearing at its hands. The performance was an excellent one, but hardly succeeded in galvanizing into life music that is essentially passé. Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Edna Thornton, Messrs. W. Green, David Hughes, and Riley were the principals, and Mr. John Bowling conducted.

Beethoven's Mass in C, or, to be accurate, a selection therefrom, and Spohr's "Last Judgment" were given by the Wakefield Choral Society, on the 17th ult., under Mr. Hardy's conductorship. Miss Jaques, Miss Annie Hall, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Browning formed the solo quartet. On the 20th ult. Mr. Hardy conducted Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" at a special Lenten service in the Cathedral.

By way of celebrating the centenary of Haydn's "Creation," the first and second parts were performed by the Hull Harmonic Society, on the 3rd ult. Mr. W. Porter conducted and the principals were Madame Goodall, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Riley. The band, which was exceptionally good, played some of Mr. German's "Henry VIII." music in the miscellaneous second part. On the 15th ult. the Whitby Choral Society, of which Mr. Hallgate is the conductor, gave a miscellaneous concert, the first part being devoted to Mendelssohn—the 42nd Psalm and the "Cherith" scene from "Elijah." Miss Ada Beecroft, Mr. Waters, and Mr. C. Knowles were the principal vocalists, and Mr. G. W. Buckley, the leader of the orchestra, played the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

At Halifax the Choral Society chose for its concert, on the 9th ult., two recent works of native origin and of more than common power, Dr. Stanford's "Requiem" and Goring Thomas's posthumous cantata "The Swan and the Skylark." In neither was the Society's chorus heard to advantage, the "Requiem" in particular suffering from want of variety and from constantly hurried tempi. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster—who has of late made a distinct advance—Mr. W. Green, and Mr. A. F. Ferguson. Mr. Thomas Smith conducted. On the 1st ult. Messrs. Webster and Gutfeld gave the last of their concerts at Halifax, Fibich's Quintet in D (Op. 42) forming the chief feature of the programme, which was virtually identical with that of Messrs. Naylor and Gutfeld's Harrogate concert the succeeding night.

The Dewsbury Choral Society, at its concert on the 14th ult., made up a capital programme with Mr. Elgar's "King Olaf" and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast"—works that have, in their wealth of melody and colour and freshness of feeling, much in common. They were very ably interpreted, the band being exceptionally good, while the chorus sang with power and energy. The principals, Madame Duma, Mr. W. Green, and Mr. Gordon Heller, were well up in their work, and Mr. T. L. Chadwick conducted with remarkable zest and vigour.

Of the smaller West Riding societies, that of Pudsey is distinguished by a more than common spirit of enterprise. On the 13th ult. it presented Molique's "Abraham," which deserves an occasional hearing. It was on the whole adequately sung under Mr. Jowett's direction, Mr. Browning's dignified conception of the title-rôle being particularly praiseworthy. The other principals were Miss Pallister, Miss Pickard, and Mr. T. Child. On February 22 the Morley Choral Society, under Mr. Alfred Benton, gave a good performance of "Acis and Galatea," with Madame Sadler-Fogg, Mr. William Green, Mr. Austin Mahoney, and Mr. Broadhead as principals. The second part included three movements from Mr. Elgar's "Bavarian" Suite for chorus and orchestra. Mr. Cowen's "St. John's Eve" was the chief feature of the Batley Choral Society's concert on the 7th ult., and proved quite within its resources. Miss Emily Davies, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. E. Kemp, and Mr. H. Bailey were the principals, and Mr. John Tomlinson conducted. A creditable, but rather slow performance of Berlioz's "Faust" was given by the Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society on the 8th ult., Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Saunders, Mr. Sharp, and Mr. Watkin Mills being the soloists; while Mr. W. H. Wright conducted.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

The American Guild of Organists held its eighth Public Service in St. James's Church, New York, on February 9. Mr. Walter Henry Hall, the organist and choirmaster of St. James, arranged the service, which included his own setting of the Nicene Creed, Martin's "Hail, gladdening light," Surette's "Let God arise," and a Motet of Palestrina's. The assisting organists were Mr. Robert J. Winterbottom and Mr. Sidney Cross.

The Troy (N.Y.) Vocal Society (Mr. Clement R. Gale, conductor) inaugurated its twenty-fifth season, on the 2nd ult., with a concert in which the assisting artist was Rosenthal, the pianist. The programme included Mr. Gale's new setting of Longfellow's "I know a maiden fair to see," which was received with great enthusiasm. This Society, composed of men's voices alone, has recently, under Mr. Gale's able leadership, taken a place among the best of our male chorus societies.

The Musical Art Society, of New York (Mr. Frank Damrosch, conductor), affords us opportunities now and then of hearing some very interesting old music. The programme of the last concert, on the 16th ult., included among its numbers three Responses by Palestrina, Lotti's "Crucifixus," "Passion Song," by Michael Haydn, and Bach's Third Concerto for three violins, three violas, three violoncellos, and bass. Professor Parker's new prize composition, "Adstant Angelorum Choris," was also performed with great success.

Holyoke (Mass.) is to have another festival this year, the dates being April 14 and 15, and the conductor, Mr. C. S. Cornell. The programme includes the "Creation," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and S. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." The Boston Festival Orchestra has been engaged, and among the instrumental numbers is the Ballade in A minor by the composer of "Hiawatha."

Mancinelli's "Ero e Leandro" had its first American performance on the 10th ult., at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and was well received. According to the New York Herald, "the general opinion was that it was a very interesting work, of much greater vocal and instrumental beauty than had been anticipated. . . . The score, as a whole, is a good specimen of terse and dramatic composition, and the opera is one of the most interesting novelties which has been heard here for many years." The performance, in which Madame Eames, Madame Mantelli, M. Saleza, and M. Plançon sustained the chief parts, was excellent, and these artists, together with the composer, were repeatedly called at the end of each act.

Mr. Herbert Putnam has been appointed to the important office of Librarian of Congress.

The fourth orchestral concert by the members of the Imperial Institute Amateur Orchestra took place at the Imperial Institute, on the 1st ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Alberto Randegger. The programme included a new Overture, "In May," by Garnet Wolseley Cox, a promising student at the Royal Academy of Music; Prelude to the opera "Loreley," Max Bruch; Suite, "Ballet Egyptien," A. Luigini; "Serenade Italienne," Del Valle de Paz; and the Overture to "Masaniello," Auber. Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor (Op. 16) was very efficiently performed by Mr. G. Aldo Randegger, it being his first appearance in England. The programme of the Ladies' concert, on the 23rd ult., included the first and second movements from the Pathetic Symphony (Tschaïkowsky), Berceuse (Evelina Randegger), Incidental Music to Scott Gatty's Musical Play "The Goose Girl" (Louis d'Egville), conducted by the composer; Danse de Sylphes and Marche Hongroise from "Faust" (Berlioz); and the Overtures "Di Ballo" (Sullivan) and "Rosamunde" (Schubert).

Four new songs (still in manuscript) by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor were produced for the first time in public by Miss Jessie Walmisley, at a concert given by Miss Lucie Hillier, at the Croydon Conservatoire, on February 24. They were, "You'll love me yet" (Browning), "Canoe Song" (Isabella Crawford), "A blood-red ring hung round the moon" (Barry Dane), and "Sweet evenings come and go, love" (George Eliot). Of these the most striking is the third, a haunting composition, as weird as it is new and beautiful. Yet it is quite simple and unaffected, as are also the remaining three songs, in which Mr. Taylor's spontaneity is strikingly displayed. Nothing could well be simpler than these absolutely original but extremely vocal songs, or more calculated to prove, if proof were still necessary, that Mr. Taylor is a born melodist, whose possession of the rarest amongst a musician's gifts lends peculiar value to all he writes. Miss Walmisley's well-trained contralto voice and sympathetic style did full justice to the delightful strains. The composer accompanied.

The Stratford Musical Festival, which has now been in existence for sixteen years, took place on the 16th, 18th, and 20th ult., and the continually increasing number of entries—over 500 this year—for the various competitions give abundant evidence of the popularity of the movement in Essex and the Eastern and North-Eastern parts of the Metropolis. The adjudicators were Miss Anna Williams and Mr. Edwin Holland (solo singing), Mr. Myles B. Foster (choral pieces and organ playing), Mr. Arthur W. Payne (violin, viola, and violoncello), Mr. W. W. Starmer (pianoforte), Mr. G. Oakey (theory and harmony), and Sir Walter Parratt (composition). A fitting conclusion to the Festival was a concert given by some of the chief competitors, at the Stratford Town Hall, on the 24th ult.

A concert, in aid of the funds of the Metropolitan Hospitals, was given on the 16th ult., at the Highbury Athenæum, by the Stoke Newington Choral Association, with the co-operation of the North London Orchestral Society, when Gade's "The Crusaders" and Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" formed the principal numbers in the programme. In the performance of these familiar, but always welcome works, both the choir—which in the comparatively short period of its existence has developed into a very efficient body of vocalists—and the orchestra rendered an excellent account of themselves, under the able conductorship of Mr. Percy Taylor. Miss Theresa Blamy, Miss Jenny Atkinson, Messrs. James Leyland and Bantock Pierpoint were the solo interpreters.

The Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine will be held this year at Düsseldorf, and takes place, as usual, during Whitsuntide. The performances include, on the first day, Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," Bach's cantata "Halt im Gedächtniss Jesum Christum," and the "Parsifal" prelude; on the second day, Liszt's symphonic poem "Orpheus," Beethoven's triple Concerto, R. Strauss's new symphonic poem "Heldenleben," and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night"; on the third day, Schumann's Symphony in B flat, Brahms's Rhapsody for contralto solo and male choir, R. Strauss's "Don Quixote," and the second act from Cornelius's "Der Barbier von Bagdad." Professor Buths and Herr Richard Strauss will be the conductors.

An interesting and very successful performance of Messrs. Shapcott Wensley and Arthur Somervell's clever and effective operetta "The Enchanted Palace" was given, on the 10th ult., by the scholars of the Fleet Road Board School, in the spacious hall of the Institution, which was completely filled. Again, as in their previous performance of the little piece some months since, at the Cripplegate Institute, the singing of the young folks was remarkable for readiness of attack, clearness of enunciation, and general musical efficiency, the result of the very able and painstaking tuition of their instructor, Mr. Jesse Harris. Mrs. McNaught's excellent accompaniment on the pianoforte contributed materially to the success of the performance.

The competition for the Goldberg Prize, at the Royal Academy of Music, took place on the 6th ult., the prize being awarded to Ethel M. Wood, a native of Holmfirth, Yorks. The examiners were Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Miss Isabel Fassett. The competition for the Llewelyn Thomas and Evill Prizes took place on the 13th ult., when the Llewelyn Thomas Prize was awarded to Cassie Rees, a native of Ogmore Vale, and the Evill Prize to William E. Beazley, a native of London. The examiners were Mr. Richard Green, Mr. Robert Hilton, and Madame Annie Mudie Bolingbroke. The Sauret Prize has been awarded to Marian Jay, a native of London. Mr. Josef Bláha was the examiner.

The Mazepond Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" to a crowded audience, in Mazepond Chapel, Old Kent Road, on the 2nd ult. The choir sang with spirit and expression, and good instrumental work was done throughout by a band of strings and brass, led by Mr. T. Harry Smith. Miss M. Tyrer and Mr. E. Partridge presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively. The soloists were Miss Bessie Spells, Miss E. Coombs, Mr. D. St. Aubyn, and Mr. W. Seemer Betts. This is the third successful performance of oratorio by the Society this season, under the energetic conductorship of Mr. W. Dexter Miller, the organist of the chapel.

The Handel Society gave an excellent concert at the Royal Academy of Music on February 23, under the direction of Mr. J. S. Liddle. The programme included Haydn's Symphony in E flat and Handel's Concerto in G for strings. The Adagio from Mozart's Clarinet Concerto was excellently played by Miss Frances Thomas. The choir not only sang part-songs by Brahms and Parry with admirable effect, but gave Bach's difficult eight-part Motet, "Singet dem Herrn," with such success as to reflect the greatest possible credit both on themselves and on their very able conductor. Songs were contributed by Mr. Leonard Bevan and the Rev. W. P. Besley.

The Bow and Bromley Choir, conducted by Dr. W. G. McNaught, gave Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" (the new version with Mr. Paul England's words), at the People's Palace, on the 18th ult. The chief points of both works were ably brought out. The choir sang with vigour as well as with regard for expression, the rendering of the Evening Hymn and of "O pure in heart" being particularly notable for care and refinement. The solos were effectively sung by Miss Edith Hensler, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Gwilym Richards, the Rev. R. Spurrell, and Mr. Charles Knowles.

Mr. Bernard Fowles gave a concert on the 16th ult., at Emanuel Hall, West Dulwich, when he was assisted by Miss Amey Denning, Mr. J. Stafford Bush, and Mr. H. B. Salmon (vocalists), and two pupils, Miss Mildred Whitlie (violin) and Miss Ruth Shipstone (pianoforte). The concert-giver introduced three pieces for pianoforte and a song (Mr. H. B. Salmon) from his own pen, and also played Chopin's Ballade in A flat, besides taking part with the pupils named above in Grieg's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata (Op. 13), and Gurlitt's Fantasia in E flat and Hommage à Handel, Moscheles (Op. 92), both for two pianofortes.

A most successful performance of Somervell's "The Enchanted Palace" was given on the 18th ult., at the Recreation Room of Price's Patent Candle Company, Limited, Battersea, by the Belmont Singing Class, which is composed of girls employed at the Works. The choruses and solos were all admirably rendered, while the dances and tableaux displayed great taste and showed to good effect. The work was accompanied by a full orchestra, conducted by Mr. John Ulrich, with Miss Alice Ulrich at the pianoforte. The scenery was painted and arranged by Mr. Morgan, the artist of the Company.

Miss Evelyn Hope, on the 20th ult., provided a numerous audience, at the Queen's (Small) Hall, with an agreeable evening. Her choice of songs was well varied and her singing manifestly gave pleasure to her listeners. Other artists who appeared were Miss Lillian Corner, Miss Ethel Bevans, Miss Jeanne Levine, Messrs. E. F. Humphry, George Coles, Franklin Clive, Alexander Watson, and the Harmonic Quartet, the last-named rendering part-songs, the selection comprising Bennett's "Evening," German's "Who is Sylvia?" and Bishop's "Sleep, gentle lady."

Mr. Edmond Rickett, musical director at the Comedy Theatre, has composed the music for "A Lady of Quality," dramatised from Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel by the authoress and Mr. Stephen Townesend. Besides a bright and busy little overture, there are three entr'actes—viz., a somewhat elaborate, but tuneful and in parts impassioned Romance, a pretty Menuet and Gavotte, and a stately Saraband and (mirabile dictu!) Fugue. Without displaying any marked individuality, these pieces show good musicianship and a faculty for inventing taking themes of a light character.

The West Ham Philharmonic Society gave the second concert of the season on the 9th ult., in the Town Hall, Stratford, and, under the able conductorship of Mr. H. A. Donald, gave exceedingly creditable renderings of Schubert's Fourth Symphony in C minor (the "Tragic") and Tschaïkowsky's "Casse Noisette" Suite. A good performance of the solo part of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto was given by Miss Maud Agnes Winter, and the vocalists, Miss Mabel Johnson and Mr. Arthur Barlow, were much appreciated.

Mr. Walter Ford gave concerts at the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 3rd and 17th ult., and on each occasion sang with taste and feeling. His rendering of Schumann's "Du bist wie eine Blume," of the old French ditty "Les petits oiseaux," and of Massenet's "Crépuscule" was specially commendable for appropriateness of sentiment. To the first concert Miss Fillunger, Miss Fanny Davies, and Mr. Simonetti contributed, and in the second Misses Katie Goodson, Marie Motto, and Isabel MacDougall took part.

The Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of the "Last Judgment," "Gallia," and "Hymn of Praise" at St. John's, Kilburn, on the 1st ult. The soloists were Miss Edith Dove, Miss Renwick, Mr. Henry Holyoake, and Mr. Wherlow Bull. On the 15th ult. the choir gave "Elijah" in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, Poplar. The soloists were Miss Cecilia Gray, Miss Marion Arber, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. Robert Green. Dr. Turpin accompanied on the organ.

Miss Minnie Theobald gave an interesting concert at St. James's Hall, on the 9th ult. The programme opened with Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat, played by the concert-giver and Miss Fanny Davies. Solos were also successfully rendered by Mr. Alfred Gibson and Miss Fanny Davies, and songs were contributed by Madame Ruth Lamb. Miss Minnie Theobald played a well-known canzona by Max Bruch and a minuet of Hugo Becker's, and met with much appreciation from a well-filled hall.

Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was performed by the Brockley Choral and Orchestral Society, in the Hall adjoining the Presbyterian Church, Brockley Road, on the 10th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. W. Cowper Pellatt, by whom both choir and orchestra had been efficiently trained. The soloists were Miss Annie Swinfen, Miss Emily Foxcroft, Mr. Herbert Linwood, and Mr. Wingrove Ives. Miss Edith Pellatt and Mr. John Blade presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

The Alexandra Palace will re-open for the season on Good Friday with a performance of "The Messiah" in the afternoon and a miscellaneous concert in the evening. The soloists already engaged are Madame Marie Duma, Madame Belle Cole, Madame Alice Gomez, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Charles Copland. The Palace Choral Society, which has been greatly strengthened, will, with the orchestra, number nearly 1,200 performers. Mr. George Riseley will conduct.

The Lewisham Choral Society gave a performance of Gounod's "Redemption," at St. George the Martyr, Southwark, on the 20th ult., to a large and appreciative congregation. The solo parts were ably rendered by Mrs. H. R. Oxley, Miss Muriel Heath, Miss Annie Brazil, Mr. Charles Ellison, Mr. John Sandbrook, and Mr. John Gritton. Mr. Kipps presided at the organ, which was supplemented by a small orchestra, and Mr. Frank Idle conducted.

An Eisteddfod was held at Queen's Hall on February 22 and 23. In a contest of four choirs of male voices the body known throughout the Principality as the Eryri easily gained the victory. The Falmouth Road Choir, hard pressed by the Linden Choral Society, secured the prize for mixed voices, for which four choirs competed. The adjudicators were Miss Llewela Davies, Messrs. Joseph Bennett, Emlyn Evans, H. R. Eyers, and Frye Parker.

Haydn's "Passion" Music was sung at St. Andrew's Church, Pau, Basses Pyrenées, on the 15th ult., with excellent effect, under the direction of Mr. J. Godfrey Luard. The solo parts were taken by Master Harris (of Abingdon Parish Church) and Master Harold Mitchell (one of Mr. Stedman's choir boys), and the orchestral accompaniments were played by members of the municipal orchestra. Mr. Macduff presided at the organ.

The annual service of praise of the Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London choirs took place in Finchley Presbyterian Church, on the 7th ult. The service included Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in G, Cruickshank; Garrett's "The Lord is loving," and Macfarren's "The Lord is my Shepherd." Mr. H. L. L. Middleton, organist of the church, conducted, and Mr. Sydney Baines presided at the organ.

The Wietrowetz Quartet, consisting of the Misses Gabriella Wietrowetz, Lucy Stone, Cecilia Gates, and Florence Hemmings, made its first appearance in London on the 21st ult., at the Steinway Hall, and was heard in Mozart's Quartet in E flat (No. 10), and, assisted by Mr. Leonard Borwick, in Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet in F minor (Op. 34), which were effectively rendered. Mr. Denham Price was the vocalist.

The Park (Presbyterian) Church Choral Society gave a creditable performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" in Park Church, Highbury, on February 28, under the careful direction of Mr. John Cook. The principals were Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Lilian Hall, Mr. James Gawthorp, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. Fountain Meen played the accompaniments on the organ with his customary skill.

The fourth Grand Chamber Music Festival of the Beethoven Haus Society, under the presidency of Professor Joachim, will be held at Bonn from May 7 to 11, when a number of works by Bach, Cherubini, Beethoven, and Schubert will be produced, as well as the two chamber compositions, by Herren Berger and Scholz, which were awarded a prize at the competition instituted by the Society last year.

A very successful performance of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was given by the choir of West Hampstead Congregational Church, Finchley Road, on the 21st ult., under the able direction of Mr. G. Dorrington Cunningham, organist and choirmaster of the church. The soloists were Miss Amy Sargent, Mrs. A. Williams, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, and Mr. Arthur Barlow.

The annual spring concert, given by the professional students of the London Academy of Music, took place at St. George's Hall, on the 22nd ult. A string orchestra played several pieces with effect, under the able direction of Mr. A. Pollitzer, and the various vocal and instrumental students taking part testified to the efficiency of the training received at the Institution.

At the Grocers' Company's School Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was performed, on the 25th ult., under the able direction of Mr. Ernest Newton. The solo parts were sung by E. J. Driscoll, E. M. Penn, and E. T. MacDermott, with the professional assistance of Mr. Samuel Masters, Mr. Gwillym Evans, and Mr. Daniel Price.

Mr. A. R. Gaul's "Ruth" was performed on the 15th ult., by the St. Gabriel's Choral Society, at Cricklewood, the soloists being Miss St. Clair, Miss Amy Banks, and Mr. Duncan Bernard. Miss Abel and Mr. Blockley presided respectively at the pianoforte and organ, and Mr. Fred. W. Belchamber conducted.

On Good Friday, Stainer's "Crucifixion" was announced to be sung by the combined choirs of St. James's, Sussex Gardens, and Holy Trinity, Marylebone, at the former church, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. B. Dart, with Mr. Hugh Blair at the organ.

The Bohemian Quartet party re-appeared, on the 21st ult., at St. James's Hall, and played the following quartets: Schubert in D minor, Dvorák in F (Op. 96), and Beethoven in C (Op. 59, No. 3). The second was magnificently interpreted.

M. Emile Sauret's tour through Austria, Italy, and Holland has been highly successful, and at a recent concert given at La Haye he was honoured with the presence of both the Queen and Queen Mother of Holland.

Elgar's "Banner of St. George" and Gade's "Spring's Message" were to be given at the Borough Polytechnic Institute, on the 25th ult., by the Choral and Orchestral Societies, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. B. Dart.

Mr. David Ffrangcon Davies, the well-known baritone, is about to establish a vocal academy in the Charlottenburg district of Berlin, where instruction is to be imparted in the English and German languages.

Messrs. Obach and Co., of Cockspur Street, have issued a new portrait of Robert Schumann, taken in 1840, shortly after his marriage with Clara Wieck.

Mr. W. Lyle Biggs has been appointed conductor of the choral and orchestral classes at Ruskin Hall, Oxford.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Berlin. — The Philharmonic orchestra, with Herr Nikisch at its head, will shortly start upon a concert tour in Russia.——Perosi's oratorio "The Resurrection of Lazarus" was produced on the 6th ult., by the choral and orchestral members of the Royal Opera, under Dr. Muck's direction, without producing a very marked impression.——An interesting concert was given, on February 27, by the united Wagner societies of Berlin and Potsdam, under Herr Sucher's direction, when the works produced included Liszt's symphonic poem "Hunnenschlacht." Frau Rosa Sucher, the famous interpreter of Wagnerian heroines, was greeted with a perfect storm of applause. ——Mr. Eugene d'Albert's new one-act opera, "Die Abreise," was produced for the first time at the Royal Opera, on February 24, and very favourably received.——At the West-end Theatre, Ignaz Brüll's comic opera "Der Husar" was brought out last month, with considerable success.—— The Stern'sche Conservatorium, one of the chief music teaching institutions in the capital, has just removed to a spacious new building, forming part of the "Philharmonie," and has signalised the event by a series of dedicatory performances held in its new quarters.

Bremen.—At the ninth Philharmonic concert of the season, last month, the programme included an excellent performance of Liszt's "Tasso" and Beethoven's Second Symphony, the conductor being Herr A. Weber, of Augsburg. Miss Leonora Jackson was enthusiastically applauded in the Violin Concerto in D by Brahms and the Hungarian airs by Ernst.

Brussels.—The choice collection of ancient musical instruments and valuable autographs of the late César Snoeck is to be purchased by the Belgian Government and will be transferred to the Museum of the Royal Conservatoire. The latter Institution, already so rich in ancient and historically interesting instruments, will then be the possessor of an altogether unique collection.

Christiania.—The Norwegian Government has made a grant of 1,000 crowns to the composer Catharinus Elbing, in order to enable him to continue his already very successful efforts in collecting old Norwegian folk-songs.

Darmstadt.—Wagner's "Nibelungen" tetralogy was given here last month, without any curtailment whatever, under the able conductorship of Herr W. de Haan and in the presence of a very numerous audience.

Dresden.—The first performance in Germany of Don Lorenzo Perosi's oratorio "The Raising of Lazarus" took place on Ash Wednesday, with the co-operation of the Royal orchestra, the choristers of the Opera and of the Hofkirche, and eminent solo vocalists, Herr von Schuch being the conductor. The work, which had been most carefully prepared, met with a somewhat cold reception.——According to the recently issued annual report the number of pupils at the Royal Conservatorium during the past academical year was 1,200, the largest of any similar institution in Germany.

Düsseldorf.—The municipal authorities have voted the necessary funds for the erection of monuments to Mendelssohn and to his friend, the poet Immermann, whose statues are to be placed in front of the principal entrance of the Stadt-Theater.

Frankfort-on-Main.—The first complete performance in Germany of Humperdinck's "Maurische Rhapsodie" was given by the Museum Society, under Herr Kogel's direction, last month, and received with great favour. At the succeeding Museum concert a highly interesting feature was the initial performance of Richard Strauss's new symphonic poem "Heldenleben." The Museum orchestra gave an excellent rendering of the difficult work, under the composer's direction, and the reception accorded to it by the numerous audience was a most favourable one.

Geneva.—A new three-act comic opera, entitled "La Cour des Bossus," was brought out with great success at the Municipal Theatre, on the 2nd ult. The composer is M. Colo-Bonnet, and the very clever and amusing libretto is from the pen of M. Ernest Chambéry.

Leipzig.—Herr Heinrich Zöllner, the newly appointed director of the University Choral Society, at the first concert conducted by him, on February 26, achieved a brilliant success with his secular oratorio "Columbus." The membership of this old-established Society has considerably increased since the accession of the new conductor.——At the Gewandhaus concert of the 9th ult., under the conductorship of Herr Nikisch, Verdi's new "Stabat Mater" and "Te Deum" were given for the first time and created a marked impression.

Madrid.—Four complete performances of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" are to be given, between the 10th inst. and May 10, at the Royal Theatre, under the direction respectively of Dr. Hans Richter, Herr Felix Mottl, and Dr. Muck, of Berlin. The performances will be in the Spanish language (Señor Cadanus's version).

Mannheim.—An excellent and highly appreciated performance of Berlioz's "Les Troyens" was given on February 29, at the Court Theatre, by the members of the Carlsruhe Theatre, under Herr Mottl's conductorship, and with Mesdames Mottl and Meilhac and Herr Gerhäuser in leading parts.

Marseilles.—A symphonic poem by Philipp Scharwenka, entitled "Traum und Wirklichkeit," was produced with great success at one of the Concerts Classiques, under the direction of M. Borelli, last month. The Pianoforte Trio in C sharp minor, by the same composer, was likewise most favourably received.

Milan.—Méhul's evergreen opera "Joseph," which had been completely unknown here, was brought out at the Lirico last month, with great success.

Munich.—The tenth concert of the season of the Kaim orchestra, under Herr Weingartner's direction, last month, included the "Academical" Overture by Brahms, Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture, and Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. Herr Siegmund von Hausegger, the composer of the successful opera "Zinnober," gave a concert on the 3rd ult., with the co-operation of the Kaim orchestra, in which he introduced a new orchestral work from his own pen, entitled "Dionysische Phantasie," which gained the entire favour of the audience.——A young English baritone, Mr. Edward Rea, gave his first recital recently with considerable success.——Some interesting concerts are being given just now by Herr Carl Straube, organist of the Cathedral at Wesel, illustrative of the development of organ music from the sixteenth century to the present day. The concerts are attracting numerous audiences.

Prague.—A new fairy opera, entitled "Das Glück," by the well-known Prague composer Rudolph von Procházka, was brought out on February 29, at the German Theatre, with great success. The music is characteristic and original, while the libretto, by Dr. Kirchner, is likewise very effective.

St. Petersburg.—Professor Xaver Scharwenka is giving a series of recitals in the principal Russian towns. The excellent pianist-composer, who but recently returned from a prolonged sojourn in the United States, is meeting everywhere with a most enthusiastic reception.

The Hague.—M. Jan Blockx's "Heerberg-princes" was given for the first time at the Royal French Opera, on February 24. The composer, who conducted, was almost overwhelmed with demonstrations of public favour.

Venice.—The death-anniversary of Richard Wagner (February 13) was commemorated in a special manner. A performance of selections from his music was given by the municipal orchestra, in St. Mark's Square, in the vicinity of the Palazzo Vendramin, where the master drew his last breath seventeen years ago. A marble bust of Wagner was unveiled in the vestibule of the Teatro Fenice, and a special performance of "Die Walküre" was given in the same theatre, under the direction of Signor Vitale.

Vienna.—Anton Bruckner's Sixth Symphony was produced for the first time in its entirety at the seventh Philharmonic concert last month, under Herr Mahler's direction, and enthusiastically received. The concert also included Schubert's seldom-heard Overture to "Die Zauberharfe." Lorenzo Perosi's oratorio "The Resurrection of Lazarus" was performed for the first time on the 13th ult., by the choral forces of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde and the Philharmonic orchestra, the solos being rendered by Italian singers associated with the principal Italian performances of the work. Herr Mahler conducted and there was a very distinguished audience, who received the work, on the whole, favourably. The performance is to be repeated in Easter week, when the composer will be present.

OBITUARY.

We regret to record the death of Dr. Walter Hay Sangster, which occurred, after a short illness, on the 2nd ult., at Eastbourne. Born in London, September 17, 1835, he became a chorister of the Temple Church under Dr. E. J. Hopkins. He was organist successively of Christ Church, Ealing; the English Ambassador's Chapel, Berlin; All Saints', Finchley Road; St. James's, Weybridge; St. Michael's, Paddington; and for many years of St. Saviour's, Eastbourne, where he raised the musical services to a very high degree of excellence. Dr. Sangster, who took his degree at Oxford in 1877, was greatly respected in Eastbourne. He composed a dramatic cantata, "The Scottish Chief," and other works, both vocal and instrumental.

The death is announced of the Rev. John Robert Lunn, for thirty-five years rector of Marton-cum-Grafton, Yorkshire. He was born March 8, 1831, and educated at King Edward VI.'s Grammar School at Birmingham, among his contemporaries being Archbishop Benson and Bishop Lightfoot. He came out as a fourth Wrangler at St. John's, Cambridge, of which he was a Fellow. He was an active parish priest, but was best known as a very able musician. He became organist of Edgbaston Church when only fifteen. While at Cambridge he was President of the University Musical Society, and he was the first Englishman to play Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto (Cambridge, 1862). Once after attending a performance of "Elijah" at Birmingham, in 1847, conducted by Mendelssohn himself, he returned home and wrote down from memory "Cast thy burden," and received a letter in commendation thereof from Mendelssohn. He was a brilliant performer on the pianoforte, and a great disciple of Bach in this country.

John Liddell, musical director of the well-known band which plays at most of the social gatherings given by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, died in Dublin on February 25, in his seventieth year. Mr. Liddell was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, received his early musical education from Charles d'Albert, and went to Dublin in 1865. He was the first conductor of the orchestra in the Gaiety Theatre, and in 1867 was appointed musical director of the Viceregal band. His band soon became famous for its interpretation of dance music, and its services were in constant request at fashionable entertainments in Dublin and throughout Ireland. Mr. Liddell possessed the irritability as well as the talent of the artist, and many stories are told of his independent behaviour towards his patrons.

John Norman, a much respected musician of Chatham, died there on February 27, aged seventy-three years. Born at Carlisle in 1825, Mr. Norman was the first organ teacher of the late W. T. Best. After holding a lay-clerkship in Carlisle and Rochester Cathedrals, he was organist of several churches in Chatham and the neighbourhood, and finally at the Dockyard Chapel, which post he held for thirty-one years.

The death is announced, on February 24, at Graz, where he held a professorship of musical history and theory, of Dr. Friedrich von Hausegger, aged sixty-two. The deceased was a distinguished author on subjects relating to the art, his volume entitled "Die Musik als Ausdruck" (written in opposition to Dr. Hanslick's theories) created quite a sensation in German musical circles at the time of its appearance, while his "Wagner und Schopenhauer" and "Das Jenseits des Künstlers" have likewise been very widely read.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A CORRECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—My attention has been specially drawn by Dr. Swinnerton Heap to the paragraph in your issue of November last (p. 715), wherein it is stated that I was elected Mendelssohn Scholar in 1865. The event connected with the Scholarship Competition happened so long ago and when I was very young; but throughout my life I have always been under the impression that I should have been elected had my parents consented to one condition—viz., that my musical studies should be placed entirely under the control of the Scholarship Committee.

The statement that I was actually elected to the Scholarship is incorrect, and therefore to Dr. Heap undoubtedly belongs all the honour of having gained the Mendelssohn Scholarship in 1865. No one regrets more than I that the slightest doubt should have been thrown on this fact.—I am, yours, &c.,

Frederic H. Cowen.

73, Hamilton Terrace, N.W.
March 22, 1899.

[We share in the regret expressed by Mr. Cowen in the above letter.—Ed., M.T.]

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Bedford.—An excellent rendering of Gounod's "Redemption" was given by the members of Mr. H. T. Tiltman's Choral Class, on the 17th ult., in St. Martin's Church. The principal vocalists were Mrs. H. T. Tiltman, Miss Alice Coleman, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, and Mr. Reginald Chalcraft. Dr. Harding presided at the organ, and Mr. H. T. Tiltman conducted.

Bournemouth.—At the Symphony concert given in the Winter Gardens, on the 6th ult., a first performance was given, under the able direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, Jun., of a Symphony (No. 1, in E major) by Mr. T. Arthur Burton. Also another new work, a Rhapsody by Mr. W. H. Speer, under his own conductorship, was given on the 9th ult. and well received.

Brighton.—The Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society gave a satisfactory rendering of Handel's "Joshua" on February 23, under the conductorship of Mr. Taylor. The solos were taken by Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Arthur Barlow, and Mr. James Gawthrop, with great acceptance.

Chelmsford.—The Musical Society, now in its seventeenth season, gave a performance of Handel's oratorio "Samson," on the 20th ult. The soloists were Miss Emily

Davies, Madame Annie Layton, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Mansell Lewis. The band and chorus numbered over 100 performers. Mr. G. H. Wilby was the principal violinist, Mr. F. E. Swan accompanied, and Mr. F. R. Frye was the conductor.

Chesterfield.—The Chesterfield Harmonic Society gave a very successful performance of Sir Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," at the Stephenson Memorial Hall, on the 14th ult. The performance reflected great credit upon Mr. G. A. Seed, the able conductor, and his well-trained choristers.

Chigwell.—Maunder's "Penitence, Pardon and Peace" was sung in Chigwell Church, by the special choir (numbering seventy voices), at a Lenten service on the 12th ult. Mr. Henry Riding conducted.

Chorlton-cum-Hardy (Manchester).—The choir and choral society in connection with the Macfadyn Congregational Church gave its second concert of the season on Wednesday, the 15th ult., when Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was admirably rendered. The soloists were Miss Clara Broadbent, Madame Louie Turner, Mr. Thurgate Simpson, and Mr. Charles Walton. Miss Edith Street proved an efficient accompanist, and Mr. G. F. Walter, the organist and choirmaster of the church, ably conducted.

Cleckheaton.—On the 8th ult. the Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society gave a concert in the Town Hall, which proved highly satisfactory, under the able baton of Mr. Walter H. Wright. Berlioz's "Faust" was performed with Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. Charles Saunders as soloists. The whole performance reflected great credit on all concerned.

Coventry.—A performance of Facer's new cantata "The Pilgrim Fathers" was given by the Coventry and District Nonconformist Choir Union, in the Corn Exchange, on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. Charles Matthews. The chorus numbered 150 and the band thirty. The soloists were Miss Annie Smart, Miss Florrie Cooper, Mr. T. Bennett Griffin, and Mr. John Chapman, all of whom sang the parts allotted to them with great success. The choral numbers were splendidly sung. The programme also included Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture and Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in A (No. 23), the solo in which was beautifully played by Mr. W. Aubrey Edwards. The performance was much enjoyed by a crowded audience.

Cupar-Fife.—The choir of St. James's Episcopal Church gave a very fine performance of Stainer's "Crucifixion" on the 19th ult. The parts were well balanced and the choruses effectively sung. The principal solos were sung by Mr. D. Ainslie Duncan and Mr. Charles C. Scott. The minor parts were ably taken by Messrs. John and George Courts, Mr. Robin Robertson, and Mr. Duncan. Mr. Edward R. Broome officiated at the organ. ——The Cupar Choral Union gave the "Erl-King's Daughter" and "Joan of Arc," in the Corn Exchange, on the 17th ult. The chorus, which numbered upwards of seventy voices, was splendidly supported by Cole's celebrated Glasgow band. Miss Annie B. Carswell sang the soprano solos with marked acceptance, and Dr. Sneddon gave a powerful rendering of the bass solos. Miss Bannerman Starhn and Miss Starras presided alternately at the pianoforte with conspicuous ability, while Mr. Edward R. Broome played the harmonium skilfully. The conductor of the Society, Mr. George H. Crookes, is to be congratulated on a very successful performance.

Dawley (Shropshire).—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of the "Creation" in the Town Hall on February 28, before a large audience. The principals were Miss Lizzie Matthews, Mr. William Anstice, and Mr. W. J. Ineson. The choruses were admirably sung, and the band was ably led by Mr. T. Watkis. The second part included a violin solo, brilliantly played by Miss Mabel Brittain, and a violoncello solo by Mr. Dysche, whilst the band delighted the audience by its excellent playing of German's "Henry VIII." Dances. Mr. James Smart was an efficient conductor, and Mr. Frank T. Watkis was the accompanist.

Dumfries.—The Dumfries Choral Society gave a fine rendering of Gounod's "Redemption" on the 8th ult. The soloists were Miss Jacques, Miss Kay, Mr. T. H. Brearley, and Mr. John Browning. Mr. Law Starkey conducted with marked ability.

Dysart.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "St Paul," in the Normand Memorial Hall, on the 22nd ult. An efficient orchestra, led by Mr. J. F. Guyer, played the accompaniments. The soloists were Miss Ella Westwood, Miss Mary Latta, Mr. W. S. Hamilton, and Mr. A. C. Richard. Mr. James Gray conducted.

Fortrose.—The Fortrose and Rosemarkie Choral Union gave a highly creditable performance of Handel's "Messiah" in the Volunteer Hall, on the 10th ult. The soloists were Miss Boyd, Miss Watt, Miss Kate Fraser, Mr. J. Mackenzie, and Mr. Alexander Sinclair. Miss Hodgson and Miss Rose Mackenzie accompanied on the pianoforte and organ respectively. Mr. John Mackenzie was an efficient conductor.

Gravesend.—Mr. Howard Moss, organist of the Parish Church, gave a lecture on "Mozart, his life and works," on the 2nd ult., in connection with the Gravesend and Milton Literary and Debating Society. The lecturer was assisted in the illustrations by Miss Bertha Acworth, Miss C. Cooper, Miss Mabel Boorman, Miss M. L. Goddard, Miss Daisy Nicolls, Miss Alice Hendry, Mr. Harry Dean, Mr. Roland Essenhigh, Mr. N. Fletcher, Mr. A. J. Mann, Mr. D. J. Williams, and Mr. C. Burrows Moss.

Harrow.—A very successful performance of Haydn's "Creation" was given by the Harrow and Greenhill Choral Society, before a crowded audience, on the 14th ult., in the Victoria Hall, Greenhill. The solo parts were well rendered by Madame Zippora Monteith, Mr. Avalon Collard, and Mr. Daniel Price. Mr. Alfred Gurney, organist of Harrow Parish Church, conducted, and Miss Staveley Brown and Mr. C. Russell Kemshead presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

Hebden Bridge.—On February 28 the Hebden Bridge Choral and Harmonic Society gave its last concert of the season. Sullivan's Te Deum and Cowen's "St. John's Eve" were successfully performed, with Miss Clara Broadbent, Miss Mattie Fish, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Roland Hoyle as soloists. Mr. John Bowling was the able conductor.

High Barnet.—On the 2nd ult. a praiseworthy sacred concert was given in the Congregational Church, under the able leadership of Mr. G. Herbert Parker. Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," and "Hear my Prayer" were creditably rendered, Miss Kate Cherry taking the solo in the latter work. Mr. Herbert Hilton presided at the organ.

Leamington.—The Harmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. A. E. Gibbs, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," on the 7th ult., when the large Hall was well filled. The concert was a success both musically and financially. The vocalists were Madame Lilla Harrison, Miss Florence Bulleid, Mr. Faithful Pearce, and Mr. Samuel Heath. The Society has now commenced to rehearse Handel's "Israel in Egypt."

Llandovery.—The Choral Society, on the 2nd ult., gave Barnby's "Rebekah" in the Drill Hall. The solos were well rendered by Miss S. M. Lewis and Mr. Burry Morse. Miss Hardwicke presided at the pianoforte and Miss Saunders Thomas at the organ. This capital performance was under the able conductorship of Mr. William Williams.

Loughborough.—A successful concert was given, on the 14th ult., by the Loughborough Musical Society, in the Town Hall. The works performed were Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, "Gloria," by De Lisle, and "The Ancient Mariner," by John Francis Barnett. The solos were ably sustained by Miss Nellie Palmer, Miss Palmer, Mr. H. Stubbs, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Dr. Briggs conducted with his customary ability.

Melbourne (Australia).—The monthly concerts of the Musical Society of Victoria were resumed after the Midsummer holidays, on February 4, at Glen's Concert Room.

The pièce de resistance was Grieg's Sonata in C minor (Op. 45) for pianoforte and violin, excellently played by Messrs. M. Alexander and H. Curtis. The same composer's Fantaisie for pianoforte duet was played by Messrs. Hasler and Hunter. Mr. E. Armes Beaumont gave artistic renderings of Beethoven's "Adelaide" and Schubert's "Serenade." Miss Mary Anderson was heard in Saint-Saëns's transcription of ballet airs from Gluck's "Alceste," and violin solos were performed by Mr. Victor Zelman. The president, Mr. E. A. Jäger, announced the intention of the Society to offer a prize of ten guineas for a string quartet, open to composers resident in the Colony.

Monymusk (Aberdeenshire). — A very interesting, instructive, and practical lecture on J. S. Bach was given in the quiet country village of Monymusk (eighteen miles from Aberdeen), on February 23, by the Rev. J. D. Sinclair, United Presbyterian Minister of Midmar, who played several preludes and fugues, also dances by the great master, as illustrations of his subject. Solos were sung from the "Christmas" oratorio and from the St. Matthew "Passion" Music. "My heart ever faithful," with violin obbligato and pianoforte accompaniment, was also sung. With the exception of the violinist, all the executants were local, and there was a large and very attentive audience. The Rev. J. D. Sinclair has been doing good work in teaching the country people to appreciate and understand classical music for some years by similar lectures, and his profound admiration for J. S. Bach cannot fail to be inspiring.

Newbury.—On the 3rd ult., at the Lecture Hall, Northbrook Street, Mr. J. S. Liddle, the conductor of the Newbury Amateur Orchestral Union and Newbury Choral Society, was presented with a testimonial consisting of an illuminated address and a cheque for £200 in a Russia leather wallet subscribed for by many friends as a mark of their esteem.

New Malden.—A performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given on the 14th ult., in the Parish Church, by an augmented choir of seventy voices and orchestra. The soloists were Miss Katie Smith, Miss Lilian Griffin, Mr. Aston Ramm, and Mr. J. P. Trew. Mr. A. H. Griffin presided at the organ, and Mr. James Griffin, organist of the church, conducted.

St. Helens.—The Choral Society gave its final concert of the season on the 22nd ult., in the Town Hall, when Gounod's "Redemption" was heard for the first time in this town. The soloists were Miss Mary Langdon, Mr. T. H. Brearley, and Mr. Arthur Barlow, assisted in the trios and quartets by two members of the Society, Miss Eunice Bailey and Miss Dennett. Mr. W. M. Lyon led the band, and the conductor was Mr. J. T. Elliott. The orchestral accompaniments were worthily interpreted by the band, and the chorus sang the work as if they loved it.

Scholes. — The Scholes Musical Society gave its second concert of the season in the National School on the 1st ult. The programme included Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter," which was well rendered, the principals being Miss Bertha Rigg, Madame Grew, and Mr. Ernest Turner, of Bradford, the latter giving a fine rendering of the trying music allotted to the baritone voice (Sir Oluf). Mr. H. Gomersall conducted and Mr. A. Knowles was an efficient accompanist.

Stockton-on-Tees.—On the 23rd ult. the Choral and Orchestral Society gave a highly satisfactory concert in the Borough Hall, when Beethoven's No. 1 Symphony was performed. This is the first time a symphony by the great Bonn master has been performed in this town. To Mr. Felix Cruse, the able conductor, be all due praise.

Stourbridge.—The People's Concert Society gave a concert of exceptional merit in the Town Hall on the 6th ult. Gade's cantata "Spring's Message," the Overture to Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and Schumann's "Gipsy Life" were included in the programme. Mr. George Halford conducted with great ability.

Tamworth.—The Choral Society gave a delightful concert on the 1st ult., when Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri" was admirably rendered. The solos were taken by Miss Winnifred Wynne, Miss Trubshaw Johnson, Mr. Horace Lott, and Mr. H. Hicklin. Mr. H. Rose conducted, and Mrs. H. S. Martin and Mr. J. B. Lott presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

Torquay.—The Torquay Musical Association gave a very successful choral and orchestral concert on the 11th ult., when two movements from Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Brahms's "Song of Destiny," and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" were performed. The solo in the last-named work was beautifully rendered by Mrs. Noel Monckton. Mr. T. H. Webb conducted in a praiseworthy manner.

Trowbridge.—At the Town Hall, on the 21st ult., the Trowbridge Musical Union gave a very successful concert under the direction of Mr. H. Millington. Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was performed, with Madame Zipporah Monteith, Miss Beatrice Comfort, Mr. Kelson Trueman, and Mr. Franklin Clive as soloists. Mr. L. Spackman, Mr. H. C. Millington, and Mr. J. C. Giddings presided at the pianoforte, organ, and harmonium respectively.

Walsall.—Gounod's "Redemption" was given by the members of the Philharmonic Union on the 20th ult., when the band and chorus numbered 150 performers. The soloists were Miss Ethel Holmes, Mrs. Millward, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Charles Knowles. The work received a thoroughly good rendering, both band and chorus acquitting themselves most efficiently. Dr. Swinnerton Heap conducted with his usual ability.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. C. W. W. Birch, to Bishop's Froome, Herefordshire.—Mr. W. Stewart Dove, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mark's Church, Winshill, Burton-on-Trent.—Mr. Leonard Henniker, Organist and Choirmaster to Holy Trinity Church, Ramsgate.

Choir Appointments.—Mr. F. W. Lamb (Alto), to St. Andrew's, Ashley Place.—Master Hubert Kingston (Treble), to Christ Church College and Cathedral, Oxford.

A. F. Professor of Harmony and Composition at the Royal Academy of Music.

Published under the authority of the Committee of the R.A.M.

ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. Crown 8vo, 1s.

"In the space of some fifty pages, the reader will find all that is necessary to be known about the pitch of notes, intervals, and scales, rests, time, and abbreviations; and will, we doubt not, also find how much there is of which he was ignorant concerning these subjects, although he had already flattered himself that he had mastered their elements a long time ago."—Saturday Review.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY & COUNTERPOINT.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

This work is intended to meet a growing demand for a more concise and simpler exposition of the Day theory. It includes as much of the science of Counterpoint as is necessary for students who enter for the Royal Academy, local, and other similar examinations.

NOVELLO'S

VILLAGE CHANT BOOK

No. II.
CONTAINING

50 DOUBLE CHANTS.

Price Sixpence.

The Chants contained in the above collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. II., Chant No. 23, by Lord Mornington, which is included on account of its great popularity.

BALLADE

In A minor

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 33.)

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo, 2s.
String Parts, 4s. 6d.
Wind Parts, 10s. 6d. Full Score, in the Press.

THE TIMES.

Wonderfully interesting, quite beautiful and characteristic. It is marked by the same strong instinct for beauty of tone-colouring and for characteristic turns of melody that has distinguished his work in more modest surroundings, and it is a most favourable specimen of his powers. The theme, which we should be warranted in naming the second subject, is most fascinating in its naïve beauty, and placed as it is in contrast to a strenuous and most original theme of bluff and almost savage character, it is thrown into the best light. The feeling for real effect manifested throughout the work is most remarkable, and it is no wonder that the excellent performance given by the band called forth an exceptionally hearty outburst of enthusiasm.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie led his band very brilliantly through the fiery and passionate Orchestral Ballade.... This piece certainly loses nothing by repetition. The warmth and spirit of its themes and the luxuriance of its instrumentation are in every way characteristic of modern art and latter-day freedom of expression. Thus rightly classified, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade is a fine and impressive thing, which should surely be the forerunner of much more music in the same picturesque and imaginative vein.

MORNING POST.

It is a striking work, and it possesses a masterful force and half untamed and fiery exuberance that give it memorable distinctiveness. . . . These two themes and the initial subject are treated with great skill and command of the orchestra, the work in its entirety possessing a life and individuality that fix it in the memory, and increase expectation of what its composer may write in the future.

STANDARD.

The Orchestral Ballad produced for the first time in public to-night is a remarkable and striking work, and possesses in notable degree the peculiar blending of barbaric and Western modes of expression which is so distinguishing a feature of this young composer's efforts. . . . The whole work, indeed, seems to glow with intensity and life, and it holds the attention with relentless grasp. The success of the work to-night was instantaneous.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The work occupies barely a quarter of an hour in performance, but it is long since a Festival novelty has provided fifteen minutes packed so full of excitement and charm. In its alternations of barbaric gaiety with languid swaying melody, in its wayward rhythms and strange exotic harmonies, this remarkable work provokes comparisons with the best work of the Bohemian school, and emerges with credit from the ordeal of comparison.

ATHENÆUM.

A short composition, yet of such vivid imagination, rich colour, and wise restraint, coupled with youthful boldness, that it is a forecast of a great and brilliant career—if only health and strength continue, and if Mr. Taylor escapes from the many dangers which beset a rising artist. The composer at the close of the performance was received with marked enthusiasm.

CARACTACUS

A CANTATA

For Soprano, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra

THE WORDS WRITTEN FOR MUSIC BY

H. A. ACWORTH, C.I.E.

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Vocal Score, Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 5s.; String Parts (in the Press); Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.; Vocal Parts, each 1s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Elgar's music has the inestimable merit that it seldom, if ever, conveys even a momentary suggestion of any other composer's work. All that he has to say is his own. . . . In some respects the representative themes, of which there are quite a formidable number, are treated with great skill and originality, and as each scene is worked up to its logical climax, so the series grows in interest up to the most beautiful point in the composition, a "lament" in which the voice of the defeated king is supported by the choir in a movement of such poignant expression and such sincerely-felt emotion that the fact of its being in the strange rhythm of seven crotchets in a bar is quite forgotten.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In "Caractacus" we find music that interests no less deeply than it charms, and for the most part these two qualities run side by side. . . . For the present I can do no less than offer sincere compliments to an English composer who speaks with so strong and commanding a voice.

THE STANDARD.

In "Caractacus" we have a work of which it may be said without the slightest hesitation that it is one of the greatest honours to English musical art that has been produced for many years. The wealth of melody in the score from the first bar to the last never fails, and it is ever fresh and unlaboured.

DAILY MAIL.

The cantata was received with enthusiasm and at the close the composer was recalled. The work is at once modern and original. There is a wealth of melody, and the barbaric grandeur of the triumphal procession through the streets of Rome is worthy of a Berlioz or a Wagner.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Elgar obviously knows how to interest the general public without sacrificing a whit of his musicianship. He is a melodist and a master of picturesque orchestral writing, while his choral workmanship, without being pedantic, is usually highly effective.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Mr. Elgar's musical personality is one to reckon with as a fact in art. He is academic in the excellent sense that he allows a real character, a genuine temperament, to be guided by the influence of the best masters; and he is wise to keep himself free from personal eccentricities, while at the same time fully giving the rein to his personal accomplishments. The result is that we get something so new in English music that one naturally hails it with respect and avowed expectation.

YORKSHIRE POST.

In the refreshing vigour of the music, the extraordinary grip of the orchestra, the mastery over all its resources, the keen appreciation of its colour, Mr. Elgar is quite supreme among our composers, and the freedom and force of his writing for the band are indeed remarkable. He is, however, not only capable of energetic effects, he can also give expression to extreme tenderness.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
MAY 1, 1899.

THE REV. DR. TROUTBECK.

Precentor of Westminster.

The office of Precentor is the oldest in Cathedral establishments. It existed in the monasteries long before the time of Deans and Chapters. The literal meaning of the word, in its original Latin form, Præcentor, is best defined by old Bishop Cooper in his celebrated "Thesaurus," 1565.

> Præcentor, præcentōris. He that singeth firste. A chaunter in a quiere.

The earliest mention of the office is in the fourth century, when it appears that in many churches one singer, the præcentor or pronuntiator, recited the first half of a verse and the people took up the rest. In later times, as in the present day, the Precentor is officially charged with the conduct of the musical part of Divine service. In the monastic period, however, the Precentor's duties were multifarious and decidedly diversified. He was chief librarian, registrar, secretary of the seal; he registered obits, regulated processions of the order of the monks, ordered the monthly shavings (!), had charge of the charters, sent out briefs announcing the demise of a brother, gave out the books; he "noted the chants and ministers, presided over the carols and studies, and rode with the young monks going to be ordained." He had also to find all the ink used and all colour required for illumination, the materials for book-binding, and, moreover, he had to keep the organs in repair.

A PRECENTOR IN THE OLDEN TIMES.

The office of Precentor, which was a very important one in olden times, was founded at Exeter, Salisbury, York, and Lincoln Cathedrals in the eleventh century; at Chichester, Wells, Lichfield, and Hereford in the twelfth century; and at St. Paul's in the reign of King John. "In cathedrals of the old foundation in England," says Walcott, "the Precentor gave the note at mass to the bishop and dean, as the succentor did to the canons and clerks. He superintended the admission of members of the choir, and tabled their names for the weekly course on waxen tablets. He corrected and had charge of the choir books. At Exeter he installed canons, at York the Dean and dignitaries, and at Lichfield the Bishop and dignitaries. On great feasts he 'ruled the choir,' when two canons, robed in the red soutane (cassock) were the chanters, whom he followed up and down the choir, regulating the officers, and overseeing the service, clad in rochet and cope, and holding a staff in his hand, which was gloved and ornamented with a ring. He further observed that the choir sang with proper modulation, and that various and proper chants, according to the day and festival, were used."

The Precentor had also to present offenders to the Dean and Chapter for "correction." For instance, the interesting records of Lincoln Cathedral show that an inebriated organist, of the name of Mudd, was thus "presented," presumably for punishment, by the Precentor to the Dean in the following letter dated March 14, $166\frac{2}{3}$: "Mr. Mudd hath been so debauched these Assizes, and hath so abused Mr. Derby [the organ builder] that he will hardly be persuaded to stay to finish his worke unlesse Mudd bee removed. And I have stuck in the same Mudd too; for he hath abused me above hope of Pardon. I wish you would be pleased to send us downe an able and more civill organist."

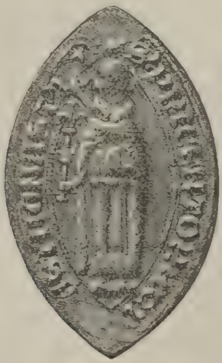
AN ABSENT PRECENTOR.

In English cathedrals of the old foundation the Precentor ranked next to the Dean. His stall in the choir was on the opposite side to that of the Dean, hence the terms Decani and Cantoris. Although the Precentor showed no disposition to eschew the emoluments of the office—which were not inconsiderable—he did not always perform its duties, they being discharged by the Succentor. St. Paul's Cathedral, being one of those of the old foundation, furnishes a case in point, and one that is not without its humorous side. The late Precentor of St. Paul's—the Rev. Charles Almeric Belli, who died in 1886—held the office for upwards of half-a-century; but he very rarely, if ever, put in an appearance at the Cathedral! In fact, it is said that the features of Precentor Belli were so little known to the vergers, that when he sought to enter St. Paul's on the occasion of the funeral of the Duke of Wellington, in 1852, he was politely refused admittance. It is no wonder, therefore, that Sidney Smith designated this Precentor the Absentor!

Amongst Cathedral Precentors who have been known to posterity as composers may be mentioned the following:—Robert Creyghton (1639-1733), of Wells; William Mason (1724-1797), of York, composer of "Lord of all power and might"; George Croke Rowden (1820-1863), of Chichester; John Bacchus Dykes (1823-1876), of Durham; and last, but not least, Frederick Arthur Gore Ouseley (1825-1889), of Hereford.

THE PRECENTOR OF WESTMINSTER'S SEAL.

An interesting relic of the Precentor of Westminster on the Confessor's foundation has recently been discovered by Mr. Edward Scott, Keeper of the Manuscripts in the British Museum, who is now examining and classifying the ancient documents belonging to the Abbey, and preserved in the muniment room. Attached to a deed bearing the date A.D. 1302 is the seal of the Precentor. By the kind permission of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster we are enabled to give an exact reproduction of this seal. The figure in relief is that of the Precentor, who holds in his hand a staff surmounted by a dove.



The Precentor of Westminster whose image adorns this seal is unknown to us. He was doubtless a very estimable man, but not more so than the present holder of the ancient office, as refounded by Queen Elizabeth at the close of the monastic period of the Abbey, and who worthily maintains the best traditions of the Precentorship — the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck, a sketch of whose career here followeth.

THE TROUTBECK FAMILY.

John Troutbeck was born at Blencowe, Cumberland, November 12, 1832. The family name is derived from the village of Troutbeck—literally, "a trout stream"—close to Windermere. It is one of the most ancient families in England, as there is evidence that the Troutbecks existed in Westmorland in the reign of Edward III. They can be subsequently traced at Chester, where, at the church of St. Mary-on-the-Hill, there is a Troutbeck chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, built by William Troutbeck, of Dunham, in the first quarter of the fifteenth century. William Troutbeck, who was Serjeant of the Bridgegate, Chester, is stated to have led the Cheshire archers at the Battle of Agincourt. He was Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster early in the reign of Henry VI. This branch of the Troutbeck family ended in the sixteenth century with Margaret, the only daughter and heiress of Sir Adam Troutbeck, who married Sir John Talbot, of Grafton, and through whom the Troutbeck estates passed to the Talbot family.

In 1846, at the age of fourteen, the subject of this sketch went to Rugby, being placed in the "upper fourth." When first he saw his form master, how little the boy could have foretold their subsequent relationships! The whirligig of time causes strange things to come to pass. Troutbeck's master was the Rev. George Granville Bradley, the present Dean of Westminster. From Rugby, Troutbeck proceeded to University College, Oxford, in 1852. He took his Bachelor of Arts degree in January, 1856, and that of Master of Arts two years later. In 1855 he was ordained to the curacy of St. Cuthbert's, Wells, Somerset. The Dean of Wells (Dean Johnson) was the vicar of the parish.

A COUNTRY CLERGYMAN.

In January, 1859, Dr. Troutbeck changed the scene of his clerical labours from South to North upon becoming Vicar of Dacre, near Ullswater. The living, which was in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, had been held by his (Dr. Troutbeck's) maternal grandfather for forty-seven years; but this was a mere coincidence, and had nothing to do with the preferment of the curate of Wells. At Dacre Church the music was somewhat primitive, though none the less hearty or sincere. The young vicar found a violin and violoncello—the only instrumental aid—"in full swing." When, later on, he introduced a harmonium, the natives had never in their lives seen such an instrument. Two village carpenters, however, soon set about learning to play upon it, and in four months they accomplished their self-imposed task entirely unaided.

MANCHESTER.

After five years of parish work in the quiet seclusion of the Lake district, Dr. Troutbeck experienced a marked change in his surroundings upon being appointed a Minor Canon of Manchester Cathedral in 1864. The Cathedral of Manchester had from 1422 been a Collegiate church, with its Warden, four Fellows, and two Chaplains, who became respectively Dean, Canons, and Minor Canons. In the process of transformation, however, the Minor Canons—of whom there were two—retained the Chaplains' duties, and thus they were practically the incumbents of the parish. As such, the Minor Canons in turn presided at Vestry meetings.

The post of Minor Canon at Manchester was no sinecure—in fact, "the week on duty" was the lighter week of the two by reason of its comparative freedom from parochial work. The parish had a population of from 11,000 to 12,000 people; but all the residents of the ancient parish of Manchester could then claim the right to be married in the Cathedral—a right of which they were not slow to avail themselves.

A year after his appointment as Minor Canon Dr. Troutbeck became Precentor of Manchester Cathedral—thus he has had long and varied experience of that office. The organist at that time was Joseph John Harris, who was succeeded in 1869 by "a young man from the country"—stated to be "the youngest Cathedral organist of the time"—John Frederick Bridge by name, who was selected and recommended to the Chapter for appointment by Dr. Troutbeck.

WESTMINSTER.

The attractions of Westminster Abbey soon afterwards drew the Precentor away from Manchester. The date of his appointment to a Minor Canonry at Westminster was December 16, 1869, and therefore he has been connected with the venerable fane for nearly thirty years. In length of active service he is the senior of the Abbey clergy. Upon the death of the Rev. S. Flood Jones, in 1895, Dr. Troutbeck was appointed Precentor of Westminster, which office he so worthily holds and upholds.

As Precentor, Dr. Troutbeck is of course at the head of the choir, and is responsible to the Dean and Chapter for the conduct of the service; the organist, Sir Frederick Bridge, being responsible, as he should be, for the musical training of the choristers, and the proper rendering of the music. The choice of the music rests entirely in the hands of the Precentor, and he draws up the service lists. He also sees that the attendances of the choir are taken, and he is present at the choir practices. But he has duties other than those strictly appertaining to the music. He has to remind the various preachers at the Abbey of their engagements by posting to each of those appointed preachers the printed monthly list. The inferior officers of the Abbey are under the control of the Precentor as such, and, therefore, as Dr. Troutbeck remarks, "pleasant as the work is, there is a good deal to think of and attend to."

Recalling his earliest recollections of the Abbey, the Precentor speaks of the "enormous improvement" in regard to the welfare and upbringing of the choristers. "When I first came here, nearly thirty years ago," he says, "I confess I was shocked at the educational condition of the choristers. Now, thanks to the Dean and Chapter, we have an excellent choir school, at which our twenty-four boys live under the charge of a well qualified master; their education and management being under the general supervision and control of the Precentor. Yes, the improvement in their condition is enormous."

THE NEW TESTAMENT REVISION COMMITTEE.

Soon after Dr. Troutbeck had become Minor Canon of Westminster he was appointed to the important post of secretary to the New Testament Revision Committee, which met monthly in the Jerusalem Chamber from June, 1870 to 1881. It is characteristic of his energy and earnest devotion to duty that he attended every meeting of the Revisers except one, from which he was unavoidably obliged to be absent. "I can never forget," he says, "the lessons of those eleven years, which vibrate in the memory, though all but four or five of that illustrious company have passed away." The degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him by Archbishop Benson in 1884—the first distinction of the kind bestowed by that prelate—was a worthy recognition of excellent work and faithful service as secretary to the Revision Committee. He is a Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen (1889), and for fifteen years he was on the board of examiners in religious knowledge for the training schools.

LITERARY LABOURS.

As an author Dr. Troutbeck has confined himself entirely to literature connected with music. While at Manchester he published "The Manchester Psalter" (1868), which is still in use there, and which was followed, in 1871, by "The Manchester Chant Book." Two years later he collaborated with the Rev. Reginald F. Dale in a "Music Primer for Schools," which forms one of the "Clarendon Press Series." This little book, prepared with a view of leading up to Ouseley's books, still finds constituents. In the same year (1873) the "Cathedral Psalter" was issued, of which Dr. Troutbeck was one of the editors. His co-editors were Precentor Flood Jones (his predecessor at Westminster), James Turle, Sir Joseph Barnby, and Sir John Stainer—thus only two of that editorial quintet are left to tell the tale of the preparation of that extraordinarily successful Psalter. "Church Choir Training" (No. 13 of Novello's Music Primers) was issued in 1879. This concise treatise contains many hints of undoubted value to choirmasters and choristers; moreover, the Appendices are exceedingly useful. Dr. Troutbeck has left a permanent mark on the musical services at the Abbey in his editorship of "The Westminster Abbey Hymn Book," of which the words edition was issued in 1883 and its musical complement (edited in collaboration with Sir Frederick Bridge) followed in 1897. The practical interest he has taken in the subject of chanting found ample scope in his editorship of "The Cathedral Paragraph Psalter" (1894), in which painstaking musicianship and rhetorical acumen are happily combined. "The Westminster Abbey Chant Book," also edited by him and Sir Frederick Bridge, forms a natural complement to the Psalter.

HIS WORK AS A TRANSLATOR.

Thus far we have only referred to Dr. Troutbeck's contributions to church music. His name is perhaps even more widely known as a translator of the librettos of foreign musical compositions. In past times the difficult work of translation has too often furnished a fine field for the operations of the mere hack translator—if, indeed, he can be called a "translator"—the manufacturer of dull doggerel: he who has not the slightest hesitation in sacrilegiously cutting up a minim into four quavers if it suits his syllabic purpose so to do. Dr. Troutbeck works on very different lines. He respects the musical phrases and very wisely contents himself with a version more akin to a free Anglicisation than a literal translation into our vernacular.

Dr. Troutbeck's first essay in this department of work was the English version of Bach's "St. John Passion," published by Novello in 1872. The following is an attempt at a complete list of his translations or adaptations, which, in addition to showing his industry in this direction, may be useful for the purposes of reference :—

Asked as to his views upon church music and its interpretation, Dr. Troutbeck replies that they are entirely in accordance with those of John Henry Newman, as expressed in the following extract from his sermon on "Development":—

"Let us take an instance, of an outward and earthly form, or economy, under which great wonders unknown seem to be typified; I mean musical sounds, as they are exhibited most perfectly in instrumental harmony. There are seven notes in the scale; make them fourteen; yet what a slender outfit for so vast an enterprise! What science brings so much out of so little? Out of what poor elements does some great master in it create his new world? Shall we say that all this exuberant inventiveness is a mere ingenuity or trick of art, like some game or fashion of the day, without reality, without meaning? We may do so; and then, perhaps, we shall also account the science of theology to be a matter of words; yet, as there is a divinity in the theology of the Church, which those who feel cannot communicate, so is there also in the wonderful creation of sublimity and beauty of which I am speaking. To many men the very names which the science employs are utterly incomprehensible. To speak of an idea or a subject seems to be fanciful or trifling, and of the views which it opens upon us to be childish extravagance; yet is it possible that that inexhaustible evolution and disposition of notes, so rich yet so simple, so intricate yet so regulated, so various yet so majestic, should be a mere sound, which is gone and perishes? Can it be that those mysterious stirrings of heart, and keen emotions, and strange yearnings after we know not what, and awful impressions from we know not whence, should be wrought in us by what is unsubstantial, and comes and goes, and begins and ends in itself? It is not so; it cannot be. No; they have escaped from some higher sphere; they are the outpourings of eternal harmony in the medium of created sound; they are echoes from our Home; they are the voice of Angels, or the Magnificat of Saints, or the living laws of Divine Governance, or the Divine Attributes; something are they beside themselves, which we cannot compass, which we cannot utter; though mortal man, and he perhaps not otherwise distinguished above his fellows, has the gift of eliciting them."

A writer in the January Quarterly, in quoting the foregoing passage, points out that the analogy used by Newman illustrates the fact that the jealous preservation of minute formulæ may be none the less necessary because we admit that they are quite inadequate as exact expressions of the reality. The musician, because he knows that the musical mechanism is not identical with the idea it conveys, is none the less jealously careful of his technique. The greater his power of appreciating all the delicate shades and varied ideas of the music itself, the more minute will be his attendance to the elaborate arrangements on which the effect depends. To the Philistine his minuteness seems intolerably fussy. Yet what are the facts? A few instruments in the orchestra carelessly tuned, the tempo taken with no insight into the composer's intention—what slight neglect this seems to imply! What a trivial deviation from an over-elaborate scheme! How little, if anything, can be lost by so little! So argues the uninitiated. Yet, instead of the soul of the hearer being filled with the great ideas which the music should impart, he loses not some, but all. The whole spell is broken. Newman goes a step farther, and suggests that not only the impressions which music makes through the ear, but the whole of our sensible impressions and conceptions may be but tokens and symbols of reality—symbols sufficient for our practical needs, yet not adequately revealing to us the reality with which they connect us.

"J. S. B. MADE EASY."

Such is the designation which has been appropriately bestowed upon a somewhat scarce musical publication containing some curious matter of a rather startling nature. The actual title of this folio volume, consisting of twenty-one pages, is—

> Organ Voluntaries, consisting of Preludes and Fugues selected from the works of John Sebastian Bach (with such alterations, additions, and accommodations as have been deemed necessary for their general use in Churches), by George Drummond, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Organist of Paddington Church, Bayswater and Park Chapels. London [1823].

With all due respect to the memory of the late Mr. George Drummond (whose name, by the way, does not appear in the official list of University graduates), we should hardly consider his "alterations and accommodations" worthy of serious notice had they not received the imprimatur of so distinguished a musician as Dr. Crotch, Professor of Music at the University of Oxford. As a matter of fact, Dr. Crotch not only approved of Mr. Drummond's "tinkerings" of Bach, but actually suggested that they should be done! Moreover, he wrote the preface to this work, which is dated "Kensington Gravel Pits, October 24, 1823," defending and explaining the process of "J. S. B. made easy." From this preface we shall now proceed to quote.

> The present publication was undertaken by my pupil, Mr. George Drummond, at my suggestion and request; and I therefore beg leave to say a few words in explanation of the plan and in recommendation of the work.
> No idea of improving the unrivalled compositions of Sebastian Bach has been, for a moment, entertained. The simple intention, as announced in the title-page, is to render them fit for general use, as Voluntaries in Cathedrals or churches. . . .
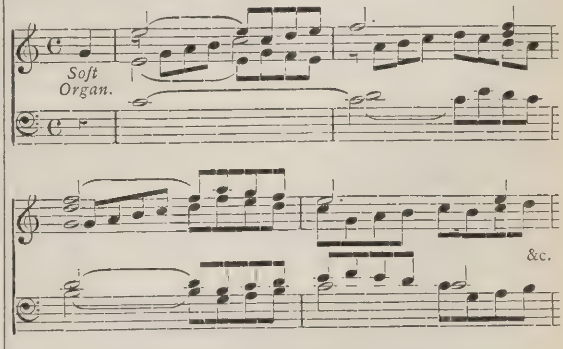
> The work from which the greater part of the present selection will be made was intended chiefly for the clavichord; and, accordingly, many of the movements are unfit for the organ, or, at least, for the church service.

Crotch presumes to say that if Bach had ever intended these compositions—i.e., the "Forty-eight"—for church use, "he would himself have made alterations in them, in a manner not altogether different from, however superior to, that here attempted." He then describes the nature of these "alterations," as he calls them, beginning with the first Prelude of the "Forty-eight," in the following words—

> Various were the unsuccessful attempts made by the Editor to render this movement fit for the intended purpose [i.e., an organ voluntary] and, at the same time, to preserve its character. When reduced to plain counterpoint it wanted melody; when played as a slow arpeggio, it became too monotonous and uniform for the ears of an ordinary congregation. The following attempt, therefore, to preserve the harmony and clothe it with a becoming melody will, it is hoped, be approved.

We give the first few bars of the first Prelude as a specimen of the manner in which Mr. Drummond has "accommodated" Bach's perfect handiwork—



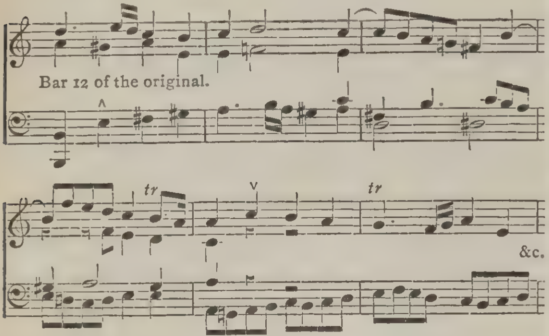
But to continue quoting from the preface—

> The notation of the Fugue has been altered from quavers and semiquavers to longer notes, both to render it more legible and to prevent its being mistaken for a piece of execution [!].

After offering what he calls "some reasons" for sundry other alterations, the Professor proceeds—

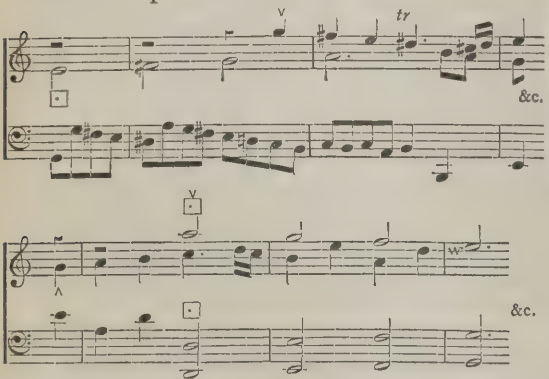
> At the twelfth bar of the original, a passage commences which is thought too difficult for the generality even of superior performers, as well as too abstruse to be generally understood and relished. A more intelligible passage has therefore been substituted.

Here is the "more intelligible passage"; but in making the comparison with the original it should be borne in mind that the notes have been doubled in length—crotchets instead of quavers, &c.



> The subject has also been used as an inversion, and, in both shapes, augmented.

Here are specimens of both—

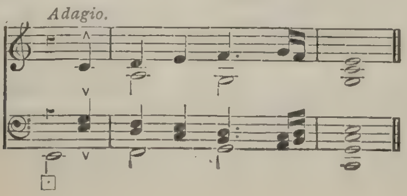


> The most striking passages, and all the latter part of the movement, except the final cadence, have been preserved entire.

This is a little more satisfactory. Hearken, however, to what the Professor says about the "final cadence"—

> But this masterly and beautiful passage was not thought appropriate to the Church, and was accordingly altered to one more grave and solemn.

And here it is, presented in all its "grave and solemn" form—



The next example in the book is the fifth Prelude and Fugue, which we will pass over, merely stating that Dr. Crotch, or his pupil, thought it "necessary to curtail this movement, and to simplify its final cadence." The Professor adds—almost as if by way of apology—"The Fugue remains unaltered."

The third Prelude and Fugue, that in C sharp major, is the third number in this "work," about which Dr. Crotch, having put on his critical cap, delivers himself as follows—

> The Prelude, in its original state, being full of rapid divisions, composed in triple time, for only two parts, and, in the key of C sharp, with seven sharps, required considerable alterations.

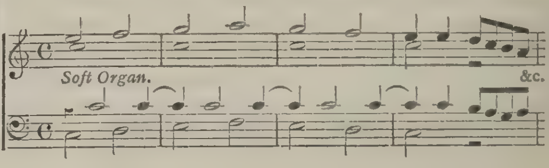
No one will doubt that the alterations are very considerable when he reads the following:—

> The divisions have been supplanted by holding notes, the time changed into common, the number of parts increased, and the whole transposed into the natural key of C.

But, seemingly by way of Professorial apology, Dr. Crotch blandly adds—

> But the harmony is unaltered. The Fugue also is, of course, transposed; but in other respects remains untouched.

Turn, good reader, to your "Forty-eight." Find the third Prelude, and compare it with the following "accommodation" made by Mr. George Drummond and approved by Professor Dr. William Crotch—



The remarks on the two remaining numbers in the book—the Fourth Prelude and Fugue of the "Forty-eight" and the "St. Ann's" Fugue—we must leave. Further comment upon these desecrations of a great classic would be superfluous. But we must again remind our readers that this precious preface is signed—

William Crotch, Mus.D.

The question might well be asked: Is it possible that this gentleman could have been Professor of Music in the University of Oxford?

MEDITATIONS UPON A CATALOGUE OF MUSIC.

"The British Museum always seems to me as if it must be something like heaven," once observed an old lady, now no longer in the flesh, who bore a name well-known in musical circles. It is true that she more particularly referred to the Manuscript Reading-room, which she was in the habit of visiting, and where the company is learned and select and the atmosphere serene. But even here the simile has its limitations, unless, indeed, there are such things as catalogues in the "better world." Excellent institution as the British Museum Library is, shorn of its catalogues it would become a veritable place of torment to enquiring souls. The Museum Library catalogues are, in the main, only to be consulted at Great Russell Street; but the Trustees occasionally publish sections thereof which may be obtained by the public. One such publication devoted to music is now before us. It is a quarto volume of 225 pages, printed in double columns, and entitled:

BRITISH MUSEUM | Catalogue of Music | Recent acquisitions of old music (printed before the year 1800) | By order of the Trustees | London: 1899.

The scope of the book may be estimated from the preface, which reads thus:—

> The present Catalogue forms a supplement to the General Catalogue of Music in the Department of Printed Books, with which it is intended to be incorporated. It contains a small number of cross-references referring to titles already in the main Catalogue, and a very few entries which, for various reasons, it has been found desirable to repeat. With these exceptions this volume consists entirely of music which has been acquired either by purchase or donation since the year 1886. During this period the dispersal of the Borghese and Heredia Libraries has afforded an opportunity of acquiring many works of the greatest rarity, which will be found described in the present volume. Large numbers of part-books of madrigals and motets published in Italy during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries have also been bought, and especial attention has been paid to the collection of Psalmodies, in which the musical section of the Library was formerly deficient.
> The Catalogue has been prepared and revised for press by William Barclay Squire, Esq., Assistant in the Department of Printed Books.
> R. Garnett.
> 11th March, 1899.

The signature of Dr. Garnett appears as the Keeper of the Printed Books, a post he has filled with great distinction and which he has recently resigned after nearly fifty years' service in the Library of the British Museum.

We propose to sample a few of the books whose titles are in this catalogue, selecting those that will probably interest our readers.

The first is a copy of J. S. Bach's "Clavier Uebung," Part II., issued at Nürnberg in 1735. The catalogue states "This copy consists of Proof Sheets, containing many corrections in J. S. Bach's own handwriting." These "handwritings" are real "corrections," and show that Bach was a careful proof reader. The book is most beautifully engraved, and the ink appears to be as black as when it was first placed upon the paper. In turning over the pages of this book there is a special interest in the thought that they have felt the "touch of a vanished hand" of the great Cantor.

A wee bookie, as the Scotch folk would say, is entitled "A Briefe Introduction to the Skill of Song: concerning the practise, set forth by William Bathe, gentleman." This gentlemanly author, who died in 1614, devotes one page of his treatise to the following excellent advice:—

> The ante rules of Song.
> To prepare for naming the Notes.
> Practise to sunder the Vowels and Consonants, distinctly pronouncing them according to the manner of the place.
> To prepare for Quantitie.
> Practise to haue the breath long to continue, and the tongue at libertie to runne.
> To prepare for Time.
> Practise in striking to keepe a just proportion of one stroke to another.
> To prepare for Tune.
> Practise to haue your voice cleere.

The titles of some of the old Psalmodies are often quaint. Here is one;—

> Sacred Music, or a Pleasing Companion for chearful Christians, being an entire new and approved sett of Psalm and Hymn tunes . . . by Samuel Pearce [1776].

This title is not unlike that of a Psalmody issued by Sir George Smart in his young days, designated "Divine Amusement."

Lovers of Programme Music might (or might not) find their heart's desire in a pianoforte piece entitled

> The Surrender of Toulon (with a descriptive view in music of a ship weighing anchor, the storm at sea, &c.) composed by John Watlen, late of the Royal Navy, set for the pianoforte or harpsichord. Edinburgh, printed by the author, 34, North Bridge Street. (n.d.)

The piece begins with a musical representation of "shipping stores from the Yard, at Portsmouth, for Lord Hood's fleet." Subsequent passages are descriptive (!) of "Officer sends below for the fifer" (a descending scale passage of two octaves), "fifer coming up" (an ascending scale passage of two octaves); the "heaving of the anchor," &c., and lead to the strictly meteörological part of the business—that is to say, the inevitable storm. This allegro is introduced by the "Quartermaster at the helm," who is supposed to sing "slowish," "Steady she goes, Boy, steady." The movement opens somewhat tranquilly, but at the sixteenth bar we get "cloudy weather." Then "porpoises appear 'longside the ship." The "atmosphere becomes very dark" and soon (in a presto) the "wind changes"—it "blows hard—storm of wind—lightning—thunder." "Fine weather" ultimately ensues. Toulon is in sight, and the French surrender. "Rule, Britannia," is followed by "God save our King, George the Third," and, by way of a finale, the English and French sailors dance!

A curious book bears the title—

> A new method of learning Psalm-tunes, with an instrument of music call'd the Psalterer. By James Lemon. 1729.

Some idea of this instrument may be obtained from the author's "Directions for tuning and playing on the Psalterer." He says:—

> Before I begin with the directions for tuning and playing, I think it very proper that some account should be given of such particular parts of the instrument as are made use of in playing, in order to make the said directions more plain and intelligible: as first; the small string is to play the treble, and the large string for the bass. Secondly, the little small (sic) pieces of brass-wire or ivory, on both sides the finger-board, just under each string, at about an inch distant one from another, are called frets; the use of which is by stopping or pressing down the string in those places with the finger, to form such particular sounds as in playing any tune are required. Thirdly, the letters of the alphabet, plac'd in the middle of the finger-board, between each string, are intended to answer the letters in the following tunes, by directing to which fret the finger must be placed note after note to play the same.

The capital notation of the tunes in this book may be judged from the following :—

Veni Creator, or the 132 Psalm Tune.

The Treble.	The Bass.

The mere titles of some of the books are amusing. Here is an oblong folio piece of music designated

THE BLACK JOKE with 21 variations for the pianoforte or harpsichord composed by Sig$^{r.}$ M. C[lementi].

In a volume of flute music we find

New Aires made on purpose for two flutes and a bass, familiar and proper for practitioners in consort, fairly engraven.

A dainty little book by reason of its exquisite engraving and the minutiæ of its beautifully executed illustrations, is entitled

The Psalmes of David in 4 Languages and in 4 Parts set to y^{e} Tunes of our Church. By W. S. 1643.

The "W. S." is William Slatyer, and the four languages are English, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew.

The prodigy girl-composer appears in the following title:—

Six sonatas for the pianoforte or harpsichord humbly dedicated to Her Majesty, the Empress of all the Russia's (sic), &c., &c., &c.
Composed by Elizabeth Weichsel, in the eleventh year of her age. Opera 2$^{da.}$ Price 10s. 6d.
London: printed for the author and sold by her No. 7 Poland Street, Oxford Road.

Elizabeth Weichsel became the celebrated Mrs. Billington. She forsook the career of a composer for the more lucrative one of a vocalist. She is spoken of as "the greatest singer England has ever produced," and at one time her fortune is said to have amounted to £65,000. She was, however, less fortunate in her husband. He was a double-bass player, and he played the part of a doubly base man in his conduct towards his cantatrice spouse.

There is a very amusing song, by an anonymous composer, entitled "The Organ laid open, or the True Stop discovered." But Vincent Novello supplies, in his own handwriting, the composer's name and the history of this humorous ditty. Novello writes :—

Satirical Song and Chorus on Joah Bates composed by Samuel Wesley.

The words were written (I believe) by Mr. Madan. This composition of my dear friend, the late Sam Wesley, having now become exceedingly rare, I have the pleasure of presenting it for preservation in the library of the Musical Antiquarian Society, on condition that if the Society should be dissolved this Copy shall be deposited for preservation in the British Museum amongst the other productions of Samuel Wesley that I have already presented to that National establishment, as a token of respect to the memory of my friend.

Oct. 20, 1843. Vincent Novello.

Novello further adds :—

This admirable piece of banter upon Joah Bates is set to music by Sam Wesley, and is an excellent specimen of his incomparable talent in mixing the Sterling Musician with the fun and drollery of the Humorist.

We may further supplement the above information supplied by Novello by stating that Wesley competed for the appointment of organist to the Foundling in 1798. Joah Bates was the umpire on that occasion, and he awarded the post to John Immyns, an amateur. This will help to elucidate the topical references in the song, of which the words here follow :—

The Organ laid Open or
The true Stop discovered.

Come all my brave Boys that want Organists' Places
I'll tell you the fun of the thing,
Curse all your Bravuras, your fine 'Poggiaturas
All the Demis and Semis you'll bring.

You may strike up no matter "Malbrook," "Stoney Batter,"
Or whatever comes into your Pates,
For let Handel or Worgan go thresh at the Organ,
If you've got the right Key with Jo B——.

The Foundling's grand Organ was lately the gift
And all were determin'd to try,
Each made his best shift with a Finger so swift
And "cock sure of Election am I."

But to give 'em their trimmings, up popp'd Maister Immyns
And quickly decided their Fates,
I can't, it is true, move my Fingers like you,
But I've found out the stop of Jo B——.

When Nebuchadnezzar his image set up,
His frolic appeared rather odd,
That at Music so paltry as Sackbut and Psalt'ry
Each Knee should bow down to his god.

This prophetic affair one would almost declare
To our Day of election relates,
For the sounds that combine have but serv'd for a sign
To fall down and worship Jo B——.

Then know by these presents all Men it concerns,
What succession of farces is playing by turns,
In vain ev'ry sound that your fancy creates,
For the true Diapason is Mister Jo B——.

Vincent Novello endorses this comicality with a significant "Bravo! Master Sammy."

Considerations of space prevent a more extended excursion into the pleasant region which this catalogue opens up. At some future time we may return to the subject. The highest praise is due to Mr. W. Barclay Squire (who so efficiently superintends the printed music section of the British Museum Library) for the truly admirable manner in which he has compiled this useful and interesting Catalogue.

THE "Erl-King," by Goethe, has received no less than fifty-nine musical settings, according to Herr Wilhelm Tappert, of Berlin, who has industriously collected and described them in a very interesting little pamphlet. Herr Tappert only gives two settings by English composers—one by the late Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew and the other by Mr. A. R. Gaul. There are doubtless more than these—one other, at least, we can mention. It is a setting by Dr. J. W. Callcott in the form of a glee for three voices—two trebles and a bass. The most curious portion of this composition is to be found in the words. They are by an anonymous "translator," who shows his doggerelistic hand in the following poetry !—

Who is it that rides through the forest so fast,
Whilst night glooms around him, whilst chill roars the blast?
The father who holds his young son in his arm,
And close in his mantle has wrapt him up warm.

"Why trembles my darling? Why shrinks he with fear?"
"My father, my father, the Erl-King is near!
The Erl-King with his crown, and his beard long and white."
"My child, you're deceived by the vapours of night."

"If thou wilt, dear baby, with me go away,
I'll give thee fine garments, we'll play a fine play;
Fine flowers are growing, white, scarlet, and blue,
On the banks of yon river, and all are for you."

"My father, my father, and dost thou not hear,
What words the Erl-King whispers soft in my ear?"
"Oh, hush thee, my child, set thy bosom at ease;
Thou hear'st but the willows when murmurs the breeze."

"If thou wilt, dear baby, with me go away,
My daughter shall nurse thee, so fair and so gay;
My daughter, in purple and gold who is drest,
Shall love thee, and kiss thee, and sing thee to rest."

"My father, my father, and dost thou not see,
The Erl-King and his daughter are waiting for me?"
"Oh shame thee, my infant, 'tis fear makes thee blind, Thou see'st the dark willows which wave in the wind."

"I love thee, I doat on thy features so fine;
I must and will have thee, and force makes thee mine."
"My father, my father, oh hold me now fast,
He pulls me, he hurts me, he'll have me at last."

The father he trembled, he doubled his speed,
O'er hills and through forests he spurr'd his black steed;
But when he arrived at his own castle door,
Life throb'd in the poor baby's bosom no more.

THE "Master Simeon Buggins (a local musical prodigy)," of Birmingham, referred to in our last number (p. 239), subsequently became one of the seven vicars choral of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, and also one of those at Christ Church in the same city. He is said to have been a counter-tenor of rare excellence. Mr. Buggins went to Italy for the purpose of study, and not being quite satisfied with the English form of his patronymic he changed it into "Simeon Pinto Buggine." If he had only lived until the close of the present century he might, in order to be musically fashionable, have Russianised his name somewhat after this fashion: "Simeoninov Pintowitsch Bugginsovsky."

DR. PERCY CARTER BUCK, who has just been "translated," in bishopric phraseology, from the organistship of Wells Cathedral to that of Bristol, is a native of Stratford, which forms part of greater East London, where he was born twenty-eight years ago. He was educated at the Merchant Taylors' School, and sang as a chorister in the choir of West Ham Parish Church. As a boy he showed no special aptitude for music. At the age of twelve his mother taught him his notes and then he taught himself to play. His first organ appointment, obtained when he was fifteen, was to Plaistow Parish Church. He became a student at the Guildhall School of Music, where he took lessons from Dr. C. J. Frost (organ) and Mr. F. Davenport (composition). In two successive years he took four composition prizes at the Stratford Musical Festival—hymn tune and ballad in 1887 and ballad and pianoforte piece in 1888. After being for a short time a paying student at the Royal College of Music, he obtained an organ scholarship there and became a pupil of Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Hubert Parry, and Dr. Harford Lloyd. In the same year (1889) he was organist of Kingston-on-Thames Parish Church. During his Royal College course he won an organ scholarship at Worcester College, Oxford, of which University he is M.A. He took his degree of Bachelor in Music (Oxford) in 1892 and qualified for that of Doctor in the following year; but as an interval of five years has to elapse between the conferment of the Bachelor and Doctor's degrees, he was not admitted to the Doctorate till 1897. Dr. Buck is also a Fellow of the College of Organists and an Associate of the Royal College of Music, and in 1894 he became music-master at Rugby School. On leaving Rugby he was appointed organist of St. John's Church, Wilton Road, Pimlico, noted for the number of organists who have gone thence to Cathedrals.

IN October, 1895, from amongst 148 candidates, Dr. Buck was appointed organist of Wells Cathedral in succession to the late Mr. C. W. Lavington, who held the post for (practically) fifty-three years. He now follows Mr. Riseley at Bristol Cathedral. Dr. Buck's exercises for his respective degrees were settings of "O God, our help in ages past," and "Veni Creator Spiritus." A string quartet, the product of his undergraduate days, was played at Oxford, and "led" by the Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Precentor of Bristol Cathedral. He has also published an Organ Sonata in E flat and some Trios for female voices, and songs. With Dr. Mee and Mr. F. Cunningham Woods he collaborated in the authorship of "Ten years of University Music in Oxford" (1894). The new organist of Bristol Cathedral—who was a capital football player at Oxford and is Captain of the Wells Hockey Club—furnishes a remarkable instance of rapid development in music: ten years after he had begun to learn his notes he passed the examination for Doctor in Music in the University of Oxford. We congratulate Dr. Buck upon his various achievements, and we wish him all success in his new and enlarged sphere of work.

THE Reverend Thomas Henry Davis, who succeeds Dr. Percy Buck as organist of Wells, is a Priest-Vicar of that Cathedral. He graduated Bachelor in Arts, London, in 1887, and took the degree of Bachelor in Music at the same University in 1889, when his exercise was a setting of Psalm xlviii., "Great is the Lord." The new organist of Wells was ordained to the curacy of St. Mary, Warwick, in 1892, which he held till 1895, when he was made a Priest-Vicar of Wells Cathedral. He is also second master of the Cathedral Grammar School at Wells. It has been said that the appointment of a clergyman to the office of organist in a Cathedral is a return to the custom of pre-Reformation times. But this is not so. Hereford, a Cathedral of the old foundation, furnishes an instance to the contrary. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the organists of Hereford were Priest-Vicars, the last being the Rev. Richard Clack, who was appointed in 1754 and held the post till 1779. We believe, however, that we are correct in saying that a Cathedral organistship has not been held by anyone in holy orders since the year 1779.

An "Anglo-Belge Amateur Orchestral Society" has recently been formed in Brussels. The object of the Society is "to bring together amateurs of music, in social gathering, for the execution of orchestral works, classic and modern; also, the production of unedited compositions that may be found suitable." The "social gathering" feature is distinctly "Anglo." The word "unedited" must not be taken too literally: it is doubtless another way of expressing the term "unpublished." One very salutary rule of the Society is: "A fine of one franc to be imposed on any Effective Member who (unless unavoidably prevented) fails to attend two rehearsals running." This might be assumed to mean that the members should run to the rehearsals, but it is probably intended to prevent any effective member from becoming defective. The secretary of the Society is Dr. Fay. We wish it all success.

Àpropos of the biographical sketch in another column of Precentor Dr. Troutbeck, it may not be without interest to refer to the use of the unfamiliar term "Precentrix," the feminine of Precentor, and who is, or was, a female leader of a choir. The Rev. Arthur Bedford, in his book "The Temple Musick; or an essay concerning the method of singing the Psalms of David in the Temple before the Babylonish Captivity, wherein the Musick of our Cathedrals is vindicated, etc." (1706), says: "He . . . . made his sister Præcentrix to the Women." More than a century later Sir Walter Scott, in his "The Betrothed" (Chapter xvii.), says: "The venerable mother might be seen in unwonted bustle, now giving orders to the gardener for decking the apartment with flowers—now to her cellaress, her precentrix, and the lay sisters of the kitchen for preparing a splendid banquet." Has the term "Precentrix" become obsolete?

A very remarkable, if not unique, series of Sunday concerts is announced to take place at the New Brighton Tower, commencing on the 28th inst., under the general direction of Mr. Granville Bantock. Fifteen of the eighteen concerts are to consist of "one composer" programmes—the names of the said composers being *Cowen, Dvorák, Rubinstein, *Stanford, Berlioz, *Parry, *Elgar, *Corder, *William Wallace, Tschaïkowsky, *German, *Mathieu (from Ghent), *Mackenzie, Liszt, and Wagner—those composers marked * will conduct their own works. "French," "British," and "Belgian" concerts complete the scheme. In addition to those above named, the conductors will include Mr. A. E. Rodewald, M. Camille Chevillard (of the Lamoureux concerts), M. Edouard Colonne, M. Sylvain Dupuis (of the Nouveaux concerts, Liège), and Mr. Granville Bantock himself, who is to be congratulated upon the inception of so comprehensive and interesting a series of music-makings.

We have received the following letter from an organist in the North of London:—

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—I regret to say that some individual came into the choir vestry just when we were about to commence and stated that he had come to report on the concert in the interest of The Musical Times, since when a grey overcoat has been missing.

I think it only right to mention this incident to you as no doubt the same thing has occurred elsewhere, and a warning note in your paper may prevent future occurrences of a like description if same is notified in your paper.

We need hardly say that we much regret the occurrence above referred to and which, unfortunately, has happened before. At the same time, we wish to caution those whom it may concern that strangers who profess to represent The Musical Times should be asked for their credentials.

Another jewel was added to the artistic crown of Joseph Joachim in the magnificent reception accorded to him by the Berlin Philharmonic, on Saturday, the 22nd ult., the occasion of the sixtieth anniversary of his first appearance in public. A very large orchestra, comprising a number of the master's most distinguished pupils and picked members of the orchestras of the Prussian Royal Opera, the Grand Ducal Opera of Meiningen, the Berlin Philharmonic, and the Berlin Royal School of Music, made a magnificent combination. A fanfare by military trumpeters and kettle-drummers was played as the hero of the evening was conducted to his seat, and a prologue in verse, written for the occasion by Hermann Grimm, was recited by Fräulein Rosa Poppe, of the Berlin Theatre Royal. The programme, which followed, included the Overture to Weber's "Euryanthe"; Variations for violin and orchestra, Joseph Joachim; Overture to Schumann's "Genoveva"; Overture to Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; Symphony in C minor, Brahms; and Concerto in G major, Bach. Each item of the programme was received with vociferous applause, in which the principal guest enthusiastically joined; but the crowning event of the evening was when Dr. Joachim, at the unexpected invitation of some members of the orchestra, was asked to play Beethoven's Violin Concerto, which, although, as he stated publicly, quite unprepared, he performed superbly. At its conclusion an immense ovation was awarded to the master. A banquet was subsequently given, at which it was announced by a representative of the Government that the Emperor had bestowed on Dr. Joachim the highest distinction of the State in science and art—the Order "Pour le Mérite." Thus was a unique occasion fittingly and royally concluded.

The Printer's Devil has often posed as an unconscious humorist, but comparatively seldom as an unwitting cynic. We are inclined, however, to regard his performance in a recent issue of the Northern Echo as evidence of an unsuspected vein of satire. In an account of some obsequies at Bishop Auckland we are told that "as the mournful procession entered the church Schopenhauer's Funeral March was played by the organist." Schopenhauer, as a pessimistic philosopher, might be thought an appropriate name to associate with a funeral march, but we see in the passage quoted a more subtle satire. "Schopen" is evidently a new method of transliterating the name of Chopin, who, as is well known, did write a funeral march, while "Hauer," meaning one who hacks, makes the significance of the whole plain. Have we not those who hack at Chopin continually with us?

Graun's "Passion" is, in this country, usually but erroneously associated with his "Der Tod Jesu." An interesting selection, consisting of five numbers, from the actual "Grosse Passions Musik" by Graun was performed for the first time in England during Lent, at St. Andrew's, Wells Street. One of the choruses in this work was appropriated by Handel for his oratorio "The Triumph of Time and Truth." In Graun's "Passion" the words are "Let us run the race that is set before us," but Handel "adapted" the same music to very different words—"Ere to dust is changed thy beauty."

Manuel Garcia, now in his ninety-fifth year, was a conspicuous figure at the Philharmonic concert on the 19th ult., although others than young nonogenarians might have considered it a somewhat treacherous night to be out when cold winds were blowing. Notwithstanding his great age, this doyen of the profession was evidently listening to the music with a vigorously keen interest, and was applauding with all the enthusiasm, perhaps more, of a young man three-quarters-of-a-century his junior. M. Garcia was eight years old when the "dear old Philharmonic" came into life. At the time of his birth—on March 17, 1805—Haydn was living, Beethoven was a comparatively young man of thirty-five, and Mendelssohn, Wagner, and Brahms had yet to make their acquaintance with the world. If M. Garcia would only record his reminiscences, how interesting and valuable they would be. May he be spared to attend many more concerts, and in our issue for March, 1905, may we have the pleasure of wishing him "Many happy returns of the century"!

M. Rachmaninov, whose name is so well known as the composer of the Prelude for the pianoforte in C sharp minor, paid his first visit to this country during the past month. We are indebted to Mr. Edgar F. Jacques for the following biographical particulars relating to our most recent distinguished visitor:—

> Sergei Wasseliewitsch Rachmaninov was born in 1873 at Novgorod, and studied at the Moscow Conservatoire under Arensky and Siloti. His talent was so great that in his eighteenth year he was awarded the great gold medal. His works include a pianoforte concerto, a fantasia for two pianofortes, and a number of smaller pieces. Their merits, coupled with the fact that the composer is not yet twenty-five years of age, have justified critics in regarding him as one of the most gifted and important of Russian composers.

To the above must be added the fine Trio in D minor (Op. 9) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, and (in the second movement) with harmonium obbligato, played at one of the Walenn concerts on February 22. A new and very practical edition of M. Rachmaninov's celebrated Prelude, especially in regard to the all-important use of the pedal, has recently been issued by Messrs. Novello, and it is satisfactory to learn that the composer has expressed his approval of the manner in which the editor, Mr. A. Rosenkranz, has discharged his task.

The marriage of Miss Mary Louisa Lloyd, the only daughter of Mr. Edward Lloyd, with Mr. Frederick W. Sears, was celebrated at St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, on the 19th ult. The music sung on that interesting occasion included Sir Joseph Barnby's setting of Miss Dorothy Blomfield's hymn "O perfect love" and Sir Arthur Sullivan's anthem "O God, Thou art worthy to be praised," which were admirably rendered by the choir of the church, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, who presided at the organ. More than one member of the congregation could not help recalling the time when they used to hear Mr. Edward Lloyd sing in the choir of this church, thirty or more years ago. Subsequent to the nuptial ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd were "at home" at the Langham Hotel, to receive their numerous friends, who expressed their congratulations and good wishes for the happiness of the young couple. The wedding presents were numerous and costly.

Sir John Stainer's "Dufay and his Contemporaries"—edited by the Oxford Professor in collaboration with his son—has received a very gratifying recognition in the form of an appreciative review in a recent number of the Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte, edited by Herr Robert Eitner. The notice concludes thus:—

> The enormous importance of the publication of such a comprehensive MS. of so early, and, until now, so dark a period, in regard to research in the history of music, will be best grasped by those who have already made explorations in this epoch, and the two editors are assured of our sincerest thanks.

Herr Robert Eitner, the distinguished editor of the Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte, intends to issue a "Quellen-Lexikon," or, in other words, a dictionary and bibliography from the Christian era down to the middle of the present century. The work, which is now complete in manuscript, could not have been undertaken by anyone more competent to bring it to a successful issue than Herr Eitner. Much trustworthy information has been obtained from the various libraries in Europe and from other sources, and it may be taken for granted that "thoroughness" will be stamped upon every page. The work is to be issued, probably in eight volumes, by subscription. Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel are the publishers.

Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, whose name is well known in connection with his valuable researches in the field of Folk-song, is about to issue what promises to be a very interesting work, entitled "British Music Publishers and the early music typographers: London, Scottish, and Dublin. From Queen Elizabeth's reign to the first quarter of the present century." The volume, upon which the author has been engaged for many years, will be in Dictionary form and promises to be a very useful and valuable book of reference. We trust that Mr. Kidson will extend the period of his survey so as to cover at least the second quarter of the present century.

Mr. Frederic Lamond, the distinguished Scotch pianist, has been winning golden opinions in Paris by reason of his masterly performances in the French capital, where he has been received with enthusiastic appreciation.

Dr. Harford Lloyd, Precentor of Eton, will form the subject of the biographical sketch (with special portrait) in our next issue. We also hope to give some "Wesleyana," being some recollections of Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley, kindly contributed by one of his distinguished pupils, Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Cathedral.

DR. ZECHARIAH BUCK.*

"A genius in the training of boys' voices" summarizes the life-work of Dr. Buck, of Norwich. The son of a poor tradesman, Zechariah Buck was born in that East Anglian city on September 9, 1798. With other boys of his class he used to shout and play in the then "Castle ditches," and the tradition is that on one memorable day (for him) Thomas Garland, organist of the Cathedral, heard the boy singing in the street. Garland was greatly struck with the sweetness of his voice, and the result of Master Buck's out-door vociferation was that he became a chorister of Norwich Cathedral on September 10, 1807. In this unexpected way began his seventy years' connection with that stately sanctuary. The mere incidents of Dr. Buck's long life, practically passed within his native city, may be soon told. He served his choristership principally under the two Beckwiths, father and son, Garland having died soon after the little street-singer's admittance. When his voice broke he was articled to John Charles Beckwith (son of Dr. John Christmas Beckwith), and became assistant-organist of Norwich Cathedral. Four days before the death of his master, young Buck, at the age of twenty-one, succeeded him as organist on October 15, 1819. He resigned that post —held for fifty-eight years—on a pension of £125 per annum in September, 1877, and on August 5, 1879, he died at his son's house at Newport, Essex. In the year 1853 he was made a Doctor in Music by Archbishop Sumner.

Dr. Buck was a man possessed of a strongly marked personality. He was exceedingly enthusiastic. One of his first resolves, after he had become organist of Norwich, was "to make a tour of most of the Cathedrals in England at his own expense, in order to have the opportunity of hearing other choirs, and so acquire knowledge and experience which he knew would prove invaluable." When we consider that there were no railways at that time, the zealous enthusiasm of the young organist reveals itself in a strong light. He had no reputation as an organist. His upbringing, on an inadequate G organ, was unfavourable to any development in technical skill on the king of instruments, even if he had had any inclination in that direction. For a long period anterior to his retirement Dr. Buck was never even known to play the organ, that duty having been principally discharged for twenty-two years by his assistant and partner, Dr. Bunnett. The choristers, as we shall see, were his "soul's delight," and instead of occupying the organ-loft in the Cathedral, his "accustomed place was beneath the gallery-screen," where he could best hear the voices of the choir.

In many respects Dr. Buck was "a character." He was always attired in "evening dress," with the orthodox "white tie," even in the day-time. Like S. S. Wesley, he wore a wig, which adornment, when he took "his walks abroad," was surmounted with a broad-brimmed hat, "remarkably like a Dean's," as Dean Pellew once remarked to him upon his taking up in mistake Dr. Buck's head-covering. He was a very early riser: in his young days "he was generally up at 4 a.m. studying thorough bass"; and later on he was always to be found taking his morning constitutional at the hour of 7 a.m. We are told that he was "a born match-maker," and that he had a remarkable facility "for soothing the way with stern relatives." In regard to the important matter of health, we are told that

> He was almost hypochondriacal respecting his digestion, which really was perfect, but no physician could persuade him as to that fact, although he consulted every doctor of note, including Sir S. Burrows, and his friend Sir James Paget, still happily living. One day he took a journey to Leamington to consult the famous Dr. Jephson, who had made stomach disorders a specialty, and after various questions Dr. Jephson asked:
> "What time do you dine, Dr. Buck?"
> "Oh! sometimes one, or two, or three, or five, or six o'clock—in fact, whenever I can."
>
> Dr. Jephson closed his case book with a bang, and said: "My dear sir, it is of no use prescribing for you, unless you always dine at the same hour."
> "But," cried the Doctor, anxiously, "I will dine at any hour you like to name, I assure you."

The result of this visit was that Dr. Buck thereafter dined precisely at six p.m., and so stringently did he carry out the doctor's orders in regard to his diet that he insisted upon partaking of "tapioca pudding" every day. No wonder that his family loathed the sight of that particular dish. Dr. Buck was a firm believer in drugs, and, considering the various prescriptions he took, his friends marvelled that he lived to attain the age of fourscore years. "The amount of calomel (a fashionable drug in the early part of the century) which he swallowed, was sufficient to sink a Norfolk wherry"! He was good at telling a story. Here is one: "A family of the name of Waters were always late for the Cathedral service. On a particular Sunday [that would be the thirteenth evening of the month] they all entered just as the choir were beginning to sing the Psalm 'Save me, O God: for the waters are come in.'"

Dr. Buck had no less than seventy-two articled pupils. Of these five graduated as Doctors in Music, three obtained the degree of Bachelor in Music, and four became cathedral organists. Amongst those now living may be mentioned the names of Dr. Bunnett, Mr. F. Cambridge, Mr. George Gaffe (St. Alban's Cathedral), Mr. A. R. Gaul, Dr. A. H. Mann (King's College, Cambridge), and Mr. A. J. Page, several of whom contribute some very pleasant and valuable reminiscences of their old master to the pages of this book. These "Buckites," as they were called, used to play the organ at various churches in Norwich, of which Dr. Buck was nominally the organist and received the emoluments attached thereto, while the "Buckites" did the work.

In his extraordinary training of boys' voices, by which he will be chiefly remembered as a Cathedral musician, Dr. Buck used some curious methods. For example:

> In order that the boys should open their mouths, he resorted to the use of beans, marbles, nuts, acorns, coffee-berries, &c., the nuts proving a decided failure, as the boys were always cracking them. At length the excellent idea occurred to the ingenious Doctor to experiment with a neat wooden mouthpiece, in the exact shape of the mouth, and to fit in with the teeth. These mouthpieces resembled, both in size and form, the segment of an orange; they were hollow, and the exterior surfaces had grooves for the teeth. The mouthpieces, which answered the purpose admirably, were made of boxwood by B. W. Spaull, an ecclesiastical builder in the Cathedral Close, and were sold at sixpence each; some of the Doctor's private pupils had theirs reproduced in silver. These contrivances, with penny looking-glasses, were handed round to the boys at their morning practice for the exercise work, which was superintended by Buck himself, or, in his absence, by one of his Articled Pupils. An important matter was the "tongue exercise," which was gone through regularly before any other work was taken up; while other very troublesome exercises were the vocal "shake" and "scale" practice, the latter so well described by Mr. George Gaffe as a kind of "vocal treadmill."

Although the redoubtable Doctor was very exacting and a martinet in his treatment of the boys—their voices apparently being his chief consideration—Dr. Mann records that—

> Dr. Buck, in his training, was exceedingly particular regarding two important points. Firstly, he would never allow us to actually sing, except for a very short time indeed—not more than ten minutes; he might keep us at a practice for over two hours (a common occurrence), but he would only let us sing for a brief interval, and then rest. Secondly, he would never permit us to force our voices under any consideration whatever, while tone, words, and expression were very carefully watched.

The boys were worked unmercifully hard and their general education was shockingly neglected. Mr. Gaul records that during the thirteen years he was a chorister at Norwich he did not have a month's holiday, all told, during the whole time. The work was a perpetual "grind," as may be shown by the following time-table:—

9 to 9.45 am. Music.
10 to 11 a.m. Full Choral Service.
11 a.m. to 12.30 or 1 p.m. Music.
2 to 3 45 p.m. Music.
4 to 5 p m. Full Choral Service.
5 to 6.30 or 7 p.m. Work with the schoolmaster!

Dr. Buck adopted some novel contrivances in getting his boys to fully realise the meaning of words they had to sing, in order to obtain the utmost expression in the music. For example, in rehearsing Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer"—"without Thee all is dark"—he placed the soloist in a large music cupboard, and, closing the door, said, triumphantly: "Now, my boy, can you realise better the darkness?" Whereupon the young urchin unexpectedly replied: "Please sir, no sir; there's a crack in the door!" To another boy, in the preparation of the same anthem, he said: "Now, boy, in 'O for the wings of a dove, far away would I roam,' just imagine you are a bird flying away from all gloominess to a place where there is sunshine, and everything is calm and peaceful. Sing the words lightly and trippingly, and when you come to the final rendering of 'and remain there for ever at rest,' make a diminuendo and finish pianissimo, as though you were gradually going off to sleep." It is evident that Dr. Buck possessed a poetic spirit which is all too rare amongst organists, who are so often tied and bound by the technicalities of their art that they fail to get behind the mere crotchets and quavers of the music of the sanctuary, and do not therefore realise its hidden depth of soul.

Mr. A. R. Gaul tells an amusing story of Dr. Buck's views in regard to the diet of the Norwich choristers. He says:—

> I can fully corroborate the statement that Dr. Buck was exceedingly particular regarding the diet of those boys whose voices were eminently serviceable in solo-singing. I recall an instance of this in my own experience. A Norfolk clergyman (well-known in musical circles of that day) desired to favour a party of friends at his own house with a rendering of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and he asked Dr. Buck if he would lend him a boy to assist in the solos. The wish was complied with, and I was the boy selected for the occasion, àpropos of which I vividly remember, as though it happened yesterday, an incident which covered me with confusion. The dinner came before the music, and the guests had taken their seats, a place being found for me at a small side-table; presently, while the first course was being served, a note arrived for the host, who, observing its nature, proclaimed his intention of reading it aloud to those assembled around the festive board, and, amid breathless silence, he announced the contents of the brief missive, which ran thus:
> "Dear Sir,—Please don't let little Gaul have any pudding.
> Yours faithfully,
> Z. Buck."

Poor "little Gaul." But that was not all. The composer of the "Holy City" further records a less pleasant feature of his choristership:—

> Before the time came for singing my solos [in the Cathedral], I used to drink the contents of a small phial filled with port wine provided by Doctor Buck, and this I swallowed after the second lesson, stooping below the desk so as not to be seen by the congregation.

This, as Mr. Gaul rightly observes, was a "reprehensible custom." Could the clergy have known of it?

Mr. Frederic G. Kitton, the author and editor of this "centenary memoir" of Dr. Buck (and who is favourably known in connection with the pictorial literature concerning Charles Dickens), has produced an exceedingly interesting and very readable book. We notice that he refers to "Mendelssohn's organ concertos" (instead of sonatas) on p. 28, and that there is no index; but these are small blemishes compared with the general excellence of this brightly-written monograph. Ten beautifully reproduced illustrations add to the attractiveness of the book, which is admirably printed and got up. The history of Cathedral music and musicians in England has yet to be written. In the meantime this memoir of Dr. Buck, of Norwich, is a very valuable contribution to the literature of a subject which should have special interest to English musicians.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Easter, the Queen of the Festivals of the Church, is specially rich in the possession of appropriate music. In the selection of Communion Services, it is interesting to notice the abiding popularity of several of Schubert's shorter settings, such as the Masses in G (recently sung at St. Paul's Cathedral) and in B flat; and to observe the wide recognition of Gounod's Masses in both Latin and English branches of the Church universal.

Gounod's "Easter" Mass was sung at All Saints', Margaret Street, during the Festival season. On Easter Day at the Oratory, South Kensington, the great chorus in C, from "The Redemption," with orchestra, and additional trumpets stationed in the clerestory gallery lending dramatic force to the stately music, formed the offertory. The Mass, sung with orchestra and organ, was that by Mr. E. Silas in C.
